VIGOR OF YOUTH IN

A NEW DISCOVERY

Science Produces a Vitalizer Superior to Famous Gland Treatment—Magic Power of a Bark From Africa.

Have you lost your youth, vigor and "pep"? Does life seem dull and work a grind? Don't worry. Science has discovered a new vitalizer superior even to the much discussed "goat gland" and "monkey gland" treatment.

The principal ingredient is an extract from the bark of an African tree. It is said to be the most amazing invigorator ever discovered. Combined with it are other tonic and vitalizing elements of proved merit. In most cases, the compound produces marked improvement in a day or two, and in a short time the vitality is raised, the circulation improved and the glow of health is felt in every part.

The new vitalizer contains expensive chemicals, but manufacturing in enormous quantities has brought the cost within the reach of all. Furthermore, the laboratories producing this new vitalizer, which is called Re-Nu-Tabs, are so confident of its power that they offer it on the basis of "no results, no pay."

Any reader of this paper may test the new discovery without risk. Send no money, but just your name and address, to the Re-Nu Laboratories, 227C Gateway Station, Kansas City, Mo., and a full treatment of Re-Nu-Tabs will be mailed. Deposit $2 and postage with the postman on delivery. If not delighted by the results at the end of a week, notify the laboratories and your money will be refunded in full. Do not hesitate about accepting this test offer, as it is fully guaranteed.—Advertisement.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A MODERN MIRACLE.

We commend to those who profess to find difficulty in accepting as authentic the records of miracles in other days, a perusal of the daily newspapers for undisputed accounts of marvelous things that are happening to-day. For example: "When Mrs. S. Thornton, of Purcell, Okla., awoke on a Santa Fe train near here last night, she missed her four-year-old daughter. The child could not be found on the train. Section hands found the little girl asleep under a bridge this morning. She had suffered only a broken ankle and a few minor bruises, although the train was running fifty miles an hour." The thoughtless will say that it was "good luck;" the mother, we dare say, thanks God for his providence. We may not always know the why of miracles, but we can accept the fact without question, for they are happening every day.

MODERN BUSINESS.

A recent investigation of the dairying business in New Orleans shows, according to the chief food inspector for the Department of Health, that the people of this city pay about $1000 a day for water sold in the guise of milk. At first blush, we are tempted to apply the harshest terms we can think of to those who are so utterly lost to every sentiment of decency in business as to be willing to adulterate the milk that little children have to drink, in order that they may gain a few pennies by the fraud; but when we remember that most of these dairymen are probably ignorant men and women whose opportunities in life have been very limited; and when we remember that some of the men who stand high in business and social circles have been accused of the baldest kind of profiteering in large business transactions and yet have maintained their respectability; and when we remember that right here in New Orleans some of the great breweries, owned by supposedly reputable capitalists, were detected in a flagrant violation of the law and were allowed to compromise their cases, so it was reported, by the payment of large fines; and when we remember that at least one of these breweries has since been charged with even a more flagrant violation of a court injunction (about which the newspapers have become strangely silent)—when we remember all these things and others like them, we are disposed to refrain from characterizing these adulterators of milk as they deserve to be characterized, and pour out our wrath upon a people who will still hold in honor those who have made a fortune by dishonesty while they hurl execrations at the humbler ones who fraudulently acquire a few paltry dollars. We thank God that there are many honest men in business; but if we may judge at all by the signs around us, not very much can be said in favor of the system of ethics of modern business.

WHY A PIG IS A PIG.

Somebody has made the remark that if a pig had any sense, he would not be a pig. While in a general way that statement may be true, we are inclined to believe that there would be enough exceptions to it to furnish ground for a pretty good argument to the contrary. Certain it is that some pigs would choose to remain pigs even if they had as much sense as Aristotle. It is so much the nature of a pig to grunt, root around in the rubbish, and wallow in the mire that endowment with the superlative gifts of intellect would not be sufficient to turn the pig that was a pig at heart into anything else. It is an old story that a donkey is still a donkey, although he is covered with the skin of the king of beasts, and it is impossible for him to conceal for very long his identity—his bray will betray him. It is likewise true that some men can never acquire enough sense to make them other than what they really are—merely animals in human form. That is no reason, however, why we should tear down our schools, burn up our books, and send our teachers out to become hewers of wood and drawers of water. In spite of the fact that some men suffer ossification of the cerebral tissues at a very early age, others learn as long as they live. It would not be so bad to be a pig if there were no necessity of remaining a pig.

QUITE SO.

The election of William Howard Taft, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, as president of the Unitarian General Conference at its recent meeting in Detroit, may give a kind of prestige to Unitarianism that will make it attractive to some people; but we do not imagine that the Unitarian Church will be any more likely to meet the religious needs of people who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness. We confess we hardly know what the Unitarians are driving at in their religious activities since we have read the remarks attributed to the Rev. William M. Taylor at the session of the Conference just closed. Among other things, he said:

"Men and women everywhere are crying for deliverance from the stress and strain of analytic differentiation, specialization and particularization and the demand for technical efficiency which are resulting in fragmentariness of thinking, frigidity of emotion, emasculation of will, detachment of affections, split in consciousness, irritation of temperament, multiplicity of personality, inward conflict between motives, strife among peoples and war between nations; or from the humdrum and monotony of repetition which lead on to a sense of inferiority, somnambulism, illusion, delusion, hallucination and insanity of body and mind; else to apathy towards reality resulting in stagnation and death." Without having any very clear idea of what he is talking about, we venture to say, "Quite so, quite so." We do not expect, however, to hear of the transmutation of vast multitudes of men and women who are "crying for deliverance from the stress and strain of analytic differentiation," etc., by the elucidation of such transcendental theories concerning the sociological tendencies and appetences of the human race.

THE PROBLEM OF UNEMPLOYMENT.

Sad as it may seem, it is a fact nevertheless that thousands of men in this country are unable to secure employment and are unable, therefore, to earn a livelihood. Various conferences, from municipal to national, have been called to deal with the situation, and doubtless some valuable suggestions will grow out of these gatherings. In our opinion, however, the problem will not be solved until the laborers themselves show that they are willing to work when work is available. As a last resort, a strike may be an allowable means of securing justice, but when labor unions make use of the strike to enforce demands that are beyond reason they create a problem that nobody but themselves can settle.

KEEP WHAT IS WORTH HAVING.

An amusing story is going the rounds of the Georgia officer who went to Colorado for a prisoner, started back with him, but went to sleep in his seat on the train and allowed him to escape. But there is more than humor in the story—it is brimful of tragedy. Many a man has gone a long way on the journey of life, has gained the things that brought him self-satisfaction and the respect and confidence of his fellow-men, and then, in an unguarded moment, has lost all that his life has been spent for. It is one thing to get—and another one altogether to hold. Some who succeed at the one, fail miserably at the other.

A JOURNEY TO THE ORIENT.

By Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker, D.D.

Across the Pacific.

II.

It seems to me that I have been accustomed to the phrase, "All was bustle and confusion" as a description of conditions attending embarkation for a trans-oceanic voyage. Nothing could have been less true as the Pacific Mail steamer, "Empire State," lay at pier 46, within a half hour of her departure for Hong Kong via Honolulu, Yokohama, Kobe, Shanghai and Manila. On the contrary, all was order and system. The great derricks were lifting the last packages of freight and the last sacks of mail; trunks and bags were being wheeled over the gangways; a polite revenue officer stood at the passengers' gangway and demanded your permit to sail, which had to be delivered before you were permitted on board; the tug stood by ready to tow the great steamer out of the dock, and at twelve-thirty, Saturday, July 30, the hawsers were slipped and silently, without a vibration, the great ship floated out into the Bay and began her maiden voyage, maiden, save that she had steamed from Baltimore through the Panama Canal. The "Empire State" is five hundred and thirty-five feet long, of seventy-two feet beam, fifty feet deep, with a displacement of twenty-one thousand tons, burns oil and has twin turbines developing twelve thousand horse power. The passenger accommodations are sumptuous and the service unexceptionable. The officers measure up to the best traditions of the sea and were at pains to assure the passengers every comfort and every social and recreational opportunity possible. The deck crew and the cabin and dining room servants are Chinese, who are so competent and alert to serve that one is compelled to admire the remarkable people whom they represent. They do not speak much English, but they don't seem to need to, as they understand intuitively what you want and are quick to supply it. Just as we were about to cast off I saw a lady talking excitedly about a hat box that she had lost, and a Chinese cabin boy said, "I find." I do not know how his quest resulted, but he spoke with conviction that did not admit of the possibility of failure.

Dr. Nelson and I were assigned to seats at the table presided over by Dr. A. W. Riekey, of San Francisco, the ship's surgeon, whose courtesy and interest failed not for one moment during the entire voyage. Eating seems to bulk large on an ocean voyage. For one who wants it, there is early coffee and toast; then breakfast at eight; fruit passed on deck and in the salons at 10; bouillon at 11; dinner at 1; tea, which is the event of the afternoon, at 4; dinner at 6:30, and supper served in the salons at 10. Of this last I partook but once, when it was a special Chinese meal served as a treat by the dining room force, eaten to the accompaniment of Chinese music and with chopsticks. The ship is not apparently under the Volstead Act, although it would seem that anything flying the American flag is under American law, but no wine was served at regular meals and there was scarcely any of it drunk. American ideals of temperance have evidently permeated American society and within a decade or two wrought a revolution in the attitude of the average American toward the practice of drinking. Smokers found ample and aesthetic accommodations in the smoking salon and on the decks, but were forbidden the use of their weed in the dining room—a pity that the rudeness of smoking in restaurants and other public places has to be forbidden for the protection of those to whom it is a nuisance, particularly ladies. But I am told that the practice of smoking cigarettes is becoming alarmingly prevalent among women. Perhaps so. In the company of passengers there was one lady who was frequently seen with a cigarette between her lips, smoking it with all the inspirational art of the habitue and with a somewhat obtrusive air—the only one of her sex in the company so addicted.

Within a few days life on shipboard became organized. On Sunday following sailing, Dr. John N. Mills, of Washington City, conducted public service and delivered an address on Foreign Missions and International Relations. Dr. Mills is a Presbyterian minister who, on account of health, gave up the pastorate some years ago and has devoted himself to travel and the study of missions at his own expense and at home to the advocacy of the cause. The following Sunday the service fell to me, and the last Sunday we were together Dr. A. A. Fulton, a veteran missionary of the Presbyterian Board, residing and working at Canton, held the service and delivered an illuminating lecture on China. Deck sports of various kinds were organized, including many things from shuffle board to artistic diving in the swimming pool that had been erected on one of the rear hatches. Moving pictures had been provided and on several evenings were shown under the direction of the ever courteous chief steward, Mr. James Sager. That the first one was composed of scenes from the relief work of the Catholic War Work Council was due to the fact that Mr. Sager is a devout member of the Catholic Church. Catholic prayer books lay on the seats for the use of worshipers during the Sunday services, but were not opened save by the curious. I wished for one of Dr. Clark's picture lectures of the Methodist Centenary or the Educational Campaign, but had not been forethoughtful enough to bring it. Saturday night, a day and a night out from Yokohama, was given the Captain's complimentary dinner, at which everybody had been requested to appear in fancy costume. A few sober-sides, including this correspondent, did not heed the request, not even appearing in full dress, as did some others who shunned the mask and the fancy dress—and that for obvious reasons. Why diners should rise from time to time in couples during the meal and embrace each other and awkwardly step about between the tables to the rhythm of the music I could not see. As a dance on deck under beautiful lights and amidst handsome decorations was immediately to follow, one would have supposed that they could have waited; but no, such is the impetuosity of youth and the lure of music and the intimacy of the dance as it is now practiced that patience is not accounted a virtue. Or was it to create the semblance of a cabaret? I hope not. I do not think the modern dance, at least in the extreme forms in which it is usually practiced, is decent. And while I am indulging in a little prudery, may I say that a one-piece bathing suit without hose, sleeveless and legless, in which the ladies contested for the swimming prizes and which has become the fashion at the beaches out West, is not decent? At best it destroys the beautiful modesty of women and coarsens the ideals of men. That is what I think, though in the minority I fear.

Despite the flies in the ointment, the social life on ship was very pleasant and for the most part profitable. There were several missionaries and others interested in missions in the company; merchants and diplomats and travelers and teachers, a high average company. I wonder whether I might take your time to mention a few of the acquaintances I made? It is possible that they might interest your readers, not of course as if they could be personally present, but as reflected in my interest. Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Speers, of New York City, were on a tour of the Orient, intending to return to America by way of the Suez Canal and Europe. Mr. Speers is a member of the Board of Missions of the Northern Presbyterian Church, and has been for some years, until recently, Treasurer of the Student Volunteer Movement. I had known him only by name as I was accustomed to make small annual contribution to the Movement payable to his order. He was one of the strong supporters of the Interchurch World Movement and seems sincerely to sorrow over the collapse of that great attempt to unite Protestant Christians of all denominations in a program of world evangelization. Incidentally, he is the President of McCutcheon & Co., of New York, in order to pay expenses and perpetuate the traditions of that old and honorable linen house. Mr. and Mrs. Speers have three sons on the mission field and one in the ministry at home. Dr. Charles H. Lindley, of New York, is a most interesting man. He is the son of a celebrated missionary to South Africa, contemporary of Livingstone and Moffat; was a soldier in the Colonial army during the Boer war and has practiced medicine with distinction. His reminiscences and mature views upon many subjects are very informing. Mr. John Hays Hammond, an engineer and capitalist, had been an international question during the Boer war on account of some relation to the Jamieson raid, in which he was implicated, for which the Transvaal government condemned him to death. A prompt note from the Department of State under Grover Cleveland, informing the President of the Transvaal that any harm done Mr. Hammond would be considered a cause of war, changed the decision of Kruger. Mrs. Hammond is a native of Vicksburg, Miss., and was therefore specially interesting to me. These names may be of little interest to your readers, but I assure you they stand in my mind for interesting personalities.

On the afternoon of Thursday, the fifth day out, we were in sight of Molokai, one of the Sandwich Islands, as they were called before the Annexation, and a little later on the left—port, as they would say aboard ship—rose the cliffs and mountains of Oahu, the largest of the group of islands, upon the south side of which are the city and harbor of Honolulu. Launches put out from the quays bearing pilot, revenue and quarantine officers, who came on board, but as it was past 6:30 in the evening, according to quarantine regulations, our good ship lay at anchor outside the breakwater all night, much to the disappointment of several passengers who had invitations by radio to dine ashore. Sight-seeing was the order immediately after breakfast the following morning, facilities for which were available in the shape of automobiles with shouting drivers lining the curb just outside the dock warehouses. The party of five, of which Dr. Nelson and I were members, secured the service of a chauffeur who proved to be a first-class guide. Over the perfect macadam roads and up the easy grades we sped to a high point known as the Pali, where the road rounds the shoulder of a mountain and looks down over a sheer drop of fourteen hundred feet to a scene of luxuriant beauty that makes good every promise from the days of our school geographies to the present. So realistic are the pictures by which our conceptions of Hawaii have been formed that the scenery seemed almost familiar. But nothing can adequately describe the wealth of flora and the inexhaustible variety that one sees in these volcanic isles. Upon the face of the mountain where the road turns is a bronze tablet commemorating a battle as the result of which the dynasty that reigned at the time of annexation was established upon the throne. The gentle conquerors threw their enemies over the cliff to the depths below. It is probable that in their precipitate way down they had opportunity to consider the advantage of that mode of exit in comparison with being eaten by their triumphant enemies.

The beach, Diamond Point, where there are heavy guns that fire by scientific calculation from positions out of sight; the military post; the magnificent hotels, the outrigger canoes and the swarm of Hawaiian boys who remained beside the ship for an hour diving for pennies, and seeming never to miss one; the motley foreign population and the other interesting things that we glanced at as we passed, must be reserved for more careful inspection and ampler space for recording. It is good that our country has extended her outposts into the mid-Pacific in these southern latitudes as well as into touch with Asia in the north Pacific; nor can one venture to say when the fruits of Dewey's victory in Manila Bay may not become of immense importance in the politics of the Pacific. Conversing with several Filipinos on the ship concerning the aspirations of the Philippines for independence, I asked: "Do you not fear that some other great power, say Japan, would annex your country?" The invariable reply was, "But we want independence with the protection of the United States." It seems to me that, while the largest possible measure of local self-government should be accorded the Philippines, America cannot demit her duty to herself, the Pacific powers and the Islands themselves by giving them national independence.

On Wednesday, August 10, we crossed the international date line and eliminated that day from our calendars. We had been gaining on the sun in his westward flight at the rate of half an hour a day; so that in thinking of the dear ones in Nashville I had forcibly to add about five hours to visualize their occupations. When I lunched I could think of them as enjoying the evening meal; but now suddenly we lost what we had gained and enough beside to make up a day. Well, I hope to be back that way early next winter and then to pick up the lost day. Not thus can it be with a day misspent.

At 7 o'clock in the morning of the fourteenth day out the mountains of Japan became visible, though Fujiyama was entirely hidden by dense clouds, thus depriving the voyagers of one of the wonderful sights that the ocean approach to Japan affords. A little later the forts that frown at the entrance to the Inland Sea appeared, and the beautiful Bay of Yokohama became visible. Already we had seen a great ship under steam going east, the first since leaving Honolulu, but now numerous fishing boats skimmed the waves under a stiff breeze, and when we entered the bay one could begin to realize that he was in the Orient by the sampans and other unfamiliar craft that without number went hither and thither. The harbor was almost crowded, as large as it is, with great steamships, and to the north could be seen the huge derricks of a shipbuilding plant, perhaps in which some great battleship is being built to keep the peace. But the general aspect of this city of over 400,000 as seen from the port is not greatly different from what an American waterfront of the same extent would seem. Great buildings of European or American architecture rise in every direction, the docks and warehouses are such as we are accustomed to, and the revenue and health officers who board the ship and inspect passengers and vise passports are of average courtesy and efficiency.

Although I did not know it, my voyage was ended at Yokohama. I was booked for Kobe, a day's steaming down the Inland Sea, where I expected to meet a number of our missionaries and later, at near-by Arima, attend the annual meeting of the mission. But while I was leaning leisurely upon the rail watching the great ship slowly narrow the distance between her and the dock, having bidden good-bye to fellow passengers who were to debark here, I recognized Dr. Hager, who was waving to me from the dock and who informed me that a number of the missionaries were at Karuizawa and that I was to get off and go with him. I made no delay in getting packed and ready to leave the ship, although to do so occasioned a real sense of sadness, so soon had the great machine with its ensemble of officers and passengers acquired something of homelikeness.

St. Augustine: "A whole Bible for my staff, a whole Christ for my salvation, a whole church for my fellowship, and a whole world for my parish."

LITTLE TALKS ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By Honorable Josephus Daniels,
Former Secretary of the Navy of the United States.

The Near College or the Far.

III.

There is the ever-present discussion as to whether it is wisest for young men and young women to receive their educational training in their own environments or to go away from home to pursue their studies in a section where they come in contact with new faces and new associations and different points of view. It is a never-ending debate, which reaches no conclusive verdict.

If I were to hazard counsel to those whose means permitted free choice it would be: Obtain your collegiate education in your own State or locality, enjoy the comradeship of classmates with whom you will probably be associated during your whole life, become imbued during your college days with the spirit and traditions and aspirations of your own people, and get your first degree from an institution that holds the principles with which you were reared in your own home.

This gives grip upon eternal things, deepens roots that prevent separation from early teaching, and gives robust stamina and faith and attachment to a civilization of which you by blood and training are a part.

Travel ever so far and the influences of early life abide. Moreover, is there not a peculiar debt due by an educated man to give of his best to his own people and his own country? And then after the college degree has been won, if the money is available, every student ought to specialize in some institution in another environment. Perhaps instruction abroad, as a Rhodes scholar, or matriculate in some old and distinguished European institution, would give a world view-point and provide advantage in scientific research. But education abroad is not recommended to any under-graduate.

The nearer home he can find the required advantages and the learned teachers, the better for him in his college days. There is a flavor for students in such surroundings and a deepening of early convictions which no other institution affords.

We may accept it as true and wise that the best is none too good for our sons and daughters. When I say the best is none too good, I do not mean the biggest. There is power and inspiration in our big universities, but I sometimes think that the smaller colleges with great teachers are better for most students. President Garfield expressed a sound truth when he said that the best college was Mark Hopkins on one end of a log and the student on the other. No substitute has been found for a learned and inspiring teacher.

Some years ago there lived in North Carolina a truly great teacher, Braxton Craven, the founder of a strong Methodist institution, Trinity College, now one of the best furnished colleges in the whole South. It was then a struggling college, located in the country, where economy, simplicity, and hard study made a Trinity which turned out leaders in church and State. Both of North Carolina's senators to-day were educated in that college.

It was said facetiously of President Craven that he did two things in his intercourse with a matriculate: made him believe that Dr. Craven was the biggest man in the world, and made him believe that he, the particular student, was the next biggest, and might even distance Dr. Craven if he would follow the doctor's advice. However that may be, he had the divine faculty of drawing out all that was in a student, exciting his ambition and leading him into the paths of knowledge and leadership.

The day was, early in our history, when it was regarded necessary to send our sons to Europe to be educated. Later we thought for finishing touches they ought to go to Germany. We learned in 1914, those of us who had not learned it sooner, that education tainted with materialism was bought at too great a price. President Roosevelt uttered a profound truth when he declared that to educate the mind without educating the morals resulted in making the man so trained a menace—that truth cannot be too often emphasized.

Mr. Thomas Jefferson, whose long residence abroad gave him the authority to speak, even in the days when the United States had only a few strong institutions of learning, advised against sending American youth to European universities. He further declared that the American men of most learning, of most eloquence, most beloved by their countrymen and most trusted and promoted by them, are those who have been educated among them, and whose manners, morals and habits are perfectly homogeneous with those of our country. Our church colleges are sending out a continuous stream of these men every day.

REV. R. T. NOLEN.

The spirit of Rev. R. T. Nolen left this world, June 1, 1921, at High Point, Miss. He would have been seventy years of age on July 5, 1921. He was twice married, first to Miss Jennie Atkinson, of Carrollton, Miss. To this union were born four children—two sons and two daughters. After the death of his first wife, he married Miss Mary E.

THE LATE REV. R. T. NOLEN.

Hester, of Acona, Miss. To this union were born six children—five sons and one daughter.

Brother Nolen served as a supply for twenty-one years in the North Mississippi and the Mississippi Conferences, and was true and faithful to his duty to his God and church. He was a gifted local preacher of the old type. He was a good preacher and an untiring worker. He was of a cheerful, happy disposition. His pastoral visitations were very helpful.

Brother Nolen was one of the first preachers I heard preach, and his life and ministry have been a great help to me; so it is with a spirit of love and gratitude that I pen a few words to his memory. Brother Nolen reared a fine family, which always speaks of a successful Christian life. I am sure that all the members of both the Mississippi Conferences appreciate the life and work of our brother and pray God's blessing upon his family.

BISHOP LAMBUTH, THE MAN.

By Rev. Carroll Varner.

Among the many who will pay tribute to the memory of this remarkable man I covet the privilege of offering a bit of praise. Not having been either a presiding elder or a "big preacher," it has never been my lot to know intimately any of our bishops, but fortunate circumstances have brought me on several different occasions into close touch with Bishop Lambuth and permitted me to get at least a glimpse of the man as he was. And we of Mississippi should take a peculiar pride in him since he had the blood of this good State in his veins.

The simplicity and earnestness of the man were, I suppose, the first characteristics to be noted in him. This was very evident to any one who heard him during his term as Missionary Secretary of our church, and, by the way, he was eminently successful in that office and performed its duties without at any time having about him a host of assistants, or departmental secretaries! But I was convinced of his simplicity and humility when I had the great good fortune to go to the World's Missionary Conference at Edinburgh, Scotland, on the same ship with him. We were ten days at sea and during that time I got to see much of him and to talk with him at will, and among the entire number on board there was no one more simple in his manner and unaffected than was he. When not busy with his books and papers, he seemed delighted to enter into conversation with us, or take part in any of our games, or join us in our walks about the deck; in short, he made himself one of us and there was nothing whatever in his manner to indicate that he was conscious of his importance or prestige. From day to day he asked the five or six Southern Methodists on board to meet with him in his room for a season of prayer in behalf of the church and the great cause of missions.

A few summers after this, while I was attending a Bible school in New York, I discovered that he was in the city preparatory to sailing for the Orient; I at once phoned to his hotel and asked him if I might call for a few minutes after supper. I hadn't been with him but a few minutes before he had impressed me again with this same simplicity, earnestness, and humility. Fearing lest I should bore him, I rose to leave after a very short visit, but he would not hear to it; if my duties did not call me he would be glad if I would remain awhile longer as it was a real pleasure to him! You could readily tell from the looks of his rooms that he was quite busy, but instead of being annoyed I was conferring a favor upon him by calling!

His honors rested lightly upon him; he bore them humbly. Just previous to the journey referred to above, two very great honors had been conferred upon him. He had only a few days before been elected to the highest honor within the church, that of bishop; while not a great while before that he had been made a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of London—a distinction few Americans have ever received. Reference was made to them one day in conversation with him and he seemed actually embarrassed by it: he deeply appreciated the honors, but seemed far more concerned to prove himself worthy of the great trust his fellow-men had placed in him. The fact that he had been made a bishop never caused him to relax in the least from his arduous labors so as to enjoy more fully the honors and authority connected therewith. In fact he seemed somewhat out of place in the episcopacy; he didn't have time to use that office as some have; he was more like an Apostle going hither and thither over the heathen world seeking to establish the kingdom of God.

He was an indefatigable worker and traveller, and because of the intensiveness and extensiveness of his labors he was recognized far beyond the borders of his own church and his own land. No other proof of this need be had than by his being made a F. R. G. S. years ago, but not only so, for in the annual councils held in New York City of the Missionary Secretaries of all the denominations, it has been stated upon good authority that he, with Dr. Barton, of Boston, ranked as the leading authority on the different foreign fields. And in the journey to Edinburgh it was interesting to note the deference accorded him by some of the most distinguished churchmen of the American continent, while from two of the leading pulpits of New York City I heard reference made to him on two consecutive Sundays.

Like Livingstone, and Carey, and Judson, it was his lot to open up new fields of labor and to plant the banner of the Cross on new soil at the cost of hard labor, innumerable hardships, and many perils. I do not know that W. R. Lambuth was a great preacher, and I've heard a little criticism of some of his theological views, but he bore the marks of a great man and rendered a service to his church and the heathen world equalled by few, if any, in his generation. It will be a long, long time before we shall see his like again.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE LIFE OF TO-DAY.

By Bishop H. C. Morrison.

(By the special request of Bishop Morrison, this article is reproduced from the Nashville Advocate of September 2.—Editor.)

The above is the title of a book recently published by Rev. John A. Rice, of Southern Methodist University, in Dallas, Tex. We wish to say that Dr. Rice and I are friends, and I write with no other feeling than that of friendship.

When the book was issued the publisher sent us a copy with the request that "we read it and then give him our impressions." We read the book closely and thoughtfully and then wrote the publisher very frankly that "we believed the book would do more harm than good."

It is literally honeycombed with doubtful expressions, such as: "It is supposed," "It seems," "It is probable," and so forth. The book has more than three hundred pages, and as many as five or six of these doubtful terms can be found on a single page. Those expressions will raise doubts in the minds of the ordinary reader. He will conclude that if so much of the old Book is doubtful, then it may be all questionable; and he will be led to doubt the entire revelation.

He makes Jonah a poetic, rather than a historic, character. He says: "That the great fish was at once ready to swallow Jonah may be passed; but that Jonah should have remained in the fish for three days and three nights and should have prayed a beautiful psalm of thanksgiving inside exceeds the limits of credibility."

He further says: "The book is a prose poem and, like all poetry, is vague." However, the Master refers to this as a historic event and illustrates his own death and resurrection by it. "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Again the author refers to "Kent" and uses Kent's "dissections" in a number of parallels. Now we all know that "Kent's Historical Bible" is filled with agnostic rot from cover to cover.

The great Dr. Parker, of England, said: "I care little as to who wrote the Bible. If we had the manuscripts, perhaps we could not read them. If the Bible is inspired, let it prove its inspiration by inspiring its readers. The Bible knows me as no other book knows me and affects me as no other does."

Has it ever failed to inspire its readers just as it is, the plain, simple Word of God? Its voice is: "I say unto thee, Arise." It has uplifted men and nations everywhere. It lifts nations from shame and superstition to the highest civilization, and it raises men from debauchery to high Christian character and usefulness. In the uplifting work it has never failed.

Then why raise doubts? Why question its simple statements when they are "so plain" that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, may not err therein?" Why not follow the example of men of world-wide reputation? Punshon, Spurgeon, and

Dr. Parker preached the old Book as it is and lived and died by its simple statements.

The old Book doesn't talk in doubtful terms. Its language is We know. "I know that my Redeemer liveth." "We know that we have passed from death unto life." "We know that if this earthly house of our tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, eternal in the heavens."

Darwinism, with its immense absurdities, is back of much of the "new theology." The effort is to eliminate God from the Scriptures. And when this is done, there is nothing left.

A great and wise man said: "God is the solution of every problem. Ask how the sea was separated while Israel passed over dry-shod and the Egyptians perished. I answer, God was there. Ask how Israel made the forty years' journey through the wilderness without so much as a sutler's cart in the way of supplies. I answer, God was there."

If Dr. Rice will only admit God fully in the case of Jonah, he will find the problem solved. And no feature in the case will rise to the point of "incredibility."

"Men do not gather grapes from thorns nor figs from thistles." The church has been gathering gospel grapes and gospel figs for thousands of years. Millions have already been saved, and millions more are on the heavenward march, while multitudes daily "sweep through the gates into the eternal city." It is a late hour now to begin to raise doubts on any part of the old Book, after the work it has done. Rather, let the gospel be preached as Christ commanded, with his guarantee that "he that believeth shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned."

RURAL PASTORS' TRAINING SCHOOL.

Dear Brother Carley: Perhaps some of the fellows would like to hear something about the Rural Pastors' Training School, which was held at Lake Junaluska in June.

My wife and I were among the number who were fortunate enough to attend. Much has been written about the inspiring quality of the scenery of this beauty spot of our church, but when we saw it we felt it far surpassed all descriptions.

We were given a foretaste of the Lake by our trip up the French Broad River. If we had not gotten a place on the rear platform of the train, I suspect I would have done like my friend, A. R. Beasley, and gotten a crick in my neck looking out the window.

I cannot pass on without saying that I feel no more fitting spot could have been chosen by our church as a place where God's people can go and seek to know Him better, to learn His will, and to take counsel together for the advancement of the Kingdom.

By the time the train reached Lake Junaluska there was a large number of men and women aboard, all bound for the school to take part as students or instructors. Eleven States had contributed 120 of their most progressive rural pastors. While the types naturally varied widely, there was a common purpose, to learn to serve that stamped them all.

The North Mississippi bunch got together in the Cherokee Inn—fifteen of us. Thanks to our Mission Board, we had the largest representation of any Conference. The next morning the classes met promptly at 8 o'clock, and we settled down for ten days' good, hard study. Our only regret was, we could not take every subject offered. Our greatest difficulty was in deciding which ones we could afford not to take, for we discovered that what the school was offering was just what we were looking for, the things we had been needing, though perhaps unconscious of the need until this time.

The instruction was of the most practical kind designed to help us to solve our every-day problems. Besides this, it gave us a vision of broader fields of service than the ones we had up to this time been laboring in. It opened to us all the needs of our people, not only spiritual but mental, material, and social as well. We were inspired to attempt to meet these needs even as the Master when he walked among men, for Christ is the same Christ to-day as yesterday, and, no doubt, is seeking through us to bring to the multitudes the knowledge necessary to the more abundant life.

As to our faculty, it would have been difficult in any field of knowledge to have chosen a body of men who are more thoroughly masters of their subjects, men of achievement, of great faith and of love. The best men of four denominations had been brought together, and not only was there perfect harmony in their teaching, but they dwelt together in peace and unity, exemplifying the doctrine of brotherly love. The spirit of their lives and teaching was the spirit of our gospel, "Service."

Perhaps the spirit of the whole school is best expressed by the title of one of our books for study, namely, "The Rural Church Serving the Community."

It seems to me the worth and importance of these training schools can hardly be expressed, for they offer the training which the rural pastor can get nowhere else. This training we must have if we would cultivate and develop the home fields, upon which we are depending to furnish the recruits for the ministry and mission fields, and a large part of the munitions of war.

That this cultivation and development is needed, no preacher who has ever served a rural charge will deny. But the task has been larger than any one man. In fact, the rural problem has been so big that most country folks try to solve it by moving to town. Most of us have done the same thing whenever we could get the elder to give us a station. So the country has been left to its fate, and the fires lit by the past generation of circuit riders have burned lower and lower, and the churches they helped to build are in many places actually rotting down for lack of repair.

When Asbury came to this country to direct the forces of Methodism, he found a very similar condition. The country was being neglected by the church. With characteristic foresight and energy he set about to remedy this state of affairs. Had it not been for Asbury's redirecting the attention and energy of our preachers to the rural sections, there is no telling what the present state of our church would be. Certainly it would not occupy its present high place.

We have leaders to-day who foresee what will be the result of the policy we have been pursuing with regard to the country for the past few decades. Back in the neglected districts Mormonism and other isms are taking root, and ministering to the passions and prejudice of the people. So not only are the springs being dried up by neglect, but they are being poisoned at their source. Since the figures show that most of our preachers and missionaries and city church members as well have come from the country, these conditions do not promise well for the continued health of our church.

But I feel that once the attention of our church is directed to the rural problem, and all her mighty force brought to bear upon it, it will be the pleasure of God to use us for its solution. He has let the Methodist Church lead in many other things, and I covet for her the honor and distinction of being the first to work out the solution on a large and practical scale. In my judgment, the plans which have already been prepared, if put into effect, would bring about a great change. Adjustments will have to be made, and details worked out, but now it is a question of putting into practice present plans.

Seeing what is the need and what the end to be accomplished, this effort of our church deserves the heartiest sympathy and support of every one who is concerned with its future welfare. It is the only plan that our leaders know that promises in the long run to furnish our rural churches with pastors who are well enough supported and equipped to meet the needs of the country community.

Mistakes may be made in the beginning, as nearly always happens in any new project, but I believe the idea of developing the country community is according to the mind of Christ, and if we will follow his guidance success is sure. But since the success of the Kingdom of God has always been dependent upon prepared men, I feel every one who is interested should begin definite study at once. Books bearing upon the subject can be secured through our Mission Board.

When we get together at Conference we ought to request Brother Ruff and Dr. Russell to bring us a Rural Pastors' Training School to Millsaps, where more of those interested would be able to attend.

WHAT IS IT I HEAR?

By Payton A. Sowell.

I am sure I am not a carper. I hope I am not rash. I endeavor to see that the scales balance. For life and faith are serious entities. I have been given one mouth, two eyes, and two ears. I know it is not easy, even with two eyes and two ears, to keep my one mouth out of that to which it should be closed. And many times I imagine those who hear the sounds from my mouth, and that my own sense of right controls, think my mouth ought to be "shut" by this time!

Ancestrally and personally, I have been a Methodist over a hundred years. This is a long time. If it seemed the conscientious thing to do—that is to be something else—I am too blinded or dimmed of vision by age to find my way into another fold, and to attempt to walk in unaccustomed fields.

Contentment and the best adjustment seem the "better wisdom."

But one, while he has hearing, cannot fail to detect the change of hymns and tunes that form parts of the spiritual refreshments.

I hear it said that it is becoming to the intelligence of our age and time that no interpretation or acceptance of the holy Scriptures be received that does not admit that the ages have been full of "old folk" lore, and "otherwise forgotten" local stories—identified with some perished little town or narrow valley. That is, to be able to get a "holy Scripture," there must have first been "an old memory," an "old legend"—something, however local or however crude.

My mind has been bothered as I have heard such. I have wondered, if the "authors" or "originators" of these "crude" "neighborhood" stories were mentally and spiritually strong enough, and no one else was, to "create" these things out of which and by which finally some "inspired prophet" of the "only great God" could produce a "divine revelation." Why it was this "great God" did not use these "original geniuses" to be His inspired prophets, rather than wait and choose men who were competent only to be "conservators"—"copyists"—of men and people who could have honestly signed their names to "original" documents; and not have been in danger of being accused of "plagiarism." I do not say there are not those who understand this anomalous situation. But I say I cannot. Among the things I hear, these are suggested—even ardently, scholastically urged on my credence.

I hear that Abraham was mistaken when he became the center of the story in which it is said: "God did tempt Abraham: and said to him: Abraham, * * * take now thy son, thine only son, Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering, upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of."

After Abraham had gone to the limit of obedience, and his eyes swam with tears, and his hand was lifted, another part of the scene occurs: "And the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham; and he said here am I. And, he said, Lay not thy hand upon the lad * * *." "And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns."

Scholarly men tell me I must hear them as they tell me—that in this "old," though beautiful story, woven so deftly into the "holy Scriptures," I am to understand Abraham was mistaken about hearing God tell him to offer Isaac. I have wondered why they do not tell me Abraham was mistaken about hearing the Angel speaking from Heaven, saying to him, "Lay not thy hand upon the lad." How could he hear an Angel "Speaking from heaven" any more certainly than God? How came the "ram caught in the thicket by the horns?" The servant was left at the foot of the mountain.

In my old age, I am hearing such.

There was a time when I heard from every pulpit: "Jesus Christ tasted death for every man." Since I am getting "thick of hearing" because of the passing of three-score-and ten years, I hear: "Jesus did not die so much for sinners, as he died for a great program! 'The church,' I seem to hear them say to me, 'is not so much set to save individuals, as it is organized to carry out a great Program.' This 'Program' is involved in Education, Industry and Society. I am hearing this.

I once was accustomed to hear that St. Paul, on the Damascus road, heard and saw that which made him cry out: "What wilt thou have me to do?" The old story I was once accustomed to hear related how the "scales fell from his eyes." And after he looked back at the state from which he had been delivered, in describing it he said: "O, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death?"

He certainly, in a moral sense, was dreadfully circumstanced, as his mouth and nostrils were bound to those of this loathsome body.

And we used to think Paul was a great sinner. In fact, somewhere we read, "Jesus Christ came to save sinners, of whom I am chief."

But, I hear now, Paul's great sin, and really his only sinfulness lay in the fact he was unwilling to "carry out Christ's great Program."

I once believed, and was settled in the conviction, that "personal salvation," or "personal religion," or "individual relationship to God" was of the highest moment. But, as I shuffle to the end of a pew and get seated, I hear this new word: "We have overworked this matter of personal salvation. What we need is to join in the carrying out of a great Program." Away back yonder I used to hear some very dear old people, to me, sing something like this:—

"Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood Stand dressed in living green."

And in my young and simple heart, I resolved, by God's grace, I would reach that fair land.

Strange it sounds to me, but now when I am old and know I am not far from the crossing, I am hearing: "If going to heaven is what you want, —why not go to China or India to start? There are scores of people there who are good enough, and are going to heaven." Oh, how it breaks my heart for Methodists, the children of Wesley, to advise the yearning spirit of bereavement and age to go away from the church in a Christian land, to get company from untaught heathen, to start on the last lap of the journey for heaven!

Maybe some one says: "That is what the old gentleman gets, for having to hear 'back-woods illiterates of Tennessee.'"

Strange as it may appear, he hears this from college trained men; and most ardent advocates for the millions for Christian education. The "old-timers," like Bunyan's man, rejoice as they look away, across the River that has no bridge, unto the city—on the far-away hills.

IN THIS NIGHT.

"O friends, I pray you to-night,

Keep not your touches for my dead, cold brow;
The way is lonely, let me feel them now.

Think gently of me, I am travel-worn;

My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night."

A CALL TO PRAYER AND CONSECRATION.

To All Who Love Our Lord Jesus Christ:

The coming Conference on Limitation of Armament brings to all Christian people a priceless opportunity. To all good citizens indeed, and to all lovers of humanity, it is a time of challenge and of hope, but supremely so to those who have seen in Jesus Christ a revelation of love and brotherhood as the true way of life. To bear convincing witness everywhere to this faith is our privilege and our duty in the present crisis.

With harrowing memories of more than ten million men who laid down their lives in the awful holocaust from which we have just emerged, of the countless homes hearing burdens of anguish and suffering, of the desolation and pestilence that have sprung from the war and still ravage whole peoples, and, most of all, of the aftermath of bitterness, suspicion and hate which pervades all lands, let us insist far more vigorously than we have ever done before, that war is an unmitigated curse to humanity and a denial of the Christian Gospel. Let us declare plainly that in every war the Son of Man is put to shame anew and that every battlefield is a Calvary on which Christ is crucified afresh.

Let us not shrink from proclaiming unequivocally that war is not a necessity, that the pacific settlement of every international question is possible, that a warless world can really be achieved. Our witness must be unmistakable that force is not the final arbiter among the nations, but that justice, reason and good-will can control their life as well as the life of individual men. To continue to point to the mailed fist as our ultimate reliance and to carry on a program of mutual distrust and fear, is to undermine the very foundation of our Christian faith.

Let there be throughout the church a fire of holy indignation not only against war but also against the mad competition in armaments which has nourished suspicion, ill-will and fear, and from which wars have always sprung and always will. Let us not allow the reduction of armaments to be regarded as an economic issue alone. The question is at heart a moral and religious one. Let us repeat from one end of the nation to the other the discerning words of our Government's official invitation to the Conference: The rivalries of armaments are not only without economic justification, but are a constant menace to the peace of the world.

Let us pray unceasingly that the Spirit of God may guide our leaders assembled at the conference of the nations, that unselfish motives and wise counsels may prevail. Let us give ourselves unstintedly to cultivating a Christian public opinion so strong that it will make possible the richest results from their deliberations. We cannot be satisfied with a mild curtailment of our military expenditure. Nothing less than a far-reaching reduction in armaments on sea and land can suffice. It is not for us to dictate the specific plans by which the longed-for goal may be achieved, but insist we must, with all the passion of our souls, that rational and pacific methods must now be found for the settlement of international disputes.

With a more poignant realization than we have ever had before of the terrible consequences of national selfishness, let us humbly confess our own share of sin in participating in the race of armaments, in seeking our own advantage regardless of neighbors, in adding to the world's burden of suspicion and distrust. Let us, as a people, open wide our hearts to the divine spirit of love and brotherhood revealed to us in its fullness by Jesus Christ. Let us dedicate ourselves anew to building in this war-ridden earth the City of God foretold by the mouth of prophets since the world began.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA.

AN OPEN LETTER.

The Anti-Saloon League of America has requested the State League superintendents to issue an urgent call to all the pastors in all the States, including all denominations, to make the last Sunday in October, which is the World's Temperance Sunday, a special day, "Not-over Day," on which the pastors of the States are requested to present to their congregations in a sermon the fact that prohibition is yet an unfinished job, that we have not yet gone over the top.

There is no time for lovers of church, Sunday school, home, happiness and prosperity to sleep. The slogan should be, "Up, and doing." For the prohibition forces to disband or even relax in their activities would be a suicidal policy, and prove prohibitionists unworthy of their profession and the great work entrusted to their leadership. No army can afford to disband, or even decrease its strength, when the enemy is strengthening its lines. The voice of the ministers of the land should ring out in clarion tones, calling our people to the colors. A great revival of prohibition sentiment is much needed at this moment, and the preachers must lead as they have always done. Much more labor will be needed, and Christian people must spur up, or all we have achieved will be in jeopardy. There is real danger of losing the fruits of a hard-earned victory.

In support of the importance of a special effort at this time to re-enlist the sympathies and activities of the Christian people of our State, the following facts are mentioned. The liquor forces have never allowed their organizations to disband, or even to relax, but are constantly strengthening them. They have large sums of money subject to use for nullifying all prohibition laws, even the Federal Constitution. They have never been quite so determined in their fight as now, because they have never been so desperate. They are fighting with their back to the wall.

Their desperation, viciousness and lawlessness have never been so manifest as at present. This is shown in their daring attacks upon the Eighteenth Amendment, the Volstead law, and in fact, all laws which cross their path. Their specious arguments are seen on every hand. They assert that the Eighteenth Amendment and all laws supporting it are encroachments upon personal liberty. Even our own senior senator indulged in so-called arguments unworthy his acknowledged intelligence, when making a plea for beer as a medicine. He said, so the newspaper reports run, that womanhood during the state of gestation, childbirth and convalescence demanded beer as a stimulant and vitalizer. In this view he clashes with general science and especially with the American Medical Association, which at its 1917 meeting passed the following significant resolutions by unanimous vote, and has since several times restated and emphasized the same position:

"Whereas, we believe that the use of alcohol is detrimental to the human economy; and, whereas, its use in therapeutics as a tonic or stimulant or food has no scientific value; therefore, be it resolved, That the American Medical Association is opposed to the use of alcohol as a beverage; and that use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be further discouraged." This is THE Medical Association of the United States and has a membership of over one hundred thousand.

Spurred on by the diabolical liquor interests, some of the States are considering the matter of softening their laws. Foreign countries are joining the whiskey forces in an effort to weaken our laws. In fact, some of them are doing all they can to utterly break down laws and Constitution.

In the broadest altruistic sense we clearly see that the prohibition fight is not finished. The world outside of the United States is literally floating in rum to-day. The United States can never be as dry as it ought to be while other nations are soaking wet. The gates of temperance and prohibition fields are wide open, inviting us to enter. Our first and urgent work is to enforce our prohibition laws at home, and then to enter other fields of the world.

Now, brethren, as your watchman on the prohibition walls, I point out the dangers and call you to arms. Let's do our full duty. It would be a tragedy for us to allow, through our indifference and inactivity, the nullification, or even modification, of our splendid prohibition laws, either State or national. Will you not let me hear from you?

Truly,

T. J. BAILEY,
Superintendent Anti-Saloon League.

CONFERENCE SUGGESTIONS.

Dear Brother Carley: We are coming near to the session of our Annual Conference and I have some things on my mind that I would propose for consideration. I shall talk briefly and to the point.

The Annual.

Our Conference Minutes reach us about the first of March and are therefore nothing more than a nice little hook to file away and look over once in awhile. It should be on the table of every pastor within a week after Conference adjourns. This can be done. Let the contract for the publishing of the Minutes to a publishing house at the site of the Conference. Each day when the minutes are read and approved or corrected, let the copy go directly to the printer. The secretary can in that way correct the proof on the Minutes before he leaves the session. The statistical report can go to the printer the minute it is adopted. Advertisements, except those of our colleges, orphanage and publishing house, can be eliminated. To ask a merchant in Shreveport to advertise in the Annual is another way of begging. His ad is not worth the paper it is written on to him. Let us publish our Annual because we must have it and enter it as a legitimate expense. It should carry a complete calendar of all Conference dates, such as Advocate Week, Work Day, and so on.

By doing as suggested, we could have handed to every member of the Conference each morning a proof sheet of the proceedings of the Conference the day before, with copies of all reports. Thus we could proceed intelligently from day to day.

Reports.

Every year the Statistical Secretary is delayed because of both late reports and improperly prepared reports. Let the presiding elders be responsible for auditing the report of each pastor in his district and let the Statistical Secretary look to the elders only for all reports. The elders know better how to audit the report of a pastor than does the Statistical Secretary or any other minister of the Conference. By this means the statistical work can proceed without interruption from the first day and be completed at an early hour during the Conference.

These two suggestions leave me content to await their reception. I would not raise an issue, about the advertising feature of our Conference Annual. But I cannot see why a bank in Lake Charles or Shreveport should use an Annual as an advertising medium when its circulation is almost wholly outside the territory from whence comes the bank's business. And when it comes to advertising cough syrup and salve, let the almanacs have the right-of-way. When the great Methodist Church has to traipse around to vendors of patent medicine in order to obtain funds to pay for its Annual, then it has no need to complain if that Annual remains unpublished until March or November.

GUIDE ME.

Give me grace, dear Lord, to be
One with Thee in service sweet;
Dearest may it be to me,
Still to wait and watch for Thee.

With Thy hand enfolding mine,
In the day or in the night,
Let me hear Thy voice Divine:
Lead me through the dark to light.

So as days and years go by,
May Thy will be done in me;
Hear me when to Thee I cry:
Guide me, keep me close to Thee.

PETER THE POLITE.

On the day that Peter Oliver was six years old his big brother William was going to drive up to Kipton for farm supplies, and the family decided that Peter should go with him. Kipton was twenty-five miles away, and as Peter had never been there he jumped for joy.

It was a bright spring morning, and they started very early.

"Now hold on tight, Peter," his mother called from the door.

"Yes'm," Peter answered.

"And mind William."

"Yes'm." The horses were pawing and eager to go.

"And be polite," mother said, as she waved her hand.

"Yes'm," said Peter, and the wagon went rumb-ling off.

All the way to town Peter was thinking about one thing: he fully expected to buy a watch; in fact, he had gone so far as to tell his younger brother, Thomas, that he would be allowed to wear the watch for ten minutes when the travelers returned.

Still he thought he had better make perfectly sure. "William," he said, looking at the big, bright quarter in his hand, "twenty-five will buy a watch all right, won't it?"

Now, William's mind was on fertilizer, and he thought that "twenty-five" meant twenty-five dollars. So he said, "Of course it will," and went on whistling under his breath.

That settled it; Peter leaned back in his seat quite satisfied and clutched the coin closer than ever. There were a great many people passing on foot and in vehicles, and Peter, remembering his promise, bowed pleasantly to each one. Most of them were friends and neighbors, and they looked pleased to see Peter Oliver going to Kipton for the first time.

As the wagon drew nearer to town, however, more and more people passed, and a great many of them seemed to be strangers. But Peter kept on bowing courteously; he wondered why William had stopped bowing. He wondered, too, why some of the people looked at him curiously, and why very few of them returned his greeting. He had no way of knowing that town customs differ from country customs, and that he was not supposed to speak to every one now. He went right on bowing and smiling, just as he had done on the country road.

"Sleepy, Peter?" asked William, presently.

"No, siree!" said Peter.

"Thought you seemed to be nid-nodding," replied William.

"I wasn't either!" Peter said indignantly. "Me nid-nodding!" What could William be thinking of?

Fifteen minutes later Peter was marching down Main Street in Kipton by himself, with his hands in his pockets. He had promised William that he would not turn a corner. "There'll be plenty to see on one street," William had said.

Peter knew well enough what he wanted to see. He walked slowly, keeping a sharp lookout for a window with watches in it. As he went along he wished with all his heart that there were not so many people in Kipton. It was hard to have good manners and at the same time to attend to the important business of buying a watch. But Peter was faithful; every time he caught a passer's eye he bowed. He did not stop even when a rough little boy called out rudely, "Hey, there, rubber-neck!"

At one crossing an old gentleman on crutches passed him. Peter nodded pleasantly; and the old gentleman, after halting just a minute, hobbled on with a surprised expression under his bushy eyebrows.

Peter decided that the jewelers' windows must be on the other side; so he crossed the street and started back toward the place where he had left William. "Maybe there are not so many folks on this side," he said to himself. But there were, and they did not seem any more polite than the people on the other side. All at once Peter came to a window full of watches. He turned his back on the crowd and stood very still for a long while, staring at the beautiful things with all his eyes. While he was trying to make his choice among them he heard a tap-tap behind him, and there was the lame old gentleman again. Peter looked up and bowed to him courteously.

The crutches stopped. "I don't believe I remember your name, exactly," said the stranger.

"No, sir," said Peter politely. "You don't remember it at all. You never heard it." Then he told his name and what he was busy about. All the while they talked, Peter was managing somehow to bow to all the passers-by.

The stranger watched Peter narrowly with his keen, bright eyes. "You seem to know nearly every one in Kipton," he said.

"Oh, no, sir!" was Peter's answer. "I don't know any one here at all. I was never here before in my life. Will you excuse me a moment, sir, while I go in and buy that watch with the dog's-head fob?"

Again the old man looked surprised. "How do you know you can buy it?" he said.

For answer Peter held up the bright quarter. Then he stepped briskly into the store. Three minutes later he came out looking very red. His face was sober, but he held his chin well up. The lame old gentleman was waiting.

"He says I made a big mistake about the price of watches. He says"—Peter's voice shook a little, and he blinked so hard that he entirely missed bowing to three ladies in succession. "I think my brother must be looking for me," he said suddenly. "Good-by, sir." He gave his new friend a handshake. Then he walked off with his head still high, bowing right and left. The old man, after watching him out of sight, turned and went into the store himself.

Peter was glad when the long, dismal drive came to an end late that evening. To be sure, it was hard to face Thomas, who had sat up two hours past bedtime waiting to wear the watch ten minutes.

"I didn't get it," whispered Peter hoarsely and hurried to bed in silence. He felt tired and very stiff.

"William," said Mrs. Oliver the next day, "what in the world did you let that child do yesterday in Kipton? His neck is so stiff this morning that he can't turn his head."

"I didn't let him do anything," answered William. "There was something the matter with his head all the way up there. He never kept it still a minute."

When the mail was brought in at noon, some one called out that there was a package for Peter. Poor Peter was sitting in a rocking-chair by the window with a hot mustard plaster on the back of his neck, trying not to mind the pain. The only way he could look to right or to left was by rolling his eyes. He rolled them now at the package.

It was addressed delightfully to Peter Oliver, Esq., and when Peter had torn off the wrapping a little square white box tumbled out. On the back of the box was written, "For Peter the Polite." Inside, ticking away for dear life, lay a bright silver watch with a dog's-head fob.

Peter forgot his mustard plaster. He rose from the rocking-chair and gave three leaps into the air and three cheers.

"But who sent it? And what does that funny name mean?" asked the family in chorus.

Peter was too excited to remember anything. He compared the watch with the mantel clock; then he slipped it into his pocket. "Does any one want to know what time it is?" he asked.

And to this day the Oliver family often puzzle over the question where the watch came from, and why it came, and what can be the meaning of that peculiar name, Peter the Polite.—Nancy Byrd Turner, in The Youth's Companion.

MEETING OF PUBLISHING COMMITTEE

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate met in annual session in the office of the Advocate on Thursday, October 7, at ten a. m., Rev. J. P. Foster in the chair. The following members were present, representing the several Conferences: J. T. Leggett and J. R. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference; J. W. Dorman, J. H. Felts, and T. H. Lipscomb, of the North Mississippi Conference; J. P. Foster of the Louisiana Conference. A telegram of sympathy was sent to Dr. J. M. Henry, who was reported very critically ill.

The report of the Business Manager, Mr. C. O. Chalmers, revealed the fact that the Advocate is approaching the most serious financial crisis that it has ever faced, and that its very existence is imperiled by the high cost of production and an alarming decrease in the number of subscribers during the past year. Mr. Chalmers pleaded very earnestly that a special representative be sent to each Conference this fall and that the pastors and laymen be urged to commit themselves to the securing during the coming winter of a fair quota of subscribers from every church and charge within our patronizing territory. In fact, it was recognized by all that the only hope for the continued life of our Conference organ is a large increase in subscriptions at the earliest possible moment. J. P. Foster, J. H. Felts, and J. T. Leggett were appointed to present the matter to their respective Conferences, and a special hour was requested given them.

That there might be no doubt in any mind as to the position of the Advocate on questions of vital interest now before the church, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas questions of speculative Biblical Criticism, affecting the inspiration, authority, and historical veracity of the Holy Scriptures as a divine revelation, are now agitating the church; and

Whereas, speculative evolutionary theories as to the origin and history of man, contradictory to the Biblical record and destructive of the whole Christian plan of Redemption are now widely prevalent;

Be it Resolved, by the Publishing Committee, Editor, and Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in annual session assembled, that we stand squarely for the integrity of the Holy Scriptures as a divine revelation, and the doctrines derived therefrom, concerning man's origin, sin, redemption, and destiny, as taught by Methodism and the orthodox Christian church throughout its entire history; and that we vigorously oppose "all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word," and that we anew dedicate our Christian Advocate to its responsible mission of establishing the church in the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

Resolved second, that we call upon our preachers and laymen to rally in never before to the support of the Advocate, as their representative organ, set for the propagation and defense of the Gospel.

The importance and necessity of meeting in full the assessments assumed by the Conferences last fall for the relief of the Advocate was recognized, that non-payment already incurred may be met, and it was urged that all presiding elders and pastors co-operate heartily in meeting these obligations. With this tone and a vigorous campaign for new subscribers inaugurated in every Conference district and charge, it was recognized that the Advocate can weather the financial storm, but such a determined campaign continued until the results are obtained is a sine qua non to the continued life of the Advocate. Three thousand new subscribers will save the day.

The Publishing Committee, Editor, and Manager feel confident that when these conditions are known by our preachers and laymen they will rally courageously to the support of their Conference organ, that it may continue its long and honorable career of service to the church.

THOS. H. LIPSCOMB, Secretary.

THE RESOLUTIONS OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

In connection with the resolutions passed by the Publishing Committee at its meeting last week, it is only fair to say that the resolutions are not to be construed as a criticism, expressed or implied, of any editorial expression of opinion in connection with any question that has been discussed in the Advocate. That they are not to be so construed was specifically and definitely stated by the Committee in adopting the resolutions.

DEATH OF DR. J. M. HENRY.

A telegram from Rev. Robt. W. Vaughan, of Ruston, La., dated October 10, announced to the Advocate the sad news of the death of Dr. J. M. Henry early that morning. We had known that Dr. Henry was in a precarious state of health, and, in a way, we were prepared to hear that the end had come; but the actual shock of the sad event seems not to have been lessened by previous knowledge of his condition. It is hard for us to realize that this great, strong man is with us no more.

Dr. Henry was, without question, one of the most prominent and influential members of the Louisiana Conference. For many years he has been recognized as one of its leaders, and the Conference has delighted to do him honor in all possible ways. As pastor, presiding elder, member of Conference Boards, president of the Legal Conference, delegate to the General Conference, member of Connectional Boards, and in many other capacities he displayed a clearness of vision, a soundness of judgment, and an executive ability that gave his opinions great weight and assured large success in whatever undertaking enlisted his support.

Dr. Henry was big of body, big of mind, and big of soul—there was nothing little or mean about him. His character was transparently pure, and his brotherliness won the affection of those who knew him, as his ability commanded their respect. The meeting of the Annual Conference early next month will be a sad occasion because he will not be there. He was admitted into full connection in the Louisiana Conference in 1892, and from that time until his passing he gave himself unreservedly to the work of the ministry. At the time of his death he was pastor of our church at Ruston.

At the time of going to press, we had received no details concerning the funeral services. We are sure that an adequate memoir will be furnished the Advocate for publication in due time. The whole church will sympathize tenderly with his devoted wife and children in their sorrow and pray that they may have all the consolations of abounding grace.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES

The fall meeting of the College of Bishops will be held at Richmond, Va., in October 17.

Rev. R. F. Hurrell, our pastor at Vicksburg, La., was in the city this week, and paid the Advocate office an impromptu call.

The anniversary of the birth of Sir George Williams, founder of the Young Men's Christian Association, was celebrated on October 11.

Rev. W. L. Swope, one of our general evangelists, was scheduled to begin a meeting at Boyle, Miss., on last Sunday, the meeting to continue two weeks. Rev. C. A. Northampton is the pastor.

Mr. E. B. Chappell, Jr., has been appointed editor of the new periodicals to be issued by the Sunday School Board—"The Harbinger" for boys, and "The Forerunner" for girls.

Dr. W. Winans Duke is being assisted in a meeting at Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, La., this week by Rev. J. Lloyd Loebl, of Herber Winans Memorial Church, Meridian, Miss.

Rev. Briscoe Carter, D. D., sailed from Liverpool for Philadelphia on October 7. In a personal note to the editor, he says he has had a great time in Europe—but he will be glad to be back in "God's country."

All the Protestant churches of Tunica City, Miss., united in a service on Sunday evening, October 2, to honor to Rev. Albert Martin, who has completed a term of twenty-five years as pastor of Trinity Episcopal Church of that city.

Sister T. S. Randle, of Yakum, Texas, who requested prayer for her grandson through last week's Advocate, writes that he is greatly improved. Sister Randle expects to move to Louisiana soon, making West Monroe her home.

Rev. R. M. Papasan, of the Salem and Oakdale charge, North Mississippi Conference, is closing out a good year's work. He reports 11 accessions on profession of faith during the year with good Sunday schools and prayer meetings in the charge.

A note from Rev. A. W. O'Bryen, our pastor at Richton, Miss., informs us that he has just closed a great meeting at Blodgett, Miss., in which there were 11 accessions to the church. A Woman's Missionary Society will be organized at that point soon.

The cornerstone of our new church in Algiers will be laid next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Rev. C. C. Wier, the pastor, has invited all the Methodists of New Orleans to attend, and the occasion will be a memorable one in local church history.

Rev. F. B. Ormond, of Hattiesburg, Miss., field representative of the Memorial Home in the Mississippi Conference, was a caller at the Advocate office on Tuesday morning of this week. He is meeting with encouraging success in the work in which he is engaged.

A mass meeting in the interest of the Gypsy Smith meeting to be held next January will assemble in the First Presbyterian Church, this city, on next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. The usual evening services of the churches will be omitted in order that all may attend this mass meeting.

The Noel Memorial Sunday school, Shreveport, La., made an offering of more than $300 for the Orphanage at Ruston last Sunday. The attendance on that day was 486. This Sunday school has entered an attendance contest with the Texas Avenue and Queensborough schools combined.

New Orleans has two pastors who have served their present charges more than four years, and whose official boards have requested their return. Rev. J. A. Alford's return for the seventh year has been asked at Second Church, and Rev. C. C. Wler's return for the sixth year has been asked at Algiers.

Mr. R. H. Nestler and Miss Beulah Dunn, active members of our Epworth Church, this city, were married on the morning of October 1, the pastor, Rev. J. E. Selfe, officiating. They went by boat to New York on their bridal tour. The Advocate extends all good wishes to this fine young couple.

Since the last report from Whitworth College, the number matriculated has reached two hundred and fifty. Among the additions have been several boarders. While a few vacancies remain in the dormitories, the largely increased attendance of local students over last session has more than compensated for such loss.

Rev. N. E. Alford, of Holmesville, Miss., one of our most useful local preachers, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week, in company with his son, Rev. J. A. Alford, pastor of Second Church. Brother Alford has been a subscriber to the Advocate for more than fifty years.

The Orleans-Jefferson Sunday School Association will hold a "Brass Tacks" School of Methods at the First Methodist Church, this city, October 24-28. In addition to experienced local workers, the school will have the pleasure of hearing Dr. Wm. A. Brown, of Chicago, and Rev. Chas. L. Debow, of Dallas.

Rev. Chas. D. McGehee, formerly of Mississippi, but lately pastor of the Methodist church at Fredericktown, Mo., was appointed at the recent session of his Conference to Haven Street Methodist Church, St. Louis. This church has a membership of about 700, and its progress during the past two years has been phenomenal. Brother McGehee sends his love to his friends in these parts.

In the record of the Sunday school contributions to the Centenary fund, the Florida Conference has first place, with a total payment to October 1 of 83 cents per member. The Louisiana Conference is twenty-second, with a payment of 41 cents per member; the Mississippi Conference is twenty-eighth, with a payment of 35 cents per member; the North Mississippi Conference is thirty-fourth, with a payment of 28 cents per member.

Mr. A. M. Mayo has been superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school at Lake Charles, La., for twenty-nine years. By keeping in close touch with the latest methods in Sunday school work he has succeeded in doing that which many fail to do—keeping out of the ruts. The total enrollment of the school is 847; the total attendance for the year ending September 30, was 18,346; the total offering for the year was $1480.90.

The following was in a recent number of the bulletin of the First Methodist Church, Laurel, Miss., Rev. O. S. Lewis, pastor: "The pastor highly recommends two helpful religious papers for all the members. They are the New Orleans Christian Advocate, $2 per year, and the Nashville Christian Advocate, $2.50 per year—fine reading in both for old and young. Be a loyal, intelligent Methodist by taking and reading one or both."

Rev. W. G. Forsyth, of Bay St. Louis, Miss., requests us to call attention to the following typographical errors in his article, "Let The Tide Turn Back," which appeared in last week's Advocate: In the second paragraph, second sentence, "forgotten tombs" should be "forgotten tomes;" in the second paragraph, second sentence, "cries of inspiration" should be "theories of inspiration." We regret the occurrence of these errors, though they appeared in the copy furnished us.

Chaplain John A. Randolph, of Fort McPherson, Ga., has conducted funeral services over the bodies of more than six hundred soldiers who died during the war. The Atlanta Georgian of September 30 had a fine picture of Chaplain Randolph, with an account of his work, and the American of October 2 features an interview with him concerning the meaning of death and the real philosophy of life. The Chaplain has the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and is the second-oldest chaplain in point of service in the U. S. army. He served in the trenches in France, and was decorated by the French Government.

THE LATE REV. J. M. HENRY, D.D.

PAY-UP WEEK, NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Let me call attention to all North Mississippi Methodists that PAY-UP WEEK for the CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT is from October 30 to November 6. It was set at this time for several reasons. The principal reason was that almost all the subscriptions fall due November 1, and so, from a standpoint of business, an account should be collected when due. It is unfortunate that this comes just before Conference. If it had been deferred until later it would have to be postponed until the latter part of the winter. Conference, Christmas holidays, the Centenary Pay-Up Week, the first week in January, would all have precedence. Please get this matter before your people. Announce it from the pulpit, put it in the county papers, and, if necessary, send out notification to the subscribers. Get your collectors ready and insist on diligent work.

Let me suggest that since the financial conditions are much improved there will be many who did not subscribe in the spring that will do so now, and some will increase the subscription made during the canvass. So, while the canvass is being made for funds during Pay-Up Week, an effort should be made to increase the subscription to the fund.

Remember that I am yours to command in every way to make this great movement a success.

J. H. HOLDER.

New Albany, Miss., Oct. 7.

"PAY-UP WEEK" FOR EDUCATION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

"Pay-Up Week" for the Mississippi Conference will be from November 1 to November 7. I wish all preachers would make announcement at all their churches, and notify all collectors. Statements will be sent out from this office to each collector, giving names and amounts due at this time. Let us make this the banner collection. U. S. Bonds will be taken at par value provided the coupons have not been clipped, up to the 31st of December. It is very important that we collect as much money as we can this fall. Our schools are in need. We cannot afford to neglect these splendid institutions, which prepare our boys and girls for future work in our church. Let all preachers who have not sent in collectors' names do so at once so we can send them receipt books and a list of subscribers that are due.

J. M. MORSE, Sec'y-Treas.

A WRONG METHOD.

By Rev. C. A. Battle.

Rev. N. H. D. Willson, of Washington, N. C., has written a little pamphlet entitled, "Honorable Union or a Separate Existence of Strife." In this pamphlet he favors the calling of the General Convention of Northern and Southern Methodisms proposed by the Northern General Conference in 1920, to consider the unification issue. Brother Willson has sent this pamphlet together with a return-addressed and stamped postal card to me, and I presume to all the presiding elders of Southern Methodism, asking for a straw vote on the calling of the convention.

I strongly feel that such a method of procedure is a serious mistake. This is evidently a plan to commit the church, or at least a part of it, to a scheme before both sides have been presented to those asked to vote. His pamphlet is an argument for the convention. He uses all the reasons he can muster—and some of them will not stand the logical test—for the calling of the convention. He makes no presentation of the other side whatever. On this one-sided presentation I am asked to vote on a question.

Brother Willson may say that his pamphlet was sent to the presiding elders, and not to the actual members of the next General Conference. But even then his method should not be countenanced; for if a majority of those to whom he sent the pamphlet and the card reply in the affirmative, he doubtless will make a tremendous noise about the church wanting the convention called. With only his side of the case presented and the vote resulting in the affirmative would not be a fair test of those who vote for the convention. Of course, after brethren commit themselves they do not care to reverse their vote. Once committed they will desire to remain on that side of the question. Such a tremendous issue as this should be dealt with thoughtfully and fairly. There should be no effort to stampede the denomination into a thing which might prove disastrous. The writer thinks that a discussion of the question of the calling of the general convention in the church press is in order; but he certainly does oppose any effort to bring about a decision one way or the other before the matter is carefully considered by the General Conference.

A general convention, such as the Northern Methodists have proposed, the writer feels, would be unwise. The Northern General Conference echoed the sentiment of its church when it treated with the utmost coolness the plan of unification transmitted by the Joint Commission. The Church, North, will not at this time be willing to suffer any retrenchment in regard to favors shown the Negro element; neither will it now agree to any Regional Conference scheme where the minority will be protected in its peculiar social condition.

On the evening of September 23, 1921, the death angel bore the spirit of Mrs. GERTIE LAMB LATHAM to that world that shall never end. She gave her heart and service to the Master at the age of fourteen years and became a member of the Methodist Church at Lebanon, and passed away with a perfect assurance of a home in heaven. This strangely reminds us that as soon as we begin to live, that moment we begin to die, and the youngest as well as the oldest must pay the debt. I have no doubt but that she now dwells among the angels in glory. She is survived by her husband, a mother, two brothers, three sisters, and a host of relatives and friends. Her father, two brothers, and one sister preceded her to the Better Land. She was twenty-seven years, six months and four days old. Funeral services were held at Lebanon, conducted by Rev. W. C. Mattox, her pastor, assisted by Rev. V. J. Bell, interment following in the Lebanon cemetery.

and encouragement for his church, home, friends and many. He joined St. John's Church—now Nugent—in 1881 under Brother Gillespie, has been a faithful member all along, a steward for about twenty years, and a Sunday school superintendent part of the time. He was a gentleman, and not a word was he known to speak unjust or hurtful to or about his neighbor. Let us sympathize with his family and relatives, and pray God's blessings on them. At his funeral was a large gathering, at Finley graveyard, besides three ministers of our church. Quite a number of colored people were there, who were impressed because he had befriended them in need. We mourn and greatly miss Brother Newton Hudson. Many times he was the chief supporter of his church when other helpers failed. May many be blessed because of him. His pastor, Lyman, Miss.

LYMAN R. REEVES was born October 1, 1849, and died September 15, 1921. In 1873 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Dickinson. To this union were born three daughters and two sons. At the age of 14 years he was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, and for 59 years worshiped at her altars and served at her tables. About 20 years ago he organized a Sunday school at Lyman, serving in it as superintendent until the day of his death. The little church here is a monument to his loyalty and devotion. More than $800 of his own money was spent in this church enterprise, besides other valuable service. His name belongs among those of the pioneers of Methodism in Mississippi. Funeral services were conducted in the church which he built, loved, and worshiped in for twenty years. After an impressive service conducted by Brothers Rutledge, Sullivan, Ulmer and the writer, we took his body to the cemetery and laid it to rest until the day when the dead in Christ shall come forth. Two sons, two daughters, twelve grandchildren, three great-grandchildren and a host of friends mourn his going. May we all emulate his life. He was my friend and brother.
G. W. McLAIN.

G. A. HALL was born in Franklin County, Miss., on August 17, 1853. He was married to Miss Lucinda Eliot, January 12, 1875. From this happy union were born six children, five boys and one girl. One baby boy went to the glory land in infancy. Four boys and one girl still live and mourn his death. This good man took his departure on September 9, 1921. He was a strong, honest, sincere man, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. Those who knew him were attached to him by the most enduring ties of friendship and respect. Living, his friends loved him, and when he died there was not a soul who did not mourn the loss of this good man. He joined the Baptist Church in early life, but later became a member of the M. E. Church, South. For 32 years he served as a faithful steward, an obedient servant of the Lord. His pastor,
J. S. RUTLEDGE.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas it has so pleased God to take from our midst one of our most faithful and beloved members, Mrs.

VERNA McINTOSH LEWIS, let it be resolved:

That we, as a church, Sunday school, and Missionary Society, mourn our loss, and that while her place can not be filled, let us look to Christ in this moment of sadness and pray God's greatest blessings to rest on and abide with her distressed husband, mother, two sisters, and brother, and especially may the little one left without a mother be ever watched over by the Guardian Angel. A MEMBER.

RESOLUTIONS BY SUNDAY SCHOOL AT LYMAN, MISS.

Whereas God has called to his rest our loved superintendent, Mr. LYMAN REEVES, be it resolved by this school, That we offer these few thoughts as a slight acknowledgment of our appreciation. For more than twenty years, longer than most of us have lived, he has been the active head of this school. Careful and thoughtful in his study and teaching of the Scriptures, he was also attentive to little conveniences in his care of the building where we meet. Ever cheerful in the face of many difficulties, his time, money and strength were given unstintingly for the benefit of this Sabbath school.

"And let the favor of the Lord our God be upon us and establish thou the work of our hands upon us, yea, the work of our hands, establish thou it." Ps. 90:17.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH THE CHURCH PAPERS?

By Robert B. Eleazer, Editor Missionary Voice.

If the Missouri brother who is advocating in the Nashville Advocate a consolidation of the many connectional and Conference papers, is looking for "a deafening howl" from all the members of the church's editorial fraternity, as he says, he is destined to disappointment. Here at least is one of the number who is ready to give the plan the heartiest approval and support.

I have repeatedly made exactly the same suggestion to editors, connectional men and others. Some weeks ago I was sent a questionnaire by Dr. C. D. Harris, the President of the Southern Methodist Editorial Association, asking the question, "If you were the General Conference what would you do with the church papers?" I immediately replied, "I would consolidate them all in one great weekly, big enough and well-enough edited to represent fairly every interest and section of the church."

The plan has many advantages. At present every paper is the competitor of every other, and the average Methodist family probably takes only one. That one of necessity gives priority, if not exclusive attention, to its own special subject, or to the affairs of its own area. The subscriber, therefore, gets no well-rounded view of the church's many interests. A general organ representing them all would unquestionably develop a much better-informed and more efficient membership.

Such an arrangement would be welcomed by our membership for the further reason that it would simplify the demands now made upon their loyalty and support. At present they are urged to subscribe for the Nashville Advocate, the Conference organ, the Missionary Voice, the Epworth Era, the School Standard, and what not, and sometimes made to feel that they are not good Methodists unless they take them all. The advantage from their standpoint of a single church paper would be obvious.

The pastor, too, would find the change a vast relief. As it is, he is expected to push the circulation of a half-dozen different periodicals, which is a difficult, if not impossible, task. How much easier and more effective would be his efforts in behalf of one great, inclusive church weekly, the equal of any in the world!

Indeed, given such a paper, we might seriously undertake to put it into every Southern Methodist home—through individual subscriptions, as far as possible, and after that by budgeting and subsidies.

I am thoroughly convinced (speaking personally and unofficially, of course), that the plan is feasible and that it would work to the best interests of the whole church. While I should deeply regret to relinquish my own delightful task as editor of the Voice, I am one hundred per cent for it.

SUMMER REVIVAL CAMPAIGN IN THE RURAL DISTRICTS.

My office is now anxiously waiting reports from the presiding elders as to the revival campaign in the rural districts during the summer. The office has furnished every rural pastor with a postal card ready to be filled out and mailed to the presiding elders. We shall be grateful to the rural pastors if they will now fill out these cards and mail them to their presiding elders. We shall appreciate prompt action on the part of the presiding elder in sending in his report to the Conference campaign director. (Let no one forget that we have a Conference campaign director in each Annual Conference.) Then we shall be happy to have the campaign director compile the reports from all the districts and send the summary to our office as soon as possible. If each pastor will make a report at once to his

Aches and Pains Of Rheumatism

Sometimes They Are Unbearable.

There are weather conditions that make rheumatism worse. They are not the same in the cases of all persons. Some rheumatics suffer more in dry, warm weather than in moist, cold weather, but all suffer more or less all the time.

The cause of rheumatism is an excess of uric acid in the blood, affecting the muscles and joints, causing aches and pains. Hence the blood must have attention for permanent results in the treatment of this disease.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has given entire satisfaction in thousands of cases. Do not fail to try it.

MRS. HAYDOCK SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

Followed Advice of Her Druggist's Wife and Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Chicago, Ill.—"I was in bed with a female trouble and inflammation and had four doctors but none of them did me any good. They all said I would have to have an operation. A druggist's wife told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took 22 bottles, never missing a dose and at the end of that time I was perfectly well. I have never had occasion to take it again as I have been so well. I have a six room flat and do all my work. My two sisters are taking the Compound upon my recommendation and you may publish my letter. It is the gospel truth and I will write to any one who wants a personal letter."—Mrs. E. H. HAYDOCK, 6824 St. Lawrence Avenue, Chicago Illinois.

Because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved Mrs. Haydock from an operation we cannot claim that all operations may be avoided by it, but many women have escaped operations by the timely use of this old fashioned root and herb medicine.

presiding elder, if each elder will send his report promptly to his Conference campaign director, and if each Conference campaign director will send his Conference report promptly to my office, we shall be able soon to give the church at large accurate reports as to the summer revivals. If some do not report, the reports will be defective and some districts and some Conferences will be done an injustice in the reports which go out from our office.

We have had many gracious revivals during the summer, perhaps the best in our history. Unofficial reports are favorable. But we want the exact facts as indicated in our prepared blanks. If all parties concerned will take this request seriously and act upon it, we shall be able to give the whole church the information it desires concerning our summer revivals.

OUR WORK IN BELGIUM.

Dr. W. B. Beauchamp, now in Europe, gives a most encouraging report concerning the progress of our work in the several European fields. In a letter just received, he says concerning our enterprises in Belgium.

"The school in Brussels is a real success. The first year one hundred and twenty-five enrolled—for the coming term the school is now full and applicants are being daily turned down. We need greatly enlargement. The very best people in Belgium are interested in this school for girls in Brussels. The orphanage at Brussels is steadily growing and here we have a fine opportunity for training workers. The Christian Clinic, which we own with other Protestant commissions of Belgium, can be made a great factor in Christian work.

"The Central Building is becoming more and more a center of varied Christian activities. The Sunday morning service is a most interesting occasion. Missionaries of all the Boards going and coming through Belgium will be there at service; visitors to the city, and many of the residents who are American or English. This service is also invaluable to our own workers, as well as to others who are here in the Y. W. C. A. or other American organizations. The esprit de corps in our Belgian workers is very fine. The representatives of other Protestant denominations have offices in our Central Building and thus we are presenting a united program in our plans for making Belgium Protestant.

"The opportunity for our mission is real and immediate—in Belgium we cannot expect certain results overnight, but if American Protestantism is to perform its full duty in this generation it must carry on an offensive program in Europe. The fact that this plan has become notable following the war is greatly agitating the Romanist Church. All of their papers in Europe are taking note and warning their people against the Protestant invasion of Europe. The opportunity for Protestantism in Europe is now—our church must do her part with a ringing evangelistic message."

Education without religion is education without God, and therefore education without the blessing of God.—M. H. Seymour.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The date for the Standard Training School for parents, teachers, preachers and other teachers of religious education will be June 1-7, 1922, at Grenada, Miss. I hear some have already engaged rooms for that occasion. The 27th and 28th of last month I went over to Meridian to help my neighbor, John Chambers, in a district institute. Methodism in this city has some commodious buildings. The preachers and other Sunday school workers are alert and are preparing to go forward and take their share of the city for the Methodist Church. Surely our church has a wonderful opportunity to mass her forces and put the consciousness of God in the hearts of thousands of people.

I had the privilege of hearing Gypsy Smith, Jr., preach in the great meeting at Canton. His name draws some people. He is Scriptural, direct, clear-cut, and deeply in earnest in his preaching. There is no doubt but that great good has been accomplished by his preaching in that section of the State.

Vaiden is one of the places recently visited. A class of young people in teacher training was partially organized under the leadership of Miss Quejette Snodgrass. Brother Shearer and his good wife are giving themselves completely to the people of this

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is said that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

charge. They are sowing in tears but the harvest will surely come some day.

Moorhead is prospering under the guidance of Brother Wroten. The church is crowded at the hours of Sunday school and preaching. We organized a class of fifteen to study The Pupil. We need to hold a Standard Training School at this point, alongside the Agricultural High School, so we may reach the future leaders of the church. The chief obstacle in the way of such a school is a lack of room—the same trouble when Jesus had to be born in a manger.

Sunflower is handicapped for lack of room to accommodate their growing school. White people are moving into this section to work the rich lands. Many of them do not attend the revival meetings, much less the regular services of the church. We have got to reach these people, or they will wreck what little civilization we have left.

The church at Drew is doing more kinds of good work than any I know. All departments are well organized, graded, and officered. A training class of twenty-two is well under way with Brother Duncan leading. A story hour is held every Sunday afternoon in charge of Mrs. Duncan with eighty children in attendance. Brother Duncan and his people are pressing the battle on every front. We thank God and take courage.

Do not forget it, men, we must have a place where we can hold a training school for our leaders in the Greenwood District.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Sunday, the 2d, was spent on the Seventh Avenue and the Hawkins Memorial charges.

I visited Oak Grove Sunday morning. We had a good service there. A Cradle Roll was provided for. They agreed to put on an enrollment campaign, and to observe Missionary Sunday.

In the afternoon we visited Fewells Survey Sunday school. Brother Davis has just organized this Sunday school and gotten it started. They are putting in a Cradle Roll, trying to have accurate records and agreed to support the Orphans' Home.

We were at Seventh Avenue that night. Had a good crowd. Brother Vickers is in high favor with his people and is doing a splendid work. He has worked well and faithfully.

Brother Davis has organized a church at Fewells Survey also and I think that his efforts there will bring much to the church and mean much to that community. I am glad to see the work spreading.

Just a short time till Conference. I trust that you will not forget the Sunday School Board and its work, with your other efforts.

We are desiring to help you in any way we can.

Plan for a Teacher Training Class. We will supply the teacher if you will furnish the pupils.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Field Secretary.

Recipe For Gray Hair

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.—Adv.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Executive Meeting of Conference Officers.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Conference met at First Church, New Orleans, September 20, to formulate plans for the fall work.

The reports of the officers showed that there had been an increase of more than 700 members in all departments during the second quarter. Mission Study and Bible Study showed an increase, as well as that of Supplies.

The Treasurer's report showed that not quite half of the pledges had been paid. We hope that the remaining two quarters will bring in the pledge in full, as we are so anxious to reach our goal.

The resignation of Mrs. Shaw, District Secretary of French Mission, was sent in, as she had moved out of the district. Mrs. G. W. Hatch was elected in her place. Mrs. Jno. A. Pharr, of Berwick, and Mrs. R. T. Moore, of Shreveport, were appointed on the committee with the corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, to visit the Council Institutions.

A committee on By-Laws, which is composed of the President, Corresponding Secretary and Recording Secretary, with two members at large, was completed by the appointment of Mrs. Beach Carre and Mrs. Jno. Parker, of New Orleans.

A circular letter will be sent out by the Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. S. A. Montgomery to each auxiliary and District Secretary, giving the plans worked out by the Committee.

The Letter.

Dear Co-Worker: At the executive meeting of the Conference officers held in New Orleans on September 20, it was decided that the Corresponding Secretary should send out a circular letter to the District Secretaries and Auxiliaries suggesting plans of work for the fall and urging an enthusiastic response to committee reports adopted at the annual meeting in Baton Rouge and published in the Conference Minutes. We are entering upon the last quarter of the year and to reach our goal some hard work will have to be accomplished.

Young People's Department.

The Superintendent of the Young People's Work reported that there had been a larger increase in finances, but in the number of auxiliaries and members a standstill. She says: "As Superintendent of Young People let us strive to reach our goal. There are three points I want to lay special stress upon, and if each Superintendent will endeavor to use her influence, much good can be accomplished."

"1. Organize New Societies. Do you not know of some church near that is without a Young People's organization?"

"2. Conservation of Weak Societies. Try to visit a weak society and encourage and help them. If your society is the weak one, give more of your time and prayer in an endeavor to overcome the weak points."

"3. Improvement of Good Societies. There is always room for improvement in every Society. Possibly it is the prayer life that is the weak point. Without prayer we cannot reap a rich harvest."

Adult Auxiliaries.

These three lines of work are suggested for the Adult as well as Young People's Organizations. The auxiliaries can aid the District Secretaries in this way and double the fruits of their labors.

Mission Study.

October has been designated as Mission Study Month, when classes shall be organized in Mission and Bible Study. The Conference Superintendent of Mission Study, Mrs. Cunningham says: "Please include in your message this personal word to my superintendents of Mission Study throughout the Conference."

"The theme for the year in our Department is the unfinished task of the churches. The task in the auxiliary is unfinished and you leave off an important branch of your missionary work when you neglect the Mission and Bible Study classes. We want to make October the time for finishing our task and rounding out the year's work as planned."

"At our Annual Meeting in De Ridder next February or March, I will have a pennant for every auxiliary in the State and on that pennant will be placed gold and silver stars. The gold star will represent the number of Bible classes you have had this year and the silver star, the number of Mission Study classes. Now go to work, Superintendents. Order your books (listed on the Information page of the Conference Minutes), organize your whole auxiliary in one large class or several smaller ones and report to me so that I can make your pennant and give you credit for work done. Now please be much in prayer for His guidance. Do not let your delegate go to De Ridder with a heart-ache because she has no gold or silver star on her pennant. Let us 'push towards the mark of higher and better service for the remainder of the year.' Write Mrs. Cunningham for any information desired. Let every auxiliary observe the week of prayer in November.

Children's Work and Social Service.

The Superintendents of Children's Work and of Social Service were not present at the meeting, but we bespeak for them earnest co-operation in their respective departments.

Financial Work.

The treasurer, Mrs. Carver, reported that less than half of the Conference Pledge had been paid during the first and second quarters and urges full returns by "Harvest Day" in December. She will send you a special message along that line.

Auxiliaries, measure yourselves by the "Standard of Excellence" on page 92 of the Conference Minutes and see where you stand and then turn to page 5 and say we'll help to reach that "Goal." If you need help and information, write to your District Secretary. Invite her to visit your auxiliary. The Conference Secretary is always willing and anxious to help you in any way she can.

Get your reports in promptly by the first of October in order that you may be included in the third quarter's report. Then get immediately to work on the fourth quarter that there may not be a grand rush at the end of the year with a possibility of coming up short.

The District Secretaries are counting on you, the Conference is counting on the district, the Council is counting on the Conference and the Mission field is counting on the Council. God is counting on us all.

Yours in the work,
MRS. S. A. MONTGOMERY.

To Auxiliary Corresponding Secretaries.

You are doubtless aware of the fact that the last session of the Council put the responsibility for promoting family worship in the local congregation in the hands of the corresponding secretary.

I count it a privilege to have you as a fellow worker in establishing a program of worship and religious education in the homes of our people.

Allow me to make the following suggestions in which Mrs. Lipscomb heartily concurs:

1. Confer with your pastor as to what has already been done to enroll members in the Family Worship League.

2. Tell him the plan of the Woman's Missionary Society to have family worship in every home in which there is a member of the Woman's Missionary Society and offer hearty cooperation in any plans he may have in mind.

3. Under any circumstances that may arise, see to it that every member of your local society, who has not already done so, enrolls in the Family Worship League by signing a card, and seeing that the cards are sent to Rev. P. L. Cobb, 160 Fourth Avenue, North.

4. On receipt of the cards we will send to each signer a copy of "Keep the Home Fires Burning" with the program of worship for the second half of the current year.

5. A list of all those who sign cards should be kept as a part of the record of the work of your society and the number reported to your Conference Corresponding Secretary.

6. Frequent meetings of the members of the Family Worship League should be held for helpful conference. An opportunity should be afforded for discussion and giving experiences at the regular meetings of the Society.

Family Worship is the first step in the program of religious education in the home, the church and the school that will develop an efficient force for the evangelization of the world. It is glorious to have even the least part in this great enterprise.

Praying God's richest blessings on you and your work and with best wishes.

Yours sincerely,
P. L. COBB,

FROM THE SATARTIA CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Please allow me space to tell the brethren how we are getting along over here on Yazoo River. The river is low in the banks as it always is at this season of the year and the breeze from over it is cool and refreshing. I tell you, Brother Editor, it is appreciated during this hot weather.

We have closed all of our revival meetings for the year. Our meeting at Wesley Chapel began on the third Sunday in July and was conducted by Rev. M. K. Miller, who did able preaching and gave some of his special solos, which were enjoyed to the fullest. The church was very much revived, but no additions.

We began our meeting at Mt. Olivet on the fourth Sunday in July. Rev. B. W. Lewis did the preaching and much good was accomplished. We had an old-time revival. Upon several occasions the membership met at the altar to be baptized with the Holy Spirit. We had a great revival. Twenty-nine joined the church.

The first Sunday in August found us at Satartia, where Rev. B. F. Lewis expounded the gospel. I feel that I have spent that much time in a theological seminary. We had several old-time altar services in which the Spirit of God made himself felt. There were no members, but the church has been greatly helped by his deep preaching.

I have three school appointments in the afternoon and these people prevailed on their pastor to hold a few days' meeting. We began at Shackelford and had two additions to the church. From there to Carter, and such crowds you never saw at a schoolhouse meeting. There were two or more housefuls. We preached here from Monday night till Sunday night and at the close of the service we received into the church twenty-five members, most of them grown-up people, nineteen of whom were on profession of faith. I have never been in a greater meeting.

We closed our round at Fears School, and the Lord wonderfully blessed us there. We received seven on profession of faith. In all of my schoolhouse meetings I received into the church thirty-four. The young preacher, not very old in the cause of the Kingdom, feels that the Lord might bless his efforts even in a revival meeting. I immersed three candidates for baptism during these meetings.

Brethren, pray that the Lord may continue to use me in his Kingdom.
Amen! B. H. WILLIAMS, P. C.

FROM THE DENHAM SPRINGS CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: I trust that you will find space for a few lines from here, as this is my fourth year with this work and we have had a pleasant stay, this being the best year of the four for the spiritual part of the church.

Our first revival was held by Brother J. W. Booth, of Keener Memorial Church—a good meeting with 13 accessions to the church.

In the second, I was assisted a few days by Brother A. J. Coburn, of Ponchatoula, and in the third meeting by J. L. Frazier, of Springfield. There were six accessions to the church. In the next one, I was assisted by Brother Booth, who held the first, with 11 accessions; then by B. D. Watson, of Baker, with 10 accessions; then with J. L. Cady, of St. Francisville, with 3 accessions. We have received forty-odd into the churches. Our Sunday schools are very good; and prayer meetings are more interesting.

This is the end of my fourth quadrennium since I joined the Conference.
J. S. RUTLEDGE.

"I MUST TAKE THE MESSAGE."

This is the way the Christian Mexicans in Texas feel about it. A letter from Rev. F. S. Orderdonk, the Superintendent of the Texas Mexican Mission, writes:

"I have just visited our Mexican work in Houston, Texas. Most of the year we have had no pastor for that church, and yet the faithful people have kept the work going right along. There are two exhorters who do all the work of a pastor. When one is in charge of the regular week-night meetings, the other is holding services in some nearby suburb or ward of the city. Through the activity of these faithful people, twenty souls have been received into the church on profession of faith during the year and the prospect is that every cent of their three hundred dollar assessment will be paid.

"I was in Rio Grande City last week, where we have had no pastor for some months, but the church work goes on just the same. The same is true in Carrizo Springs. Wherever we have a Mexican Christian, we have the nucleus of a congregation. He carries the church with him. Scores of these people have received the Gospel in this country and are returning to their native land bearing the message to their people. It is beautiful to hear them say: 'Yes, I must return to my country some day and take the Message.'"

MR. DODSON WARNS
USERS OF CALOMEL

Says Drug Acts Like Dynamite on Liver and You Lose a Day's Work.

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel today and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated tomorrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

BURIED IN BUSINESS.

We wonder how many men there are who are buried in their office, or store, or farm? "Born a man, died a grocer," ran the old epitaph upon the moss-grown stone; and it may have been startlingly true. They tell us a thorn is an aborted leaf; and some business successes may be but aborted humanity. Christianity has no quarrel with honest business. It never abuses a man for being a success. But it insists in season and out of season, that the man is more than his business, and that the sons of God cannot afford to forget their high calling nor to allow themselves to be buried in any business, no matter how lucrative nor how important it may be. We must keep our souls alive. The man who becomes oblivious to the calls of a wider humanity, and who understands nothing but the story of his own business, has really died to God's great world, i. e., to all of it outside his own office. The home, the State, the church of God, have all a claim upon men, and only by obeying their righteous demands can a man reach his highest level; but if he does listen, if he does keep alive to the great world outside his own business, he will at least avoid making that business his grave.—Christian Guardian.

VIGOR OF YOUTH IN

A NEW DISCOVERY

Science Produces a Vitalizer Superior to Famous Gland Treatment—Magic Power of a Bark From Africa.

Have you lost your youth, vigor and "pep"? Does life seem dull and work a grind? Don't worry. Science has discovered a new vitalizer superior even to the much discussed "goat gland" and "monkey gland" treatment.

The principal ingredient is an extract from the bark of an African tree. It is said to be the most amazing invigorator ever discovered. Combined with it are other tonic and vitalizing elements of proved merit. In most cases, the compound produces marked improvement in a day or two, and in a short time the vitality is raised, the circulation improved and the glow of health is felt in every part.

The new vitalizer contains expensive chemicals, but manufacturing in enormous quantities has brought the cost within the reach of all. Furthermore, the laboratories producing this new vitalizer, which is called Re-Nu-Tabs, are so confident of its power that they offer it on the basis of "no results, no pay."

Any reader of this paper may test the new discovery without risk. Send no money, but just your name and address, to the Re-Nu Laboratories, 227C Gateway Station, Kansas City, Mo., and a full treatment of Re-Nu-Tabs will be mailed. Deposit $2 and postage with the postman on delivery. If not delighted by the results at the end of a week, notify the laboratories and your money will be refunded in full. Do not hesitate about accepting this test offer, as it is fully guaranteed.—Advertisement.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A SMALL MATTER.

Some years ago the Argentine ant was introduced into New Orleans; just exactly how, nobody seems to know. This ant is an insignificant little thing, and in the beginning of its history in this country it attracted practically no attention. But it began to multiply with prodigious rapidity, and now it is a pest that sorely tries the patience of practically every householder in the city, and its ravages result in the loss of vast sums of money every year. A recent investigator declares that the people of New Orleans spend between $200,000 and $300,000 annually for poison in the attempt to eradicate the pest—with very poor results. An expert of the Bureau of Entomology now asserts that it will take an expenditure of $25,000 in a lump sum to destroy the pest. This is a problem that we are not especially concerned about here except as it furnishes an illustration of how little sins almost unconsciously grow into enemies that ruin the life and wreck the soul, and of how difficult it is to leave off evil habits after they have become established by long use. The best time to get rid of the Argentine ant was when it first appeared—but nobody thought it would ever do any harm.

GOOD PREACHING.

We believe it can be said without fear of successful contradiction that people generally to-day are anxious to hear good preaching. It is a noteworthy fact that the men who have acquired the reputation of being really good preachers are always able to command a hearing in city or in country; and if they live up to their reputation, they can hold their congregations from service to service and from Sunday to Sunday. The official boards of churches are beginning to suggest that their great need is for men who can preach. Good pastors, good organizers, "good mixers" are still in demand, but the good preacher is coming again to be given first place in plans for strengthening the church and developing the religious life of the community. People know pretty well, too, what good preaching is, and they know the process by which it is made possible—and they never expect very much of the lazy man or the gadabout. The preacher who has so many things to do that he cannot find time to prepare for his pulpit ministrations is—to use a commonplace illustration—like the man who goes fishing without any bait. The most critical congregation will not judge too harshly if the preacher does not deliver two great discourses every Sunday, but even the most loyal saints grow weary of a steady diet of platitudes. The preacher's greatest opportunity to-day is in the pulpit.

THE CHALLENGE OF JESUS.

Myriad cries are coming to us, and myriad cross-currents are sweeping over us, urging us hither and thither. Some of these cries we turn a deaf ear to, and some of these cross-currents we heed not at all; but it cannot be so with the call that comes to us from the Christ and with the flood of holy influences that roll upon us from the Cross. The challenge of Jesus comes to us straight as a beam of light and clear as a bugle call. We disregard it at our peril. Jesus challenges our admiration by the heroism of his life; he challenges our faith by the nobility and power of his ministry; he challenges our love by the infinite tenderness of his own love for us; he challenges our whole-hearted service by the greatness and urgency of his work in the world. By every token we should rise above our narrowness and selfishness and ascend the height whereon he stands, and catch the magnificent vision over which his eye sweeps, and breathe in that indomitable spirit of optimism and courage that characterizes him, and throw ourselves unreservedly into the work of the propagation of his kingdom. And then, though we have to fight hard, we shall win the victory, and though we be cast down, we shall establish his kingdom, and though we suffer, we shall reign with him, for we shall see the fulfillment of his words, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself."

GLASS HOUSES.

We have previously had occasion to express the opinion that the Ku Klux Klan is an organization that is not at all needed in our present-day civilization, the very fact that it is a secret organization making it at least inexpedient that it should undertake to exercise any controlling influence upon the normal activities of a community; nevertheless, we are at a loss to understand why the Knights of Columbus, a secret organization of the Roman Catholic Church, which has, itself, been charged with holding views that make it inimical to the largest liberty of action of the individual in political matters, should be so greatly concerned, as we judge it is from news items in the secular press, about the legal investigation and suppression of the Klan. It is an old saying that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones.

THE GOSPEL OF A FAIR CHANCE.

Whatever else the story of Judas may teach, it certainly proves that Christianity believes in the gospel of a fair chance. This man who had it in his heart to betray his Master was chosen by that one to be one of his intimate companions; he was the recipient of all the privileges that were given the other apostles; he had the same opportunity to learn the way of life and to adjust himself to its requirements that they had; he was given special honor in that he was made the treasurer of the company. He failed—but he had a fair chance.

WHAT CHRISTIANITY IS WORTH.

In this day when so many solutions are being proposed for the problems of the world and so many remedies suggested for its ills, many of which professedly leave the Christian religion out of account, it might be well for those who are disposed to try these schemes, plans, and programs, to pause long enough to ask the simple question, "What is Christianity worth anyway?" and seek to find its answer before they turn aside from the only force that has yet demonstrated its ability to bring order out of chaos. And that they may not be put to overmuch toil in finding that answer, let them imagine, if they can, what the world to-day would be if God had not sent his Son into it to save those who might believe in him and if millions of people had not exercised the faith that made them "new creatures in Christ Jesus." The world is bad enough, we grant; but Christianity is the only thing that has made it fit to live in at all. And we have an invincible faith that the Kingdom of God is coming upon earth.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

By Hon. C. L. Bates.

Third Paper.

I.

The disruptive proceedings of the General Conference of 1844 arose upon the construction and application of what is sometimes called the "Compromise Law of 1816," to (1) Mr. Harding's appeal from a judgment of the Baltimore Conference, suspending him as a traveling preacher and annulling his ordination as an elder, and (2) an original proceeding commenced in the General Conference against Bishop James O. Andrew to depose him and degrade him from his episcopal office in the church.

In the first case, the General Conference sat as an appellate judicial tribunal, admitted the appeal and assumed jurisdiction of the cause, heard and disposed of it upon the record transmitted to it by the Baltimore Conference, affirming the judgment from which the appeal was prosecuted.

In the second case, the General Conference sat as a parliamentary body, proceeding according to its ordinary rules, acting through committees, reports and resolutions of the body, deciding all questions and issues by a plurality vote; the case did not present a single aspect of a judicial trial.

II.

The "Compromise Law of 1816" was the crystallization of a law of the church which had existed in some form since 1785 in respect to that certain "Civil Institution" fastened upon the country by the British Crown in Colonial times, and which was a source of discord among the preachers from the Christmas Conference; and the statute of 1816 was an "adjustment of the whole subject * * * as a virtual, though informal, contract of mutual concession and forbearance, between the North and South known and existing as distinct parties, in relation to the vexed question" of the "Civil Institution." It was a legislative act of the General Conference; and it was more than that: "It partakes of the nature of a grave compact, and is invested with all the sacredness and sanctions of a solemn treaty, binding respectively the well-known parties to its terms and stipulations."

The statute was very brief and simple. It enacted, in substance, that no one acquiring and retaining an interest in the prescribed "Civil Institution" should "be eligible to any official station in the church," with a provisional exception of all persons residing in a State whose laws did not permit a legal divestiture of such interest; and that in such manner as to give full effect to the policy of the statute.

The validity and binding force of the statute had been reaffirmed by the General Conference at its sessions in 1836 and 1840; and indeed it had been accepted by both parties as a covenant and compact from which neither could recede; it was regarded as fundamental, and as constituting the "bond of union," peace and amity of all American Methodism.

III.

In both the cases above referred to, the facts were uncontroverted; and those facts are of record to-day, and may be inspected and read by any person who may desire to do it. And under the record facts the accused in both cases were within the provisional exception of the statute, and were innocent of violating it beyond all reasonable doubt. And yet they were both condemned by the General Conference of 1844; three-quarters of a century have passed, and no reparation has been made. The violation of the statute, the breach of the covenant, the repudiation of the compact, were manifest and flagrant.

IV.

The procedure adopted by the General Conference against Bishop Andrew was what is known in English parliamentary procedure as a "Bill of Attainder," and which is defined to be a "legislative act, which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial."

In such cases "the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party, without any of the forms and safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proof produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or otherwise; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense." (Cummings vs. Missouri, 3 Wall. 227.)

The above definition is an exact and precise definition of what happened to Bishop Andrew: there was no indictment or other written accusation charging him with a violation of any law of the church, or informing him of the nature and cause of the accusation against him.

The preamble of the report presented on May 21, which was made the basis of the prosecution, recited in the most general way that the Bishop had "become connected with" the proscribed "Civil Institution," by "marriage and otherwise"; but it did not charge a violation of the "Compromise Law of 1816."

It is a fundamental rule of criminal pleading that an indictment upon a statute, charging a statutory offense, must fully, directly, and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished; and if the statute contain any proviso or exception descriptive of the offense, the indictment must, by apt words, negative the exception.

No valid indictment or accusation could have been drawn under the Compromise Law except in conformity to the rule above stated; anything less would not have charged an offense, nor formed an issue upon which a trial could have been had, nor have informed the accused of the nature and cause of the accusation against him and against which he was required to defend himself.

But the rule of pleading was wholly disregarded in Bishop Andrew's case; not only was there a failure to negative the exception, but not a single element or ingredient of the offense created by the statute was alleged, and the preamble, considered as an indictment or written accusation, was an absolute nullity, and the judgment rendered on it was null and void.

The written statement of Bishop Andrew, which was accepted as true and on motion incorporated in the preamble as a part thereof, brought him clearly within the exception of the statute; no other proof was adduced, and the facts as stated by the accused were uncontroverted throughout the proceeding. There was no issue of fact in the case. The only question before the Conference was, whether the Bishop was upon his own statement guilty of a violation of the "Compromise Law."

The preamble was followed by a resolution, denouncing a penalty against the Bishop, written into the record before conviction; and that penalty, though dexterously defined, was ecclesiastical death—a capital execution.

The facts as stated by the accused himself being incontestable, and, indeed, accepted by the General Conference as indubitably true, the conclusion is inescapable that the destruction of Bishop Andrew was predetermined; and a careful examination of the record of the General Conference at that session can leave no doubt that the numerous memorials in respect to the proscribed "Civil Institution," presented during the early days of the session, and the active interest in Mr. Harding's appeal, were subsidiary to that end.

McTyeire, in his History of Methodism, page 621, discussing Mr. Harding's appeal, declared:

"The reader of the journal, which is spread out with unusual fullness at this point, cannot fail to see that the chief interest in this case lay in its bearing upon another, of wider import, and that it was debated and decided with the latter constantly in view."

The rejection of the conciliatory measure suggested by the bishops, and especially when considered in the light of subsequent developments demonstrates beyond all controversy that the judgment deposing Bishop Andrew from the episcopal office was determined upon before the trial was commenced. (Tigert's Constitutional History of American Methodism, 2d Ed. 443-446.)

V.

It is plain, clear and manifest from the official record in Bishop Andrew's case that the majority party of the delegates in the General Conference of 1844 did not believe that he had violated the "Compromise Law" of the church; that he was not charged with a violation of, nor tried for, nor convicted of a violation of that law; and that he was not deposed and degraded from his episcopal office for a violation of that law.

By inserting and incorporating, upon motion of Mr. Drake, of Mississippi, the exculpatory statement of the bishop into the famous preamble, the General Conference found, affirmatively, as a fact that he had not violated the "Compromise Law." That finding was a solemn judgment of the Conference, as much so as any other ruling or judgment made and entered in the cause. It is a rule of parliamentary law that the recital of facts in a preamble, when that preamble has been accepted and adopted, is thereby established as true and becomes the deliberate judgment of the parliamentary body.

The only finding of fact the General Conference ever made in the case was that: "Bishop Andrew has become connected with slavery as stated in his communication." That is the record made in the case by the General Conference. That finding was, in both fact and law, a verdict that the accused was not guilty, and a solemn adjudication of his innocence, to the full extent of the competency of the General Conference to make any adjudication in the cause.

The incontrovertible fact from the record is that the proceedings against Bishop Andrew were not based upon any supposition, theory or allegation that he had violated any law of the church. The record in the case shows that the majority who were pressing the prosecution were gentlemen of high standing, great learning and ability, fully conversant with ecclesiastical law, and that they had availed themselves of the aid of eminent legal counsel. Mr. Hamline, who was facile princeps in the prosecution, was manifestly learned in the English parliamentary proceedings in "Bills of Attainder," with the adroitness to conceal the real character of the remedy he was pursuing against Bishop Andrew. The writer knows of no great trial, whether ecclesiastical, or a common law jury trial, or by impeachment, or other extraordinary remedy, which was conducted with more dexterity, skill and ability, than the prosecution of Bishop Andrew. Mr. Hamline was rewarded with a bishopric.

VI.

What, then, were theory and principle of Government, law and judicial administration and procedure, which constituted the basis of the prosecution of Bishop Andrew? In the light of the record, the answer is not difficult.

The whole proceeding, from beginning to end, was based upon the openly avowed claim and contention that the General Conference, sitting as a legislative body, was vested with the transedent power to depose and degrade the Bishop from his episcopal office, by legislative enactment, although he had violated no law of the church, and had lived a pious and blameless life as a man and an officer of the church.

The leadership of the prosecution alleged and insisted upon a principle and rule of action which they defined as the "universal supremacy of the General Conference, legislative, judicial and executive," unrestrained by and superior to the constitution and laws of the church, and requiring the authority of no law to effectuate its will against any "traveling preacher" or bishop, who may have, from any cause, become obnoxious to a majority of the Conference. (McTyeire's History of Methodism, 631; Tigert's Constitutional History of American Methodism, 2d Ed., 375.)

Bishop Andrew was deposed by a legislative resolution, directed against him individually by name, and not by judicial sentence convicting him of any offense.

That the proceeding against him, as here contended is, to all intents and purposes, both substance and in form, properly classified as a "Bill of Attainder," as employed in the British House of Commons, by the Plantagenets, the Tudors and other monarchs in their aggressions against the rights of their subjects, cannot be denied.

In respect to that procedure, it is said, in substance by an English law writer: Bills of Attainder and bills of pains and penalties are instances of the transcendent power of the legislature to punish offenses otherwise than according to pre-ordained law, by a discretionary severity in lieu of an invariable standard. They furnish an instance of the legislature quitting its proper province, and suspending the judicial functions; and that, in order to punish the transgression of laws which they have neglected to propound. In punishing criminals by bill, the king, lords and commons are accusers and judges, charging, convicting and condemning, uno flatu. (Dwarris on Statutes, 2d Ed., 254.)

So odious was the remedy, and so inconsistent with free political institutions, that it was inhibited by the Federal Constitution. (U. S. Const. Art 1, sections 9 and 10; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall 333; Cummings v. Missouri, 3 Wall. 277.)

This "extra-judicial" proceeding, as the Southern delegates called it, against Bishop Andrew, was the chief immediate cause of the separation, and one of the great mischiefs to be remedied by the establishment of a separate connection, and the adoption of a constitution and the creation of a church government free from such evils. Southern Methodists, by the act of separation, declared that they could not and would not live under a General Conference claiming "Universal Supremacy."

SOUTHERN METHODISM IN THE WEST.

By Rev. S. H. C. Burgin, D. D.

I have just returned from a five weeks' trip of inspection and investigation through the West in the interest of the Board of Church Extension, which has assisted so largely in building our churches there. I traveled about 7500 miles through the States of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Oregon, Washington and Montana. Although not a stranger to that vast section, having been pastor in Butte, Montana, twenty years ago, the development which has taken place in the past few years was surprising. Towns and cities have grown as if by magic and vast areas of land have been brought under cultivation, while on every hand are evidences of material prosperity.

At Colorado Springs I faced a great congregation and found the pastor, Dr. R. E. Dickenson, in high favor. He has done a noble work there and is planning wisely for an adequate plant and a great future. In company with Dr. L. E. Todd I visited the Woodmen's Sanitarium, and was impressed that Southern Methodism would do well to have such an institution in that wonderful climate. At Walsenburg the Denver Conference was in session, Bishop Murrah presiding with his usual grace and courtesy. Reports of the pastors reflected a year of marked progress. New churches are being enterprised and a healthful increase in membership was recorded. This is a heroic and optimistic group of preachers who are bringing things to pass despite obstacles. I was impressed with the number and personnel of young men in that Conference.

Arizona, by every token, is our territory, and our work there is moving forward under the direction of Dr. J. E. Harrison, who is in charge of the Phoenix District, and Rev. W. J. Sims, presiding elder of the Safford District. Phoenix is one of the most beautiful little cities of 40,000 people I have seen anywhere. It is in the famous Salt River Valley, which is under irrigation, the water coming from the Roosevelt Dam, and the soil is wonderfully productive. Our old Central Church property in Phoenix has been sold and a valuable new site secured and a building to cost about $125,000 complete is under way. Rev. Cecil Aker is the successful pastor. We have several other churches in that city and vicinity in operation, while others are being enterprised by the able presiding elder throughout that section. A splendid new church has just been erected at Prescott, the old Territorial Capital, by the assistance of war work funds and the Board of Church Extension, and the work prospers there. I understand that a valuable site for a new church has been acquired right at the gate of the State University at Tucson through the efforts of Presiding Elder Sims and Bishop Du Bose. Our work in Arizona has made marked progress during the past year and we have a splendid future there if taken care of now.

At Los Angeles I preached to a great congregation in Trinity Church and found Bob Shuler in high favor, and preaching to great crowds. At Long Beach, Rev. R. P. Howell is now building a Sunday school plant to cost about $25,000, and when this has been completed they intend to build a $50,000 auditorium. A new church has been built at Seima by the indefatigable H. G. Wills. At Downey and Merced the brethren are preparing to build suitable plants, while at Petaluma, located about fifty miles north of San Francisco, the old church is being rebuilt at a cost of $14,000.

San Francisco has always been a difficult field for evangelical Christianity. Our Fitzgerald Memorial Church is a splendid modern structure and the pastor, Rev. Jos. A. Smith, has a plan for a forward movement, which, if inaugurated, I believe will bring increased returns. This church is located in the close-in apartment district, and its progress is only through great difficulties. Within a block is located the Mary Elizabeth Home for Girls, a gift of Mrs. L. H. Glide, and under the direction of Miss Jackson and her assistants, it is doing a great work. Our Wesley House is well located for the future, and our church there, under the direction of Rev. L. P. Shearer, is making a valuable contribution in the face of great difficulties. Rev. A. T. O'Rear, at Pioneer Memorial Church, Oakland, has had a successful year and the outlook there is good. The three chapels built under the direction of Bishop Du Bose in the Alameda and Berkeley District are well located and should eventually yield good returns. The Bishop is abundant in labors and plans, and he works with an enthusiasm that is contagious.

The writer is under special obligations to Dr. W. H. Nelson, the talented editor of the Pacific Advocate, for many courtesies. He is doing faithful and telling work as editor of that paper. We had royal fellowship together.

At Portland the Northwest Conference was in session, with Bishop Du Bose presiding. I had the privilege of addressing the Conference in the morning and preaching at night. Optimism prevailed among the brethren and the reports indicated a net increase of sixteen per cent in membership during the year with several new churches under construction or consideration. That is a wonderful country in its present day greatness and future possibilities, and our brethren there have both vision and courage.

On my return I visited Butte, Montana, preached to our congregation there, looked over the situation, and reached Windsor, Missouri, for the opening day of the Southwest Missouri Conference, where I had the privilege of speaking to the congregation the opening night and also the following morning. This is the Conference in which I was licensed, ordained and admitted, and it is very near to my heart. My fellowship there was delightful, and I know of no nobler company of men anywhere than the preachers and laymen of the Southwest Missouri Conference.

On my return to the office at Louisville I found the usual large number of communications from the brethren over the field and paused there three or four days before leaving for the Louisville Conference and engagements in Washington and Baltimore, after which a swing around the Connection attending the Annual Conference sessions.

As a result of this Western trip I wish to make these observations: First, as a denomination we are at home in the West, Southwest and Northwest, in the territory occupied by us. Many of the pioneers and most influential early settlers of that country were from the South and were Southern Methodists, and they are still going there.

Second, the field is so large and in many places unoccupied that we are needed there as a denomination, there being opportunity for all evangelical denominations. A very small percentage of the Protestant population in the West is identified in the way of actual membership with any church. In the providence of God, we are there as a denomination; we have made a great contribution to that section, and, by the grace of God, propose to remain there.

Third, our pastors in the South, as a matter of conscience, should notify our pastors in the West when their members remove there, that they may be saved to our church and cause.

LITTLE TALKS ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By Honorable Josephus Daniels.

Former Secretary of the Navy of the United States.

The Privilege of Women.

IV.

It is a popular pastime for those who have little wealth to prepare elaborate plans whereby rich men may invest their accumulations. "If I had a million," is a favorite play. In most cases those who think they know better what to do with money than the possessor of wealth, would be as unsuccessful in its use as they have been unsuccessful in amassing a fortune. The leaders of the church believe when its membership, and others, see the field ready for the harvest, men who have both wealth and vision will make the investment which is essential for going forward with their educational institutions.

The message to Southern Methodists to-day is: Foreign mission fields and home fields are undermanned for lack of trained men and women to carry the gospel to those who sit in darkness. History teaches us that most Christian workers are trained in Christian institutions, and to-day there is not a college in America, supported by the church, which is not overcrowded. Most of them are compelled to turn away aspiring youths because they lack dormitories, class rooms, and teachers. The call upon all men and women of means is to provide these facilities without delay.

And may I emphasize women? This is woman's age, and much of the wealth of the South is in the hands of women. What of their duty to their sisters who are growing up with slight educational advantages? Have not those endowed with wealth, small or large, been "called to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

The first woman to receive a full college degree in America was Miss Catherine Brewer, who graduated in 1840 from the Georgia Female College, now Wesleyan College, a Methodist institution, which early saw woman's rightful and large place in the life of the world. This first Southern woman graduate was the mother of Admiral Benson, who held the highest position as naval officer and did a great work in operating the ships of the American navy in the world war. He recognizes the training of this good mother. Are not his many distinctions and decorations due largely to her training in an institution that was a pioneer in the larger culture of Southern women? All honor to the Methodists of the South in the pre-war days who established that institution. Is it very creditable to the Methodists who succeed them that for the lack of large contributions women's colleges have struggled and failed to render the service so sorely needed?

The longing for immortality is fixed in the human heart. Do we not agree that the only way by which men and women may live after death in the hearts of their fellows is by their deeds? Indeed, the big duty for a woman who has means is to follow her heart's prompting to make life broader and easier for her sisters. How can she do this so well as by opening new doors and larger doors to the girls who are looking eagerly and earnestly for the privilege of an education to fit them to carry the gospel abroad, to brighten the home, to be efficient in business?

I know a young woman in Washington City, earning her living as a government clerk, preparing herself after office hours to become a missionary. She must wait years to go to her field because she lacked the funds for early preparation. Scholarships and fellowships in church training schools should invite such young women to embrace the opportunities and be able to go in the strength of youth to the great work in distant lands which beckons them. Without the endowment of our schools how can this be accomplished?

If I could send one message to the women of the South, and particularly to Methodist women blessed with money, which means opportunity, it would be: Make a systematic study of the facilities for the education of your young sisters in your community and State and section. That would be all. If they will, with woman's insight and woman's grasp, learn the true conditions and envisage the great needs and their own privilege—if this is done the women with more money than they really need will alone contribute the money necessary to equip and endow the colleges for women which are looking for the facilities for extending their usefulness to the Christian Education Movement.

IN MEMORIAM—DR. J. M. HENRY.

By Rev. Franklin N. Parker, D.D.

It is about thirty years ago since I first met J. M. Henry. He came to Louisiana to enter the itinerant service fresh from Vanderbilt University. I think his first appointment was as supply on the Lafourche Mission. He very soon found his place among the young men in the Conference. I was especially drawn to him and became intimate with him after he was appointed to the Carrollton Avenue Church in New Orleans. He was often in my home and we met often in many associations. When the news of his death came it was with the shock of a loss of one near and dear. I had long since formed high estimate of his ability as a man and minister, but the knowledge of his loss makes his full character and ability stand out in a clearer light.

Brother Henry was a man of deep personal piety. He gave himself to God in all the strength of a man of profound convictions. He entered the ministry with a sense of obligation I have rarely seen equaled. I shall never forget the way in which he told me of the decision he made to enter the ministry. It was characteristic of the man. Modesty and determination were marked traits in his character. His humility was unobtrusive, but every one who knew him felt its presence. But his convictions were strong. His courage was boundless. He possessed in an unusual degree this combination of strong conviction and deep humility. You always knew where to find him.

He was naturally reserved, not given to speaking about his spiritual life in a public way. When the time to bear witness came, he would do it quietly and simply. But he would talk of the deep things of God with deep interest in the more intimate circles of friends. He knew God and was a man of prayer.

He had a capacity for friendship which bound him by hooks of steel to those who became intimate with him. His open sincerity and deep interest in life made him take hold. He formed strong friendships in the charges served by him. In many places in Louisiana there will be friends who feel a personal sorrow in his going.

From the beginning he identified himself with the State of his adoption. Coming from South Carolina, his native State, after he had grown to man's estate, he deliberately decided to make his home with us, and he became one of us utterly. He came seeking a place to do good and found a field of service and a home which he learned to love as if born there.

Dr. Henry was a man of wide and exact information. He kept up with the world's work. He often surprised me by the unusual extent of his interest in remote countries and strange peoples. You could depend upon the accuracy of his statements, and his insight into public affairs. He was well read in the literature of theology and had clear and positive doctrinal convictions. His preaching was positive, informing and evangelical. He excelled as an administrator. I was with him in the cabinet for a number of years. He was wise in suggestion, often finding a way out of a difficult situation, and he was eminently fair in representing men. He did his best to deal justly and helpfully with the men whom he represented. He made as few mistakes as any man I saw in his administrative work. He tried to do the right thing.

I feel that the Conference has lost an able man. At the general boards of the church where he served he made a strong impression. He has fought a good fight and kept the faith. I feel that a great gap has come into my own life. I have written these words as a personal tribute to a true friend and faithful fellow-worker. May God grant that we all may be found faithful unto death.

A SUPERANNUATE HEARS GYPSY SMITH, JR.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

What a wonderful privilege it is to enjoy a great meeting, where souls are saved and the Kingdom of God is enlarged! I have enjoyed that privilege lately. I went to Canton and heard Gypsy Smith, Jr., preach seven times. It was a wonderful occasion, and Gypsy Smith is a wonderful preacher.

It did my heart good to hear such plain, uncompromising preaching. There was nothing rough or sensational in his preaching. He said nothing to bring a blush of shame to the cheek of any refined woman. Even in his most vitriolic arraignment of sin, he never used a word to shock any one. His language was perfectly free from vulgarisms and profanity. In this matter he was in striking contrast to many evangelists I have heard. He used the word "hell" possibly a half-dozen times in the seven sermons I heard him preach.

The congregations were immense. On his last Sunday at 3 o'clock in the afternoon he preached on "The Christian Warfare" to the Negroes. There were about 2000 present. It was a great service. His congregations of whites averaged about 3000 people. All churches in Canton, Madison County, and surrounding country were represented. It was wonderful to see Jews, Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Baptists, all worshipping together. It was a glorious sight. They all seemed to be in a tender and prayerful mood. One could almost feel that the millennium had come.

I was reared in Madison County. I have known the country for nearly seventy years, but I have never seen anything like that there before. If one went into a bank, he found them talking religion; if one went into a store, he found them talking religion; if one went into a lawyer's or a doctor's office, the subject was religion. It was religion and the meeting that was talked everywhere one went. The whole atmosphere seemed surcharged with the influence of the Spirit. It was certainly good to be there, Henry. I stayed until the meeting closed. I don't know how much longer I would have stayed if the meeting had continued.

Gypsy Smith, Jr., is not a man of striking personal appearance. He is 40 years of age; is about 5 feet, 7 inches tall, and weighs about 160 pounds; he is clean shaven, and rather full in face; he is rapid in physical movement and speech. He has a wonderful vocabulary, and a retentive memory. He never lacks for the right word. His descriptive powers are unequalled in my knowledge of preachers. He has one noticeable defect in speech—his lips or tongue or jaws do not function easily and well. I could never decide what was the matter. For instance, when he wanted to say "first," he would say "fust." That impediment showed frequently in his preaching.

The Scriptures are his working tools, and he used his tools skillfully and effectively. He was mighty in the Scriptures. He showed plainly that he had never been tainted in the least with German rationalism. He has no patience with or respect for the "higher critics." He would have made paucans ring all through Sam Steel's heart. My, how he did preach the Bible just as "she is writ." It takes the preaching of the unmutated Scriptures to bring sinners to the foot of the Cross, with their confessions, to have the blood of Jesus Christ to cleanse them from all sin. No expurgated and rationalized Bible saves anybody, for the reason that it can not do it.

While Smith is not sensational in his preaching, he is at times powerfully dramatic. Occasionally he would put both hands to his mouth, forming a megaphone. When he did that he always uttered truths of tremendous import that rang in the ears and pulled mightily on the heart-strings of his hearers. He reminded me in that of the "Verily, verily!" of the Man who "spake as never man spake." The "verily!" of the Savior was always followed by something that every one needed to hear. If one lost Smith's megaphone utterances, he lost the best parts of his sermons. They were pregnant with meaning and wonderfully stirring in soulfulness.

There was nothing objectionable in his mannerisms. I am sure that no preacher who heard him will ever try to imitate him. Should they try to imitate him, it will be in his passionate zeal for winning souls, and they will be better for that. Soul-winning seemed his consuming passion—he was obsessed with it.

His one inconsistency was that he begged his hearers not to allow their emotions to move them to act, but to let their will dominate everything and decide their attitudes towards God and salvation. In spite of this, his appeals were decidedly emotional. If he had turned loose on his congregations with stirring appeals after the old Methodist fashion, I am sure he would have had many bright and happy conversions, and many would have shouted God's praise. The old way of getting religion has never been improved on. The mourners' bench, and agonizing intercessions, prayer, and crying over sins, and pleadings for pardon are mighty helpful ways to get religion. Let everybody say, "Amen!"

I believe anybody can get religion sitting on a bench, but I am sure that they are more apt to get it kneeling at an altar with saintly men and women, giving them prayerfully God's promises and praying with and for them. That is the way I got religion, and I believe it is the best way for anybody to get it. Don't let any of us attach undue importance to the will. Thank God that we were endowed with a will. However glorious this endowment is, do not let us think that all we have to do to be saved is to will to be saved, and it is done. No; by no means, No! To will to be saved is to will to do what God fixes as the condition to be saved. We can never be saved unless the will says "yes" to God's terms. But the will may say "yes" a thousand times, but if there is no active obedience to God's commands there is no salvation. Repentance, confession, faith and prayer are emotional exercises. They are emotionalism in its flower. There can not be any heartfelt religion that is not emotional. Some clear thinking is needed here. But of one thing let us beware—never stop "willing" and obeying God until in joy of heart we can say, "I know I am saved." The assurance of salvation is what we all need.

After the great meeting they have had at Canton I am sure that that section of country will never be the same it has been for the last half a century. In my early boyhood Madison County was the greatest county in the State. It was great in riches of a material kind; it was great in its educational refinement; it was great in its religious character, and in its church leadership.

Sharon Female College and Madison College were for many years the greatest schools in Mississippi. Dr. Thornton, Rev. H. H. Montgomery, Rev. Green Rogers, Prof. Gard, Rev. J. M. Pugh and Rev. D. M. Wiggins lived there. They were our great conference leaders. Bishop Galloway, G. H. Galloway, J. F. Campbell and the writer were the last to come into the Conference from Madison County. May the Lord call some to preach from the great meeting held by Gypsy Smith, Jr.!

Brookhaven, Miss.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

The church has suffered a serious loss in the death of Bishop Lambuth. He might appropriately have been called the "Foreign Minister" of Methodism. He was perhaps the best equipped man among us for the work in other lands. He not only had a personal acquaintance with it, but he had, as no other man that I know has, a missionary temperament. He was a real cosmopolitan. As I talked with him the last time I met him, I thought to myself, if I did not know him, I could not tell from his talk whether he was an American or a European, an Asiatic or an African; he seemed to be at home anywhere on the face of the earth. He and I were at Emory and Henry College together, and even there his ruling passion for exploration was strong. I doubt if there is a cave in Southwestern Virginia he had not been in. More than once I have met him as he returned from some of these exploring trips, when he was covered with mud from heel to head which he had got while crawling through some cavern. He had a saintly type of character, and while not an orator, his noble personality never failed to deeply impress an audience. I hope to meet him in heaven; but if he ranges up there as he did down here, it will be difficult to run up with him. He is the very sort of a man St. Paul would select as his companion.

One of the pleasant things in my work now is the privilege of getting in touch with our country work, and the work in the smaller towns—places that the big men, like editors and connectional officers and bishops never pay any attention to. I spent two weeks recently preaching for Brother George, the fine young man who is our pastor on the Gilbert Circuit. While there I was guest in the home of Dr. W. A. Mecum in Wisner, where I held the meeting. I have never been in a sweeter Christian home. The environment at Wisner is not ideal for making a Christian home. It is a village with only a few hundred people, and, perhaps, a score of negroes to every one white person, for it is located in the Mississippi river bottom. But Mrs. Mecum, like the mother of Moses, did not intend that an unfavorable environment should send her two boys to the bad, and she made her home a force in the community.

Under great discouragements, she persevered, and by her devotion to the church and her fidelity to her home, she has reared two noble boys, still in school, but with fine characters, and giving promise of making men who will be a blessing to the land. I make mention of this beautiful home because so many people who have similar environments, plead them as an excuse for failing to serve God. What this good woman and her husband have done, can be done anywhere. Such homes are the bed-rock of our civilization.

After several days spent very pleasantly in Baldwyn, Miss., where I gave a number of lectures and enjoyed the good fellowship of some mighty clever people, I spent several days in my native town of Grenada, Miss. I gave four messages there on the Bible in the Presbyterian Church, which was kindly opened to me by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Cunningham, and his officers. Dr. Countiss, President of Grenada College, gave me the privilege of speaking to his girls, and of getting a glimpse of the fine new building in which he is now doing his work. The Methodists of North Mississippi have reason to be proud of this imposing structure. It begins to look like we intend to do business in earnest. Grenada has grown more beautiful in recent years, and with its pretty homes and well kept lawns and abundance of flowers and shrubbery, it vies with our most attractive towns. Few colleges have such a treasure of trees as the noble oaks on the campus of Grenada College.

But everywhere I have been I have found some things that call for serious consideration by our leaders, if we have any, which I am sometimes tempted to doubt. The Baptists are sweeping the country with their Calvinistic doctrine of once in grace always in grace and their premillennialism; and the Holy Rollers are literally running the Methodists out of some sections. A circuit near Grenada where Methodism has been a blessing for seventy years, has been abandoned to the Holy Rollers. We have actually withdrawn from the work. The Presbyterians have gone into the abandoned territory and started a church and the Methodists who have too much sense to take the rolling route to glory have joined them. But what do you suppose Asbury and McKendree would think of such a proceeding! And that is in the territory of a Mac, too.

Now let me tell you editors something: If the General Conference don't elect some bishops who will visualize the home needs as well as the needs over-sea, we are going to suffer irreparable damage. The idea of McMurry letting the Holy Rollers run away with his the game! I would not have believed it of Mac, but it is so. Another thing: You editors get in behind these young preachers, and get some "punch" in them. They are running in ruts. The very genius of Methodism is adaptation to changing conditions. Over yonder in Tennessee, in a section of country where Methodism has been at work for fifty years, living on missionary money eked out in starvation dribbles, and doing nothing to lift and improve the people, a Presbyterian missionary has built a $10,000 brick church, and revolutionized the whole community. Our preachers run in the old ruts; he started new lines. He found nearly a hundred men within the radius of a few miles who could not read; he got them in a night school. He found the road leading to his church was almost impassable; he rallied the neighborhood and built a good road. He found the people were ignorant of how to live; he had a man to come and teach them improved methods of farming; and now they are prosperous. And so on. Now the old foggy bishop who condemns such methods is a superannuated man, and ought to go to the Home for the Incurables.

Can't you get the young preachers to study? There is where the trouble is. We are lacking in efficient men, men of culture and initiative. I told Bishop Galloway once, after he had held a Conference, and made some appointments I did not approve: "If I could not do better than that, I would resign." He replied: "No you would not. You would do just what I did. But you would find out that we have a great deal of Post Oak timber." Post Oak timber is solid enough, but it is stumpy, and does not take a high polish. I am afraid we have a false ideal of the ministry. The Texas Christian Advocate recently had a fine article from W. C. Everett on "The Passing of the Prince Albert Coat." I knew that Everett knows everything in the line of books, but it was refreshing to find that right under the shadow of S. M. U. there is a man who dares to suggest that the plan of mixing can be carried too far, and that a preacher ought to be a recognizable character in the community. I thought I was superannuated on account of my age, and have been laying the matter on the almanac and the undiscerning Pelican Elders; but I am inclined to revise my opinion. I was superannuated because I don't wear white shoes, and a wrist watch, and preach in a shirt-waist, and march in a Shriner's parade wearing yellow breeches with green stripes, and purple stockings, and a red cap. The man who did that was promoted, while I was "retired." I thank the Lord I was brought up under a different regime. Methodism, as a spiritual power, springs from serious study and deep consecration, and not from catering to worldly fashions. Wake up the young preachers, and punch up the bishops to set them the example. And tell Mac he had better resign if he can't keep the Holy Rollers from running away with whole circuits at a time. If he once gets after them, they will need to roll mighty fast; the trouble is to get him on the trail.

Mansfield, La.

TO THE PASTORS AND CENTENARY TREASURERS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

You have by this time received my letter with reference to collecting all that is due on the Centenary Pledges for the three years (or 60 per cent of the whole) by October 27 (the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the landing of Bishop Asbury in America), and I hope you are doing your best to get your church up to 100 per cent for the three years by that time; but if for any reason you do not finish by then, continue to work until you have collected as much as possible. If any want to pay for the entire five years, allow them to do so (remember that we still accept Liberty Bonds at face value). Be prompt in making your reports.

Some of the churches have already reported in full for the three years. "Old Crystal Springs," on the Gallman charge, has reported each subscriber paid in full for the three years, being the first to make such a report.

I will have Charts at the Annual Conference this year, showing the standing of each church on Centenary payments. I hope your church will make a creditable showing. Pledgers should be called upon in person for their payment.

Be sure that your final report reaches me not later than November 15, in order that I may have time to include it in the Chart.

Yours for Service,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Conference Centenary Treasurer.

TELEGRAM.

A telegram at our Conference at Brookhaven brought the information that the Mississippi Conference was in the seventh place in Centenary Collections. In January, we went to fifth place and held this through February; in March we went to seventh place; in April to eighth place, and have tenaciously held this until September, and the report brings the glad information that we are in seventh place—having nosed out Tennessee. Now, let's have a good, strong, pull together, and go to the "Top!"

Yours for Service,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Conference Centenary Treasurer

BROTHER RANKIN AND THE HERETICS.

By Dr. W. W. Pinson,
General Secretary, Board of Mission.

In view of the fact that Mr. C. W. Rankin is actively circulating charges of heresy against sundry missionaries in China; a few facts should be re-stated in the interest of truth and fair play.

1. Mr. Rankin does not represent the church or the Board of Missions. He is acting, as he frankly asserts, solely on his own responsibility.

2. In this whole matter he has acted throughout in utter disregard for the expressed will of his co-workers in China, of the Board of Missions, the Secretaries and the Bishop in charge. Without authorization and against positive and repeated protest, he left his work and came to America to embark upon this heresy propaganda.

3. In spite of these exhibitions of insubordination, he was given the privilege of occupying almost an entire session of the Board in an attack on the theological beliefs of a number of his fellow missionaries who, with a single exception, were not present to speak in their own behalf. The proceeding was challenged as against all law and precedent, since the Board was not a court of jurisdiction, and there were established processes where such matters could be properly adjudicated and where accused and accuser could be brought face to face. Nevertheless, Mr. Rankin was voted a hearing.

4. The statement of Mr. Rankin failed to produce a favorable impression for lack of coherence and because the testimony, based largely on hearsay, was inconclusive and much of it irrelevant. Let any one read the names of those present and judge whether or not they would treat indifferently serious evidence of grave heterodoxy and express that indifference in a unanimous vote. I am persuaded that a reading of the pamphlet being circulated by Mr. Rankin will reveal to a fair-minded reader the reason why such a body of men and women could not accept his conclusions.

5. It need not be said that the severing of Mr. Rankin's relation to the Board of Missions was not because of his theological position, but because, by his insubordination he had made it impossible for the Board longer to use him.

6. Mr. Rankin's indictment is not alone against missionaries who have proved their devotion to the Kingdom and through years of toil and testing have witnessed to their fidelity to Christ with fine courage and admirable self-sacrifice, but his sweeping implications reach beyond the mission body. He, in effect, charges Bishop Lambuth with complicity in the crime of heterodoxy and official negligence in dealing with it. The good Bishop is no longer here to speak for himself, but he left us this record: "I desire to affirm that I do not know of a missionary in our China Mission, rumors and hearsay to the contrary notwithstanding, who does not believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, the divinity of Christ, His incarnation, death and resurrection, and in the personality and witness of the Holy Spirit. There is not one who has not a vital faith, an experience of pardoned sin and of acceptance with God through Jesus Christ." Set the views of these two men side by side. The one of them an earnest, zealous, intense individual who speaks with no other responsibility than that imposed by his own opinions and convictions—the other with almost half a century of self-sacrificing service to his credit and under the solemn responsibility imposed by his ordination vows to "drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine." Let those who can, believe that Mr. Rankin has a keener appreciation of divine truth and is more jealous for the Kingdom than was Bishop Lambuth.

7. Theological opinions are not trivial matters, whether in China or America. But the more serious they are, the more need for patience, tolerance, and a dignified and orderly procedure in dealing with them. Mob law is no more respectable nor effective in combatting heresy than in combatting crime. It will be a sad hour for Methodism when men and women of unquestioned devotion and spotless character can be arraigned, tried and convicted, unheard, in the court of one man's opinion and the verdict be approved even by silence.

8. It is a noticeable coincidence that at the moment when Mr. Rankin was en route to America, some of the very men he was coming to accuse were engaged in leading one of the most remarkable revivals in the history of our work there, and that in the identical institution which he had singled out as a hotbed of heresy. Likewise letters that have arrived from Bishop Lambuth since his going away, like messages from beyond, breathe a spirit of hope and of triumph at the signs that "the Spirit of God is moving upon the people." It will require stronger proof than we have yet had that the men who have made this possible are dangerous heretics. When the long-desired revival is beginning to stir across the earth, it would be a tragedy to fall upon each other with theological bludgeons. Rather, we should unite to pray and work for a deep, divine, world-wide revival of religion. Nothing will do so much to clarify our thinking, vitalize our faith and drive away all hurtful heresy. I for one have scant hope in anything else.

THE STORY OF MR. ISHIDO.

By Bishop Walter R. Lambuth.

(This is one of the way last articles written by Bishop Lambuth. It was received by the Board of Missions just a few days before the cablegram announcing his death arrived.—Editor.)

Our party had not been in the city of Vladivostok, Siberia an hour before we received a call from Mr. G. Ishido, a well-to-do Japanese merchant. Having never met him, I was uncertain as to his errand, but he at once enlightened us by saying that he was a Christian and hearing that we were missionaries coming to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, he at once repaired to our hotel to pay his respects and give us a cordial welcome.

Through a Korean gentleman who spoke Japanese, and who had a prominent place in the Bank of Chosen, we learned the following story, which was supplemented here and there by Mr. Ishido himself, in order to fill out the details. Some eight years ago, a Christian woman by the name of Mrs. Wade, much disturbed because of the weakened faith of the few Japanese church members in the city, arranged for a meeting of three of the men, and told them what was on her heart. She rebuked them for their unfaithful lives, appealed to them for a renewal of their vows and loyalty to Jesus Christ and urged that the three or four at least should meet regularly in a little service for Bible study, prayer, and the strengthening of their faith. The narration reminded me of Barbara Heck and Captain Webb in the early days of Methodism in New York City.

The earnestness of this good woman deeply impressed the three men and especially Mr. Ishido. The meeting was held and continued from week to week until Mr. Ishido's conscience was so deeply stirred that he refunded a large indebtedness which he had made in another city some time before. This was done to the astonishment of his creditors, for they had given him up as a hopeless case. One man remarked upon receiving several hundred dollars that he had never expected to get it. It was as good as picked up and instead of using it himself, he donated it to a school.

At the expiration of about four years, Mr. Ishido was in his office one day in Vladivostok, with his brother and a clerk. An unknown assailant entered the office, shot his brother and the clerk dead, and then wheeling round aimed at him and shot him through the jaw. The murderer fled and left him weltering in his own blood, which was pouring out through a severed artery. Believing that his end had come, and there being no witnesses he rolled over on his face, dipped his index finger in the crimson tide that was pouring forth and wrote the word "GOD" in Chinese on the floor and after it the sentence, "I have been killed by a Russian." He then fainted and only came to consciousness in the hospital ward. For a month he hung between life and death. During the next few months, he was in a hospital in Japan to which he had been transported, and recovery still continued uncertain until the end of that period. With restored health he came back to Vladivostok, reopened his office, and announced to his friends, that having been snatched from the jaws of death, he would henceforth live for God and humanity.

He began by starting a little Sunday school. He searched for Japanese children and brought them in. He visited every Japanese Christian whom he could hear of, hoping thereby to strengthen their faith. He furnished an upper room above his office with a platform, pulpit, benches and New Testament and hymnals. There for four years, he has been carrying on religious services with a little group of twenty members, made up of representatives of various denominations. During our visit, he sent an urgent invitation to call at his office. We did so, partly out of respect and partly because when we failed to secure funds from the bank, he let us have $300, and offered more if we needed it, and this without any guarantee of return.

The object of his invitation came out in a few minutes after our arrival. He was anxious that we should repair to the upper room and hold a little service. It was a business hour, but he had sent for several Christians who lived near by. After a cup of tea served by his wife, I had a few verses read from the 15th chapter of John, and added a short talk concerning fruit-bearing in the Master's name and friendship through the Master's presence. This was followed by an earnest prayer by Mr. Ishido himself, after a prayer in English and in Korean, so that in this little circle of the friends of Jesus the great Father of us all was spoken to in three different languages. How blessed it is that he understands us all!

With the prayer, I thought the service ended. But Mr. Ishido arose and said, "I have a few words to add. It was a Christian woman of my own nation, Mrs. Wade, who first called us to repentance and to renewed faith in Jesus Christ. She, under God, was the spring or fountain of this church. I have faith, but I want more faith. I want faith that will remove mountains. My friend, Mr. Ishii of Okayama, Japan, who supported his orphanage by prayer, taught me what faith was. My missionary teacher, Mr. Petty, gave me an example of faith in his life. He has gone to his reward. This good woman, Mrs. Wade, who reminded us of our lack of faith, helped us to realize our need. My friends, my one request for this church is, Pray for us that we may have more faith in God."

WANTON DESTRUCTION.

Down on the water-front Hugh Brady sits and watches the gulls of the Willamette, curving their white wings in the graceful foray that begs for bread and peanuts. Many years ago, says Hugh, he brought one down with a piece of driftwood—a broken-winged, fluttering sea bird that never again would coast above the harbor and meet the ships. A lounging Indian, witness to the thoughtless cruelty, turned upon the slayer and gave him grave reproof. "Why do you kill that bird?" he asked. "His life is his own. Can you eat him now? An Indian would not kill in this manner."

The indictment of vain and cruel slaughter is a heavy one. The roseate spoonbill and the egret died because they were beautiful—because man admired them. The buffalo vanished from the plains for no other reason than that his hide brought a few dimes to the hunters. Upon bird and beast the plague of human cruelty, of disregard for the right of life, has levied terrible toll. It is true that man is carnivorous of appetite and that natural law bids him prey upon the lower animals for his own sustenance and industrial designs. But nowhere in printed word or in conscience is there a text that upholds him in wanton destruction.—Portland Oregonian.

The Home Circle

TRADING NUTS.

"Oh, my! where'd you get those hickory nuts?" Jessie exclaimed as she stood on the gate and looked admiringly over at the pail of nuts which the black-eyed little girl on the sidewalk was holding up for inspection. "Aren't they splendid!"

The black eyes twinkled, but their owner said nothing.

"I think hickory nuts are the very best nuts there are," Jessie continued; "tell me where you get them, Eva."

But Eva only laughed again, and shook her head. Setting her pail down, she suddenly began whirling around until her faded red dress stood out like the petals of a hollyhock, and Jessie was almost dizzy from watching her. Then stopping as abruptly as she had begun, Eva asked calmly: "Want to buy 'em? You better; good hickory nuts are awful scarce this year."

But Jessie hadn't any money.

"Well, got anything you want to trade for 'em? Hurry up, time's precious—I'm going, going, gone!"

"Oh, wait a minute," and Jessie dashed into the house. "Mamma, may I trade some chestnuts for hickory nuts?" and she danced first on one foot and then on the other in her eagerness. "She got such splendid ones—Eva Stryker, I mean, a whole pailful," she added, in response to her mother's puzzled look.

Mamma thought a moment, then said yes—she really did not know of any reason why she shouldn't, except that she was rather dubious about Eva, who was a newcomer in the neighborhood. So in a very short time Jessie was back at the gate, holding up a red tin pail of glossy brown nuts.

But Eva's interest seemed to languish, and she gave only a careless glance at the nuts. "Those are awful pretty," she said, with a wave of her hand toward great masses of yellow chrysanthemums which had bravely withstood the frosts. "What are they? My, don't they look just like sunshine?"

After Jessie had brought her back to the subject with an impatient "Are you going to trade, or not?" Eva nodded assent. The transfer was soon made, and Jessie hurried into the house to show mamma the beautiful nuts.

"And now I'm going out to crack some on the big stone," and dancing backward, Jessie gleefully disappeared from the room.

But it was a sober little Jessie that, five minutes later, walked slowly to her mother's side. "I don't know what's the matter with them, mamma, they're just as bitter."

"Bitter? Well, that is queer," mamma said, and then she tasted one. "Why, I haven't seen any for years," and a peculiar look stole over her face.

"What, mamma? What did you say?" and Jessie stared in amazement. For they had had a whole basketful the year before that Uncle Amos sent them.

"These aren't real hickory nuts, Jessie, they're what we used to call pignuts when I was a little girl. Of course they're not good to eat, but I used to like to play with them. I don't believe I've seen any since," and she took some in her hand and turned them over. "I wonder where she got them," she continued, musingly.

Jessie's face always grew tender at any mention of that long-ago childhood. She laid her flushed cheek against her mother's.

And then mother's wandering thoughts came back. "I'm so sorry for your disappointment, Jessie dear. It was very wrong in Eva, if she knew what they were, and I'm sorry about her, too, for I'm afraid she cannot be a very good child."

Jessie lifted her head. "She's worse than that if she knew they weren't good nuts," she said indignantly. "I think she's a stealing, mean girl, and I just hate her."

"Why, Jessie!" was all that mamma said.

"Well, I do, mamma, she's a thief, and I'll never speak to her again. And I'll never try to get her to go to Sunday school again, either, she's so bad."

"Isn't that all the more reason that she ought to go, Jessie?"

But Jessie sat silent, with hands folded in her lap, looking into the smoldering grate fire.

Presently her mother said: "Jessie, we know very little about Eva. We don't even know whether she has any one to teach her about being good. And I think she hasn't any mother. Can't you try to make allowance for her, and not even feel unkindly toward her?"

A subdued little voice answered, after a long pause: "I'll try, mamma, but I don't know whether I can or not. It's so hard."

"You know where you can get help, dear."

There was nothing more seen of Eva that day, and the next morning Jessie started for school, carrying a bunch of beautiful yellow chrysanthemums from her own little garden.

"For Miss Allison, dear?" her mother had asked as she watched her wrapping moist paper about the stems.

"No, mamma, they're for Eva Stryker. She thought they were so pretty the other day," was the low answer; and then, as a soft kiss fell upon her upturned forehead, "I don't feel mad at her a single bit now."

Jessie was just turning the last corner when she saw a little girl whose swinging walk and shabby red dress told who she was. Jessie quickened her steps and soon caught up with her.

"I brought these for you, Eva," and the flowers were thrust upon an unwilling brown fist. "They're out of my garden." Then, to relieve the situation: "Isn't it a beautiful morning. Mamma says the air is just like a tonic, that it's full of ozone."

But the comment on weather conditions fell unnoticed, as Eva's stoutly shod feet came to a sudden standstill. Peering under Jessie's "Shaker" bonnet, she exclaimed: "My, but you're good, Jessie Loring! You're just like that good-for-evil kind teacher talked about."

Heedless of Jessie's quick interruption or "Oh, no, no!" Eva went on: "That was a mean trick I played on you, but I never thought about it till you seemed so crazy about the nuts—honest I didn't—and then I thought it'd be such a good joke. But it doesn't seem a bit like a joke now. And I haven't touched one of your chestnuts; my aunt said I'd catch it if I did. But anyway," she added, "I wasn't going to."

And then, as a troop of children came dashing up the walk she caught Jessie by the sleeve and whispered: "I'm awful sorry I did it. I'll go to Sunday school if you want me to, Jessie."—Harry Winton Davis, in The Congregationalist.

THE AUCTION.

Good health was put up at auction. "What am I offered," cried the auctioneer, "for this fine parcel of good health, warranted to last for three-score years and ten?"

"I offer all these pills and drugs," cried a woman with a hamper of bottles and boxes.

The auctioneer shook his head impatiently. "Who bids more?" he asked.

"I offer money," shouted a portly banker. "I bid a million dollars in gold," and he pointed to a bank van which he had brought with him.

The auctioneer shook his head still more vigorously. "Who bids more?" he cried.

A quiet young fellow stood near, and said in a firm voice, "I bid intelligence and painstaking."

"Going—going—and gone to the last bidder!" the auctioneer shouted. "And may you, young man, make a good use of your good bargain."—Aesop Jones in C. E. World.

The great secret of the tender heart lies in the fellowship of Jesus Christ. It is the continual wonder about Jesus, that He was so strong and yet so tender-hearted. No authority could make Him quail; no array of power could ever daunt Him; and yet a bruised reed He would never break, and smoking flax He would not quench. He was tender not because He knew so little; He was tender because He knew so much. All that was hidden from duller eyes He saw—all that men had to bear and battle through. Their helplessness, their crying in the night, their inarticulate appeal to Heaven—all this was ever audible to Jesus, and kept His heart as tender as a child's.—G. H. Morrison.

Certain it is, that the best passport to society a young man can have, next to clean character, is the possession of fine manners.—M. A. Livermore.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE CITY.

It is high time for the Protestant Church to realize that the modern city is the greatest challenge that confronts it in its claim to possess a gospel that can transform individual lives and revolutionize society. The progress of Christianity in heathen lands is one of the miracles of the age. Our religion has demonstrated its power to prevail when brought into conflict with all systems of heathen religion; but there are those who are ready to maintain that it is practically a failure in the congested centers of population in Christian lands. Sometimes the challenge is so bold that almost our only defense is to say, as some one said years ago, that Christianity has not yet been tried in our cities. There are many devout Christians, of course, in this city and in all cities, and in that sense it cannot be said that Christianity is untried, but we are almost ready to say that it is true in its institutional forms. We would not undertake to speak from personal knowledge of any other city, but it would be pretty hard to deny that challenge so far as New Orleans is concerned.

Our own church has not followed a very aggressive policy in its operations in New Orleans. Her connectional authorities have never seemed to realize that this city is practically missionary territory; because it has a large population they have seemed to think that it should measure up in every way to cities that are almost solidly, or at least predominantly, Protestant. A glance at the statistics would show that our entire membership in this city of practically 400,000 people is only about 3500. A little study of the situation would show that very few of our ten churches are really self-supporting, though only a few of them get any assistance from missionary funds. We believe the quality of Methodism in New Orleans is as good as that in any other part of the connection, but it is too weak numerically and financially to enterprise any great forward movement through its own resources, and no adequate help from connectional sources seems to be available. The investment of a large sum of money in an institution below Canal Street is well and good for the only kind of work that can be done in that section; but if Methodism ever really impresses itself upon New Orleans, it will have to start above Canal Street.

Notwithstanding the fact that New Orleans has the largest population of any city in the South, and notwithstanding the fact that it is tremendously influential in a business, political, and social way throughout the South, it has been without resident episcopal supervision for any length of time since the days of the lamented Bishop Keener. It has enjoyed efficient episcopal administration, but it has not had the benefit of the leadership that can come only from an intimate knowledge growing out of residence. All in all, New Orleans is a very delightful place in which to live, too.

Every great city has its own problems, of course, as well as those common to all of them, and these must be dealt with according to the best information obtainable. In a general way, however, there would seem to be two things that are indispensable in meeting the challenge the city offers the church to-day—a constructive program, and a continuity of policy. We believe the church can do the work whenever it gets on the job.

GYPSY SMITH TO BE IN NEW ORLEANS.

During next January, Gypsy Smith, the world-renowned evangelist, will conduct an evangelistic campaign in New Orleans under the auspices of the Protestant churches of the city. The preliminary arrangements have already been completed and the campaign has now entered the stage of preparation to have everything in readiness when the great preacher himself arrives.

One item of the preparation for this campaign is the erection of a tabernacle that will have adequate seating capacity for the accommodation of those who will probably want to attend the meetings. A fund of $28,000 has been guaranteed by interested laymen in the city to take care of all these preliminary expenses, and the popular interest is such as to make it evident that a real effort is going to be made to reach the unchurched masses of this city with the gospel of salvation.

We are heartily in favor of this campaign, and we earnestly hope that the readers of the Advocate will join with the Christian people of New Orleans in the prayer that there may come a religious awakening to the city that will be an incontrovertible demonstration of the power of the gospel to save, even to the uttermost. The churches themselves expect to receive a great blessing from the campaign, but they are earnestly desirous that its influence reach far beyond the limited circle of church membership, and they crave that sympathetic interest on the part of Christian people everywhere that will mean a mighty volume of prayer for the salvation of multitudes of sinners in this great city.

CENTENARY PAYMENTS TO OCTOBER 1.

To October 1, payments on Centenary pledges by individuals, Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues totaled $11,765,312.06. This does not take into account "credits" estimated at the beginning of the Centenary campaign. It is a good showing—especially when we take into account former standards of giving and the unusual conditions in the business world. The three best months of the year are ahead and there is reason for the faith that when the returns from these months are in, 1921 will make a record equal to that of 1920.

But to do our utmost we need to face the facts in the case. There is due on Centenary pledges $10,386,186.94, this amount being needed to bring payments to the sixty per cent standard. It is no easy task the church has, but we have not been called to do the easy task. The church is here to do the task that demands real sacrifice, and present conditions give us the best chance until now to prove that we have right to bear the name of our Lord.

In per cent of pledge paid the following Conferences, with their percentages, hold the first ten places: Pacific, 48.3; Missouri, 44.1; Kentucky, 41.8; Baltimore, 40.5; Denver, 40.4; Northwest Texas, 39.4; Mississippi, 38.3; Tennessee, 38.2; Illinois, 38.0; Virginia, 37.2. In total amount paid the first ten Conferences have rank as follows: Virginia, North Carolina, North Georgia, Tennessee, South Georgia, Baltimore, Western North Carolina, South Carolina, Holston, North Alabama.

The total amount paid by the Louisiana Conference to October 1, this including payments by Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues, is $257,769.38; the total for the Mississippi Conference is $267,961.59; the total for the North Mississippi Conference is $247,231.21. The Louisiana Conference is now due $229,177.62; the Mississippi Conference, $151,155.41; the North Mississippi, $260,231.79. A large part of this deficit should be cleared by November 1.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. B. Baker writes that the year's work is closing well at Verona, Miss.

Our Second Church of this city, of which Rev. J. A. Alford is pastor, has recently bought a parsonage.

Dr. W. M. Ramsay, the distinguished scholar, will begin a course of lectures at Emory University this week.

Announcement has been made that Dr. John A. Rice has resigned his position in Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas.

Rev. Ira B. Robertson, that noble veteran of the Mississippi Conference, is visiting his daughter and her family in New Orleans.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, our pastor at Greenville, Miss., recently assisted his brother, Rev. T. W. Lewis, in a fine meeting at Memphis, Tenn.

"We are progressing nicely on the Trenton circuit—the outlook is very encouraging," writes Rev. G. L. McNeece, of Morton, Miss.

Dr. Battle Malone has been elected chief of staff at the Methodist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn. It is thought that the hospital will open its doors by November 1.

Mr. W. H. Underwood, of Watson, La., began taking the Advocate when he joined the church about thirty years ago, and he has never been without it since that time.

A fine revival meeting has just come to a close at Merryville, La., Rev. B. H. Sheppard, pastor. There were fifty-three accessions to the church, forty adults being baptized.

We are greatly indebted to Dr. I. W. Cooper and Dr. Briscoe Carter for various newspapers and clippings they sent us while they were in London attending the sessions of the Ecumenical Conference.

Rev. J. H. Grice is winding up a four years' pastorate on the Vancleave charge, Mississippi Conference, where he has wrought well. His people have expressed a desire to have him returned for the fifth year.

A note from a member of the Harrison charge, Mississippi Conference, states that the work is moving along nicely under the leadership of Rev. T. M. Almsworth. The Sunday schools are doing especially good work.

The Southern Co-operative League for Education and Social Service will hold its annual convention at Chattanooga, Tenn., November 6-9. Dr. Philander P. Claxton is president of the organization, and Mr. J. E. McCulloch is secretary.

We have heard it stated that Dr. S. H. Werlein, pastor of our First Church at Alexandria, La., has been transferred to the Los Angeles Conference, and that his probable appointment will be the presiding eldership of the Los Angeles District.

"Southern Methodist" is the name of a new periodical of which the first number is just from the press. It is published by The Southern Methodist League, at Memphis, Tenn., and Dr. R. A. MEEK is editor. It begins as a monthly, but the hope is that it will soon appear as a weekly.

According to the Alabama Christian Advocate, President Harding will attend the exercises inducting Dr. Guy Snavely into the presidency of Birmingham-Southern College on October 26, and will deliver an address in connection therewith. The College will confer the degree of LL.D. upon President Harding.

A district teacher-training class has been organized in the New Orleans District under the direction of the District Sunday School Association, of which Mr. J. H. Carter is president. Miss Cora Perkins is superintendent of the Teacher-training Department. The class began with an enrollment of twenty-five.

A very delightful occasion was the "Old Folks' Service" at Parker Memorial Church, this city, last Sunday morning. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. D. Harper, the oldest active member, in years of service, of the Louisiana Conference. The large congregation greatly enjoyed the fine message of the preacher.

The fourth quarterly conference of Keener Memorial Church, Baton Rouge, La., passed resolutions very highly commendatory of the pastor, Rev. J. W. Booth, who is completing his fourth year's service in that charge—the first pastor who has served it for a quadrennium. This church has made splendid progress during the pastorate of Brother Booth.

A note from Rev. C. E. Fike, our pastor at De Ridder, La., requests us to change the address of his Advocate to Paducah, Texas, as he has been transferred to the Northwest Texas Conference, a higher altitude being necessary for his health. Brother Fike has done a fine work at De Ridder, the membership of the church having doubled during the past two years.

The Methodist Preachers' Meeting last Monday morning was a most delightful gathering. Rev. A. J. Gearheard, of Bogalusa, and Rev. W. H. Giles, of Slidell, were visitors. The reports were optimistic. After the business session was over, an appetizing luncheon of sandwiches, cakes, coffee, and fruit, was served by Mrs. J. G. Snelling, assisted by Mrs. H. T. Carley and Miss Nettles.

The sympathy of his brethren will go out to Rev. W. C. Childress, superintendent of missions in New Orleans, whose brother passed away in Texas a few days ago, and whose mother was critically ill at the same time. Our latest information is to the effect that the condition of his mother is greatly improved, and Brother Childress expects to be back at his work within a few days.

The corner-stone of the Algiers Methodist Church was laid with appropriate ceremonies on last Sunday afternoon, the service being conducted by Rev. J. G. Snelling, presiding elder of the New Orleans District. The Methodism of the city was well represented in the assembly by preachers and laymen. The pastor, Rev. C. C. Wler, has done a fine work in this important charge.

Our church at Moorhead, Miss., recently suffered a great loss in the death of Mrs. A. M. Pond. She was active in the work of the church, being teacher of a large class of young men in the Sunday school. The funeral service was largely attended and was conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. D. Wroten, assisted, according to press dispatches, by Rev. W. M. Campbell, Rev. J. T. McCafferty, and Rev. S. H. Caffey.

The following, from the St. Louis Christian Advocate, will be of interest to the many friends of Brother Thomas in Louisiana: "Rev. W. E. Thomas, for some years past engaged in missionary work in New Orleans, was transferred from the Louisiana to the St. Louis Conference and appointed Conference evangelist. He writes that he can be reached by mail in care of Rev. H. H. Johnson, 409 Security Building, St. Louis."

Rev. J. V. Bennett, Mississippi Conference evangelist, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week. He was returning from the New Prospect Camp Ground, where a fine meeting was brought to a close on the preceding day, the preaching being done by Brother Bennett and Rev. W. M. Sullivan, presiding elder of the Seashore District. Brother Bennett was on his way to Poplarville, Miss., to assist Dr. C. M. Chapman in a meeting.

Under date of October 12 we received the following sad news from Rev. Standifer Raper, our pastor at Coldwater, Miss.: "Last Friday morning, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Featherston, a great woman of our church, passed to her eternal reward. She had equipped for life some of our choicest ministers and professional men. In her death our church has sustained a great loss." The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to those who have been bereaved by the death of this saintly woman.

This distressing telegram was received by the Advocate on Monday afternoon of this week: "Rev. D. C. Foust, pastor at Hickory Flat, died last night. Funeral services there this afternoon. He preached yesterday." The telegram was signed by Rev. J. B. Randolph and was sent from Blue Mountain, Miss. Our deepest sympathy goes out to those who are in sorrow by the sudden taking away of this faithful servant of the church. We trust a suitable memoir will be furnished for publication in due time.

Last Sunday was a great day for our church at Franklinton, La., Rev. L. W. Cain, pastor. The laymen were in charge of the exercises and they provided a fine program. Judge Carter, lay leader, presided and delivered a great address on the subject, "The Church a Necessity." Hon. M. W. Otto dealt with the subject of "Finances," and Professor Covington spoke of "Our Achievements." Other laymen also made fine addresses. Six new members were received into the church, making 71 this year. Indications are that all assessments will be paid in full by this fine congregation.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. A. J. Boyles, Hattiesburg, Miss., 7; J. N. Humphrey, Dumas, Miss., 2; Rev. G. L. McNeece, Morton, Miss., 2; Rev. Standifer Raper, Coldwater, Miss., 5; Rev. O. S. Lewis, Laurel, Miss., 3; Rev. T. B. Winstead, Carthage, Miss., 2; Rev. G. A. Morgan, Jonesboro, La., 2; Mrs. J. H. Settoon, Flora, Miss., 2.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT— PAY-UP-WEEK.

Please do not forget that October 30-November 6 is Pay-Up Week in the North Mississippi Conference in the Christian Education Movement.

Brother pastor, get your collector to select a committee of good helpers, if your charge is too much for one man. Call together these helpers and divide the names of subscribers among them as your judgment dictates. Announce from the pulpit and get before your folks in any other way possible the fact that they will be called on for their Educational Subscription. November 1 is Tuesday. Try to see every subscriber that day. It takes just one day to see all of them. There will be some who will ask for time. Secure a definite promise from them as to when they can pay. That will save time and trouble. Use the Pay-Up-Week blue blank that will be sent every collector for making report to the Conference office. Remember that ALL reports and money go to your Conference office, not the General office at Nashville.

Wishing you great success, I am,

Yours in the work,

J. H. HOLDER,

Conference Secretary-Treasurer.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

As a nation we are reaping the whirlwind of lawlessness. Never before, in all the history of these United States, was there such a huge wave of crime. Bank robbing, highway hold-ups, burglary, embezzlement, murder, violence against person and property, disregard for the ordinary decencies and amenities of life—all these and more are so frequent as to cause but little wonder or comment. May we not seek the cause of all these crimes and try to find a check or remedy for the evil? I think the current literature of the age is largely responsible. Magazines and newspapers, whose circulation is counted by millions, contain articles and stories that ignore or caricature virtue, decency, and honesty. The novel of the Victorian age, which exalted morals, is supplanted by writings which deal altogether with the animal and material. Why men with the gift of writing prefer to deal with things that are sordid, selfish and low, instead of those graces and virtues which enlarge and beautify life and character, is a puzzle to me. Unhappy and unblessed indeed is a generation with such prophets and teachers. I recently read one of these "best sellers." If the people of the Middle West as a class are such a set of unhealthy animals as this author portrays, God pity them. I am glad I don't live in the atmosphere of such inhumanity. But think this book a slander and misrepresentation. We will let it go at that and hope for better things.

Another cause for crime is the desire to have and to hold, or better, to have and to spend, without regard to the means for obtaining. Short cuts in making money are too often short cuts to jail. No man should possess anything of value without honest effort put forth, either toil of head, hand, or heart, as value given. Honesty is not only the basis, but the permeating power, the indispensable factor in all trade. And in the larger sense we are all traders in some sort. To spend and be spent—service and sacrifice—here is where true heroism lies. A thief steals more than money—he robs life of its fairest jewels, honesty and peace.

"Pay your preacher!" You never have paid him. You never will pay him, you never can pay him. He is dealing with the infinite, the endless, the immortal. Heaven's exchange really has no bank on earth. The few paltry dollars you dole out for the kingdom of God on earth are so small, so very exceedingly small, when measured or compared with heavenly values. He does not suit you—the preacher—because he does not agree with you, and sometimes tells you frankly and kindly. You do not need another preacher, you need a vision. A stagnant pond turns no waterwheel, but a mountain stream will grind corn, and it makes all the mountain slope sing with the music of its running.

"But I don't like him—he dresses too well and his family lives better than mine." Not on your money, though, and I am quite sure your fault-finding did not buy his baby a shirt nor his wife a skirt. "But I am in debt." No doubt of it. You ought to be. You have no deposit in heaven's bank, so don't be surprised that every draft made comes back marked N. F. And if you have any money in this world's bank or elsewhere and do not meet your obligations as every decent, fair-minded, Christian should do, then for honesty's sake quit whining and snuffing about it. Fair play is the true guerdon of a gentleman in the sight of God and man.

At her home, ten miles south of Clinton, La., Mrs. LOUISA MILDRED DREHER passed into the great life beyond. She was born April 2, 1845, in East Feliciana Parish. Her family was a pioneer family in that section. She married Thomas D. Lipscomb, March 31, 1870. He went into the "glory world" nearly nineteen years before she did. Three years ago she had the influenza and never entirely recovered. The last ten months of her life she spent in bed and suffered intensely, but she bore her agony with heroic Christian fortitude; no murmur or complaint crossed her patient, sweet lips; no frown of dissatisfaction shadowed her time-seamed, noble Christian face. Heavy, bitter storms had swept around her during a long life, but not for one moment did they ever shake her faith or love for her Savior Jesus Christ. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." She had passed through the long, hard school of life; her heart and purpose were always pure; God needed her for some great, noble work in the world beyond, so He called her home. She was buried in the family cemetery at her home below Clinton, Rev. W. J. Newsom, her pastor, officiating. She is survived by four sons: H. C. and Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, of East Feliciana Parish; W. P. Lipscomb, of New Orleans; J. H. Lipscomb, of Bogalusa, and one daughter, Mrs. W. E. Parker, of New Orleans; two sisters, Mrs. M. J. Kelly, of East Feliciana, and Miss Sarah E. Dreher, of New Orleans. They and many other relatives grieve because she is gone, but they know that she is with loved ones who have long been boused in one of those beautiful mansions prepared for them by their Savior. "For the pure in heart shall see God."

A FRIEND.

Mrs. S. J. DODDS MOORE was born in Madison County, Tennessee, October 17, 1840, and came to Mississippi at the age of 10 years. She departed this life August 27, 1921. She was married to R. L. Moore, September 7, 1858. Her husband preceded her to the home beyond 22 years and 22 days. She leaves four children, 12 grandchildren, and 15 great-grandchildren, 2 sisters and 4 brothers to mourn their loss. She joined the Methodist Church early in life and lived a true Christian. Her life was one of service to the Lord and mankind. She had said when she could no longer help some one she was ready to go; she was especially fond of ministering to the needs of the sick. She read and knew the Scriptures. She had definite ideas as to what they teach. Mrs. Moore was a fond, devoted and considerate wife and mother. Her home life was in keeping with the high standards of the religion she professed. She instructed her children daily in the ways of the Lord. To her loved ones we extend our love and sympathy and commend them to the love and blessing of the God whom she so faithfully served. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by his brother, Rev. G. A. Baker. Her body was laid to rest in the Pleasant Grove cemetery.

FROM PARIS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I hereby hand you for the Advocate a short report of the work of my charge. We have held revival meetings at all the churches in my charge, all of which were good. Our first meeting was held at Paris, Rev. D. H. Crowson of Water Valley, doing the preaching. It is useless for me to comment on the quality of the sermons preached by Brother Crowson, for all who have ever heard him know that the preaching was well done. The visible results of this meeting were four additions to the church and the membership greatly revived.

Our next meeting was held at Mt. Liberty, the writer doing the preaching; and say, Carley, if you had been there, you would have thought that the Methodists could still shout.

Our next meeting was held at Pine Valley. The membership at this place seemed to be greatly revived.

Our next meeting was held at Salem, Rev. W. D. Wood, of Duck Hill, doing the preaching. Brother Wood gave us some great sermons, and the Holy Spirit honored the Word.

I am encouraged over the spiritual condition of the Paris charge. I feel that this has been the best year of my life. Sometimes I almost feel like shouting, "Glory."

FROM OAKDALE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We are ready for Annual Conference. Our Conference collections have been subscribed (and they will be paid, because I know the subscribers). The presiding elder has been paid up in full already, the pastor's salary has been paid every month, and the treasurer is only waiting for the end of the month to come to pay the last check. We have made an addition to the church that cost $500.

Last, but not least, I have had the privilege of receiving into the church at the regular services 35 members during the year, and 18 of these on profession of faith. WE ARE IN FINE SHAPE.

Hoping to see you in Alexandria, I am,
Cordially yours,
J. LAMBUTH EVANS.

MEETING AT VARNADO, LA.

A successful six days' meeting was held recently at Varnado, on the Bogalusa circuit, in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. A. J. Gearheard, of Bogalusa. Brother Gearheard did some splendid preaching, and the earnest efforts put forth resulted in four conversions, and a number of renewals.

Mr. I. K. Bean and wife, and Mrs. A. J. Gearheard, were visitors during the meeting, and assisted materially in the singing.

We praise Him who is great, and "greatly to be praised."

FROM GLENMORA, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: We are coming to the close of our fifth year's work on the Glenmora charge.

When we came here, Glenmora and McNary formed the charge, with half time each; and for the first two years we also preached at Melder one Sunday afternoon in each month; but the last three years we have given full time to Glenmora, and in that time the salary has been raised fifty per cent, now paying $1800 per year.

The church here was $800 in debt when we came to it; had only a few seats, no fans or adequate room for the Sunday school. We paid that debt, put in five ceiling fans, seated the church, and this year built a nine-room annex for the Sunday school. In addition to these improvements on the church building, we have also built a new seven-room parsonage, which is very comfortable in its arrangements.

JOY BROUGHT INTO HOME

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Restoring Mrs. Benz to Health

Altoona, Pa.—"I am writing to tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. We have had six children die almost at birth. From one hour to nineteen days is all they have lived. As I was going to have another, I took a dozen bottles of your Vegetable Compound and I can say that it is the greatest medicine on earth, for this baby is now four months old and a healthier baby you would not want. I am sending you a picture of her. Everybody says, 'That is some healthy looking baby.' You have my consent to show this letter."—Mrs. C. W. BENZ, 131 3rd Ave., Altoona, Pa.

No woman can realize the joy and happiness this healthy babe brought into the home of Mrs. Benz, unless they have had a like experience.

Every woman who suffers from any ailments peculiar to her sex, as indicated by backaches, headaches, bearing-down pains, irregularities, nervousness and "the blues" should not rest until they have given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

quota in full, but this charge is in the front rank of those paying their subscriptions. Owing to local conditions we did not do much for the Education Movement.

The Sunday school has made marked improvement during these years, as has also the women's work. Our church membership has grown from 92 to 258. We have had good revival meetings through these years, but none more satisfactory or fruitful than those held this year. Rev. W. E. Thomas was with us at McNary the last of July and the first week in August. The services were enjoyed by attentive congregations and resulted in 12 accessions and the organization of a Sunday school, which is now having an attendance of more than 100 each Sabbath.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, of Bogalusa, came to us on Tuesday after the second Sunday in August and stayed through the fourth Sunday. Overflow congregations attended these services. All the available space was used in the main auditorium and the annex, and yet people had to stand in the side aisles and used their automobiles and other seats about the windows of the church.

The singing was splendid and was led by Rev. Clarence Ridge, of Dallas, Texas. We had 33 accessions during this meeting and 67 altogether this year.

Our years here have been full of labor; but by the grace of God and the co-operation of the people, the labor has been pleasant and fruitful.

Cordially yours.

A REPORT FROM LELAND, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I will give you a report of recent work for Conference. It is known far and near that the great Delta has suffered the greatest financial crash in its history, and most charges have felt the terrible pressure and none possibly worse than Leland station. So Sunday morning we had a conference with the Board of Stewards. I said, "Brethren, now is the time to do the work," and we selected two men to assist our finance chairman, Brother James Whitehurst, Brothers Willenman and Beard. Monday morning they got busy. They collected about seven hundred dollars Monday, and Tuesday morning they sent the P. E. his last check for the year and handed me a check for $615.63, the largest check ever paid to this preacher at one time. The whole of the salary and most of the collections will be collected and paid in this week. This gives us inspiration and appreciation in the closing weeks before Conference.

A Stubborn Cough
Loosens Right Up

This home-made remedy is a wonder for quick results. Easily and cheaply made.

Here is a home-made syrup which millions of people have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It is cheap and simple, but very prompt in action. Under its healing, soothing influence, chest soreness goes, phlegm loosens, breathing becomes easier, tickling in throat stops and you get a good night's restful sleep. The usual throat and chest colds are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, throat tickle, bronchial asthma or winter coughs.

To make this splendid cough syrup, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup and shake thoroughly. If you prefer use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you get a full pint—a family supply—of much better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its prompt healing effect upon the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Here are some facts worth committing and quoting:

"Spiritual illiteracy is the forerunner of moral bankruptcy and national decay."

"No child should be damned to illiteracy because he chanced to be born in one of the waste places of the nation."

"A religious education should be the heritage of every child. Spiritual illiteracy is the greatest peril of organized society."

"The saddest page in the history of the Christian church is that which records the spiritual neglect of childhood in the home."

"Two out of every three children under 25 years of age attend no religious school."

Types of Home Failures.

It is one of the tragic facts that the ultimate failure of the child may be in no wise the fault of the child, but wholly the fault of the home. Note this list of home failures:

Parental misunderstanding of the child, fault-finding, lack of affection or failure to express it, lack of confidential relation with children, quarreling in the home, separation of parents, loss of parent by death, street playing and loafing.

In the past we have not had a very definite policy in the Sunday school. Some superintendents still think when the house is full of people they have a good Sunday school. They may and they may not. We have taught some Bible truths that have been of great value to a few people. In the Sunday school of to-day we promise to give some of the principles of religious education and some day the church will take the time to give a complete religious education. Our three-fold purpose is to give a definite and conscious knowledge of God, as large and complete knowledge as the child can receive. This is evangelizing. In the second place, the Sunday school should train every individual to worship God—not the few who are willing to gather around the organ to sing a few songs. Songs, prayers, reading God's Word, bringing in offerings, testifying, etc., are means of expressing our devotion to the God we know. These different mediums of worship must be adapted to the understanding of the worshipers. As is often stated, we must have lessons, prayers, and songs that meet the needs of each group. Observe next Sunday morning how few in your Sunday school take intelligent, helpful part in the worship. One reason is the songs, prayers do not express the feelings toward God of the non-worshipers. One may have a perfectly arranged program, but if that indefinite something we call atmosphere is lacking, we only go through the form and miss the power, the heart, the life of worship. No one has a religious education until he habitually and easily worships God.

Out of a knowledge of God and the habitual worship of God the soul desires to render service. This natural impulse must be cultivated and directed. We must remember that no truth is taught until that truth brings a change in conduct. If parents mean to give their children religious education, and if the Sunday school teachers are to help the parents in this all-important task, they must know the child they propose to instruct. There is a difference in the play-life of a child four years old and one six years old. It requires a knowledge of these children to present God to them successfully.

FROM ACONA, MISS.

Dear Advocate: As I have not given you anything from Acona in quite a while, I will ask for a little space in your columns. We will have some report to make at Conference which is not far distant. We have received 8 into the church and baptized seven infants. We hope to make a good financial report when we give an account of our work. We have the distinction of being the only rural station in the Conference. There can be no finer country church found in Mississippi.

We have a fine class of young people, and they are organized into a fine working League, with fifty-one members. We have one of the best Woman's Missionary Societies it has ever been my privilege to be associated with. We also have a good Juvenile Missionary Society. We have an enrollment of about seventy-five on our Sunday school register, a decided growth since last Conference. Our prayer meeting has grown from last year. All of these organizations have been instituted since last Conference except one—the Missionary Society.

In addition to the work done on my own charge, I have assisted in four revival meetings, two with my good, genial friend, W. S. Selman, of the Black Hawk work, a week each at Emory and Bowling Green. These are fine people, and we had some results at both of these points. From Bowling Green I went on the first Sunday in September to dear old Palestine, a good and loyal church, composed of many of God's elect, with whom I spent three former years in one of my happiest pastorates. I spent eight days here without any "fellow laborer;" the good pastor, Rev. E. Blizzard, could not be with us on account of having to look after the duties of County Superintendent of Education. He was there on the first day and preached a fine sermon on "Christian Love." Here we had quite a number of family altars established, baptized two infants, and one fine young woman, Miss Flossie Davis, volunteered for mission work, and expects to give herself to the Board as a teacher in our mission fields. We organized a good Woman's Society here.

From there I went to another church beloved, where I spent three years of a most harmonious and delightful pastorate—Foster Chapel, of pleasant memory. I found this fine people very much discouraged. They had not had a service this year. Weeds were growing up around the doorsteps. It made me very sad to find these good people in this condition. Some deep sorrows have come to some of them since I was pastor there, but I thank God I found many of them trusting in Him. I spent four days here trying to comfort and encourage these dear friends. I baptized and took one fine young man into the church—Samuel Dexter. I have him on my prayer list for Social Service in our Lord's Kingdom. Will the Advocate join me in this prayer?

For the privilege of doing this work in His Kingdom I am profoundly grateful to the great Head of the church; and to our own body, with whom I am called as co-laborer.

Aches and Pains of rheumatism are not permanently, but only temporarily, relieved by external remedies. Why not use an internal remedy—Hood's Sarsaparilla, which corrects the acidity of the blood on which rheumatism depends and cures the disease?—Adv.

THE SHREVEPORT REVIVAL.

Revival services conducted by Rev. George Tucker, of Jackson, Tenn., and Mr. Chas. Wiatt, musical director, with all the Methodist churches of Shreveport co-operating, began September 11 and closed October 2.

The meeting had not gone far before great crowds of people began to attend, and on the first Friday night of the campaign the tent, which held about two thousand people, was overflowed. Great congregations continued to the end of the meeting.

The first week was spent in preparation—sin was denounced in the hoiest and strongest terms possible; noon-day meetings were held in the railroad shops and many cottage prayer meetings were held throughout the city. On one afternoon as many as thirteen prayer meetings were held. The first invitation given proved that the preparation had been thoroughly made, for as many as fifty came forward, and every call thereafter filled the altar with people who sought pardon for their sins. The altar service, which often lasted an hour or longer, resulted in the conversion and reclamation of scores of people. As in the Wesley revivals, men and women prayed through to a consciousness of their acceptance of God. One very happy sight to us of mature years was the conversion, personal work and testimony of the young people.

As to the results, because of the large crowds, it was difficult, almost impossible, to secure the exact number of conversions and reclamations.

In our judgment there were about three hundred who professed conversion or reclamation. Along with these, hundreds of Christians were strengthened in their faith and a dozen or more ministers who attended the meeting were quickened in their zeal for the salvation of souls. Some who are old-residents of Shreveport spoke of the revival as the greatest that has ever occurred in the city. Be that as it may, we know it to be a fact that people of nearly every denomination of Shreveport are speaking of the occasion as a great, sweeping revival.

The meeting itself speaks for the greatness of the evangelist and his singer, but a few facts may be added. Brother Tucker is a living monument to the power of God to save to the uttermost. His experience in sin did not fall short of that of Jerry McCauley's. For he lived for six years in the dives of Chicago and for eighteen years he was an employee of the Illinois Central Railroad, coming in contact with all classes of men. Six years ago he was converted at Jackson, Tenn., in one of Bert Culpepper's meetings and shortly thereafter was called to preach. January 1, 1919, he was made a General Evangelist for industrial centers by the Mission Board of the Southern Methodist Church. Since then he has held great meetings in many of our large cities of the South, and has seen thousands of souls converted under his ministry. He is truly a great evangelist.

MOTION PICTURE INVESTIGATION

By Miss Pauline Suddath,
Assistant Elementary Supt., General
Sunday School Board.

Recently there was a resolution introduced into the United States Senate by Senator Myers, asking for a Federal Investigation of the Motion Picture Industry. This resolution is founded upon the following facts—supported statements:

1. That the Motion Picture interests have entered politics with avowed intention of placing their uncontrolled publicity business and political power in support of any candidate, from Alderman to President, who favors a free screen.

2. That the Motion Picture trade is in the strangle grasp of a few men who are violating the Sherman Anti-Trust and Fair Trade laws.

3. The moral influence of motion pictures has grown steadily worse, and all previous investigations have failed to correct the evil.

Supporting this third statement, this remarkable fact is given: that no producer in America has ever been punished by court or jail sentence for producing an immoral picture, and nine-tenths of all the pictures shown in the world are of American production and are reported by reliable authority to be demoralizing life at home and in foreign countries.

Senator Myers' Senate Resolution 142 is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate or a sub-committee thereof be empowered and directed to conduct, with the assistance of the Department of Justice and the Department of Commerce, an investigation into political activities of the Motion Picture industry in all of its branches throughout the United States, together with such other of its activities as might involve violation of the anti-trust or other laws or improper relations with State Boards of Censorship.

"Resolved, further, That the Judiciary Committee, or a sub-committee thereof conducting such investigation, be empowered to subpoena witnesses for such investigation and to compel the production of books and papers and to employ a stenographer and print the proceedings of such investigation and that the expense thereof be allowed and paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

"Be it further resolved, That the Committee is directed to recommend such remedial action and legislation as it may deem wise in the premises for the Federal Government to undertake."

The above resolution is another effort to secure clean movies; and not only that, but to preserve inviolate the freedom of our representative government which is threatened when four or five motion picture kings seek to control State and National Government for purely selfish business purposes.

JUNALUSKA COMMISSIONERS MEET.

A joint meeting of the commissioners of the Southern Assembly and the Organization Committee in charge of the Movement to present Lake Junaluska to the next General Conference, was held in Chattanooga on October 4, for the purpose of perfecting the plans for turning the Assembly over to the church. Bishop James Atkins is the Chairman of the Southern Assembly Commission and Mr. W. A. Brock of Chattanooga is Chairman of the Organization Committee.

Many representative laymen of the church were present at this meeting, including Bishops Atkins and Cannon; Mr. W. H. Stockham, of Birmingham; B. J. Sloan, of Waynesville; E. L. Brown, of Nashville; J. D. Stentz, of Lake Junaluska; W. A. Brock, of Chattanooga; S. J. High, of Tupelo, Mississippi; John R. Pepper, of Memphis, and A. C. Marts, of Nashville.

The commissioners re-elected Bishop Atkins as their Chairman and named Mr. John R. Pepper as President of the Southern Assembly. As Chairman of the Commission Bishop Atkins continues to be the ranking officer in charge of all the work connected with the Assembly.

This joint meeting planned for a large presentation committee which will have charge of raising the funds necessary to deliver Lake Junaluska to the church free from debt and with all improvements made. This committee will consist of about two representatives from each Conference east of the Mississippi River.

It is significant that the idea of the Southern Assembly was born in a similar meeting of laymen held in Chattanooga several years ago. It seems very fitting therefore that the movement to bring these plans to final completion for delivering a great and self-supporting institution to the absolute control of the church, should also find its center in the same city.—Bulletin.

HISTORY'S MOST REMARKABLE ACHIEVEMENT

The most remarkable achievement in the field of Christian Education in all history is the success of the Christian Education Movement. If this sounds fulsome, it is nevertheless true.

Its spiritual benefits were unprecedented in significance; its financial accomplishments were greater than any former generation ever dared to dream.

In the worst financial situation of history, the Methodists of the South pledged $20,000,000 to their Christian schools and colleges. Who hitherto had dared to hazard such a hope as this?

In one year we gave as much as we would have secured by the plan of conference collections in forty years. In twelve months we performed the feat of a generation.

During this brief period the Church subscribed three-fourths as much as it has invested in all its institutions of learning in the whole history of Methodism.

In 1919, with the spirit and business prospects at the highest point ever reached in American life, our people gave $35,000,000 to causes for which they annually paid $2,000,000. In 1921, with conditions exactly reversed, they gave $20,000,000 to a cause for which they annually paid only $500,000.

We hail, then, with delight, with infinite gratitude, with pride commendable, the remarkable achievement of the Church's most courageous enterprise. In the face of conditions of unparalleled difficulty, Methodism yet accomplished an unparalleled triumph. It is proof positive that no temporal obstacles can stay the onward marching of the King.

Yet withal we are in the midst of an uncompleted Movement. Many quotas have not been reached. Many persons and charges have not done their share.

Shall we not achieve victory on-top of victory in the period yet remaining? Shall we be content to have the mighty Movement be the privilege of a few? Are you willing to be the one who fails in such an all-important cause as this?

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Executive Meeting, Mississippi Conference.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of Mississippi held an important executive meeting in Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., Tuesday, September 13, 1921, with twelve officers and district secretaries present.

President, Mrs. B. F. Lewis, opened the meeting with devotional service, which consisted of Scripture lesson from James and prayers by Mrs. Cottrell, Mrs. Alford and Mrs. Lewis. Secretary read a letter from Miss Pauline Randall, of Songdo, Korea, telling of wonderful work of Bible Woman, Mary Powell.

Reports from officers and district secretaries showed the Conference going forward along all lines of work. District meetings were held in every district and several all-day meetings were helpful.

The Young People's Summer Conference held in Vicksburg was a success. At this conference a resolution was passed that next year the Young People of Mississippi try to hold a joint conference in Biloxi, Miss., with the Louisiana and Alabama Young People.

During the three quarters twelve new Adult, four Young People, seven Juniors and one Baby Division were organized. Three new "Volunteers for Life Service" were reported.

The Meridian Wesley House was reported in need of funds. All auxiliaries were urged to pay promised pledges at once.

Comparing the number of charges in the Conference with the number of Woman's Missionary Societies, the Conference was found well organized.

If Your Trouble Is Scrofula

As Often Acquired as Inherited,

You have eruptions and sores, and perhaps enlarged glands of the neck. This blood disease affects the internal organs, especially the lungs, and if neglected may develop into consumption.

It causes many troubles, and is aggravated by impure air, unwholesome food, bad water, too much heat or cold, and want of proper exercise.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the blood-purifying medicine that has been used with so much satisfaction by three generations, is wonderfully successful in the treatment of scrofula. Give it a trial.

If a cathartic or laxative is needed, take Hood's Pills.

The goal for the fourth quarter is: "A Woman's Missionary Society in Every Charge and Every Society on the Roll of Honor." To make our Conference a 100 per cent Conference we must:

First—Put on an extensive campaign for new auxiliaries.

Second—Report all Mission and Bible Study Classes to Mrs. Steele.

Third—Pray for more volunteers.

Fourth—Send Pledges to Wesley Houses.

Fifth—Observe the Week of Prayer. Meeting closed with prayer by Mrs. McCleskey.

Superintendent of Publicity.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dedication of the MacDonell Wesley Community House.

The dedication of the MacDonell Wesley Community House in Houma, La., was an event long anticipated as one that would mark a distinct stage in the development of the work among the French. It was all that was expected and even more. In spite of a heavy rain earlier in the afternoon, which prevented many from coming, a large crowd had assembled even before 5 o'clock, the appointed hour for the service.

No Methodist bishop had ever before been in this section, so the presence with us of Bishop McMurry was an inspiration and a blessing. Several of the Conference officers of the Woman's Missionary Society were also present and had a share in adding dignity and beauty to the service. They were Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, Secretary, Mrs. C. C. Carver, Treasurer, and Mrs. H. L. Baker, Superintendent of Supplies. It was also our good fortune to have with us nearly all of the preachers of the district and their contribution to the music on the program was greatly appreciated by the audience.

Rev. Martin Hebert, presiding elder of the Houma District, presided, and Dr. G. L. Tucker, of the Episcopal Church, and Rev. H. N. Blackburn, of the Presbyterian Church, took part on the program in Scripture reading and prayer.

After the service of song, Scripture lesson, prayer and special music, the Bishop was introduced and the Home presented to him by the Conference officers. The Bishop's address, though brief, stirred the hearts of all, especially in his beautiful tribute to Mrs. MacDonell, for whom the Home is named. We felt that truly it was worth while to "seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness" as she had done.

After a solo by Rev. A. J. Martin, there were short addresses by Mrs. Montgomery and Mrs. Carver, showing the relationship of the auxiliary and the individual member to the great world-wide work of the Woman's Missionary Council.

The program would have been incomplete without some part being taken by Rev. Robert Martin, the pioneer leader of Methodism in this section. His prayer was a song of gladness and the French hymn which followed was also an expression of joy.

After the service supper was served under the great oaks and a brief social period followed. Then the crowd assembled at the Mission Hall to hear the Bishop preach. The subject chosen was, the Lord's prayer, and never again will that matchless prayer be "vain repetition" to those who heard the earnest exhortation.

The Wesley House was honored by having the Bishop, the Conference officers and some of the preachers as guests for the night; and the following morning many of the people went with Bishop McMurry to Raceland to attend the dedication of the church there.

SPECIAL DAY OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES, NOVEMBER 6.

The following resolution was passed unanimously by the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of Churches at its last meeting on September 9:

"Resolved, That the Administrative Committee of the Federal Churches in America suggest that Sunday, November 6, be observed by the churches as widely as possible throughout the country as a day for special prayer, self-examination and supplication for God's blessing upon the International Conference on Limitation of Armaments."

It is asked that churches be opened everywhere for personal prayer throughout the week of the Conference and that appropriate services be held on Armistice Day at the hour when the Conference convenes.

It is opportune that this day set for prayer and the beginning of the Conference fall within the Week of Prayer for the Woman's Missionary Council. Let the women of the Missionary Societies assist to the utmost of their opportunity in securing the observance of this day of prayer by bringing the matter to the attention of the pastors where no plan is being made for it and by giving a wide publicity to it throughout their communities. Furthermore, let the deliberations of the Conference be remembered daily as the groups of women meet together for prayer.

Mrs. B. W. LIPSCOMB,
Home Base Secretary.

LETTER FROM LELAND, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: The Advocate is a great paper, but few people will pay the high price for a paper. I hope we shall be able to give it to all our people; we need the New Orleans Advocate in every Methodist home.

I have been holding a few meetings. In July, I assisted Brother J. W. Raper at Kilmichael. We had a splendid meeting. I preached to more men and women at Kilmichael than had been members of the church more than fifty years, than ever before in any meeting. Brother Raper is doing real constructive work at Kilmichael.

In September I went to Burnsville to assist R. C. Nanny in a meeting. Though awful hot, we had a very unusual meeting, a great revival in the church. Toward last of the week the pastor said, "We have two infants we want you to baptize;" and since Burnsville had been such a stronghold of immersionists, the pastor suggested I give a talk on the reasons for infant baptism. So I announced the hour and invited the public; and at the appointed time the house was filled, the talk was made and the call given, and seven little fellows were brought forward, one Baptist mother with her three little fellows for baptism, and she came into our church. Then next morning they brought two more little children for baptism. We had several to join from the Baptist Church and others said they were coming—all this on their own initiative.

I have just closed a good meeting here in our church at Leland. We had Brother George, of Hollandale, to do the preaching through last week and our people enjoyed his work with us. His preaching was Biblical and expository and spiritual. We had 10 accessions.

In the early spring we finished remodeling the parsonage, at a cost of $4,000. We have a beauty, and a parsonage of unusual convenience. We are preparing now for Conference, at Amory, where we have one of the prettiest and most modern buildings in North Mississippi, built under my administration.

I go on the second Sunday to assist Brother W. C. Gaiceran in a meeting at Indianola, where I closed one of my best pastorates of four years 14 years ago.

We hope to see you at Amory at Conference.

A world movement will culminate here before this disarmament conference arrives at any conclusion. The people of the world, if necessary, will be on their knees in prayer that this conference shall be fruitful of the purpose which was back of the resolution which was introduced here by the distinguished Senator from Idaho (Mr. Borah). It is not to be twisted and given another meaning."

All well-organized enterprises work by standards. Certain goals are set, certain credits given. If business is stimulated by a well-defined program, why not the church also?

After some experience with rural churches, we are setting forth these requirements for what the Department of Home Missions calls "A Standard Rural Church." We are viewing it only from the standpoint of this Department.

The widespread interest in rural life, the continued call of rural pastors for help in making their churches more efficient, are our reasons for sending this program down to the rural churches. It is our earnest hope that many of them will, in a few years, reach every goal set forth.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL.

There is a well-defined feeling, which is finding expression in the utterances of some of our thoughtful men, that the church is in danger of getting away from a proper realization of the place the penalties of the law have in our preaching to-day. For a long time the emphasis has been placed upon the love of God for a sinful world, and our appeals to sinners have been based upon that love more than upon the penalties to be inflicted if the offers of grace are rejected. As a consequence, a great many people seem to have forgot that they will have to give a rigid account of the deeds done in the body, and their assent to the claims of righteousness is without that change of nature that makes them really the children of God. With too many people sin is no longer an awful fact which inevitably results in death, but merely an incident in the course of life which may or may not produce more or less inconvenience here and hereafter. As a further consequence, there are many people who profess to be religious, and who have the form of godliness, but who know nothing of the power of God in their own lives. In this age the world should be brought face to face with the fact that hell is much more than a figure of speech and that the unrepentant sinner is doomed. It would be a tragedy to try to frighten people into goodness through an appeal to their superstitious fears, but it is to be untrue to the teachings of the gospel itself not to warn them of the wrath to come.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER—MAYBE.

There is an old saying that knowledge is power, but we doubt if the statement is to be accepted as unconditionally and absolutely true. There is a great deal of knowledge that has very little value, and it is a waste of time and energy for the average man to undertake to acquire it. Some of the most learned men of our acquaintance are apparently the most helpless—and the most useless. We knew one man who was a graduate of a great university, a close reader of thought-provoking literature, a close student of questions that loomed large before the public; but he was physically indolent, slovenly in his personal appearance, and utterly without influence in the community in which he lived. He gave no attention to his business affairs and, although he had inherited a large estate, he would have died in poverty if his wife and children had not conserved his business interests. He had knowledge, but it availed him naught. Useful knowledge put to use is power.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE.

The heads of the "big five" unions of railroad workers of the United States, after canvassing the votes of their members on the question of calling a nation-wide strike, have announced that the vote was overwhelmingly in the affirmative, and that the strike will go into effect, beginning on October 30. In spite of this declaration, there seems to be a strong feeling on the part of Government officials and the public generally that the strike will not take place, and negotiations are in progress daily looking toward a peaceful settlement of the issues at stake. The points involved have largely to do with wages, the protest being against a recent reduction of wages authorized by the Labor Board. It is very difficult for a mere layman to get exactly the point of view of the railroad men, but it is hard to believe that their leaders will go to the length of tying up the transportation facilities of the nation at the beginning of winter, when untold suffering would be inflicted upon the innocent public, and at a time when there is already a tremendous sentiment developing against the unions themselves. There is good reason to believe that the Government will take measures that will insure the operation of mail trains and the transportation of necessary food supplies, so that the strike will be doomed to failure from the beginning. We believe thoroughly in the principle of labor organizations, and there are times when a strike seems to be the only means at hand to secure justice; but the time will never come when a comparative few will be justifiable in inflicting terrible suffering upon millions of innocent men, women, and children in order that their own ends may be gained. If the leaders of the railroad men are wise, they will conciliate public opinion instead of antagonizing it.

INCLUDE ENGLISH, TOO.

According to an announcement in the local press, Tulane University has joined a movement inaugurated by the Bee, the oldest Southern newspaper, to cultivate and perpetuate in this section a scholarly knowledge of the French language, which was, for a long time, the prevailing language in Louisiana. The movement appears to us to be a thoroughly commendable one; but we should like to suggest that all our schools, colleges, and universities would be doing a real service to the public by joining in a movement to cultivate and perpetuate a scholarly knowledge of the English language, both spoken and written. When a prominent public speaker says "I have saw," when practiced writers misspell the commonest words, and when high school and college graduates betray an amazing ignorance concerning the use of capital letters and punctuation marks, it is evident that something is radically wrong with our method of teaching our mother tongue. If our public schools would undertake to teach fewer subjects and teach them better, the gain would be great.

GETTING PEOPLE TO CHURCH.

The solution of the problem of getting people to go to church depends, first of all, upon the recognition of the fact that they do not have to go unless they want to. Of course an obligation rests upon every church member to attend the services of the church regularly, but no outward compulsion can be used to put the member in his place. Complaining about the absent ones from the pulpit and quarrelling with them face to face is not likely to fill many pews, either; in fact, it may help empty some of those that are usually occupied. Maybe human nature ought to be different from what it is, but since there is no fundamental change in prospect, we might as well adjust ourselves to the situation and try to put into the services of the church so much that is worth while that people will want to be present. It is much better to draw than it is to drive.

NOT MORALS, BUT MONEY.

A large number of the butchers of New Orleans have presented a petition to the city council asking that an ordinance be passed prohibiting the opening of the city markets on Sunday. The argument is advanced that the great majority of the butchers are in favor of Sunday closing, but all have to keep open because a few persist in doing so. We should like to suggest to these gentlemen that if they would place moral considerations above financial gain, they could afford to close their shops without waiting for a law compelling them to do so, and still stay in business, as some of their competitors have already done. It does look as if some sections of the business community believe that people ought to be made good by law.

THE RED CROSS ROLL CALL.

The American Red Cross is now engaged in its annual "roll call," the purpose being the enlistment of members whose membership dues, at the rate of a dollar a year, will help it to carry on the noble work in which it has been engaged from its beginning. It is a small thing to the individual to contribute this amount for so great a cause, but the aggregate makes possible the accomplishment of a vast amount of good.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

By Hon. C. L. Bates.

Fourth Paper.

I.

In searching out, eliminating, and defining the constitutional principles of Southern Methodism, an authentic and trustworthy source of a knowledge of those principles is the contentions, and deliberately formed opinions, and declared principles of the Southern delegates in the General Conference of 1844, as reflected in their speeches upon the appeal of Mr. Harding and the proceeding against Bishop Andrew, and in the formal papers and resolutions submitted by them to the Conference, as the initial step toward the creation of a separate, independent Southern Church, and the erection of a government for and over it.

To the above sources of information and construction should be added the Report of the Committee on Organization of the Constitutional Convention in 1845, in which the whole matter is reviewed and restated, and the constitutional views of our Southern ecclesiastical statesmen were formally and in detail set forth, which report was adopted by the Convention, there being only two dissenting votes.

In constitutional construction, as in literary and historical criticism, contemporaneous discussion, exposition, and documents, have always been accorded first rank as sources of truth, meaning and intention, and especially so when they emanate from men who were engaged in the exploit. This is a cardinal rule; and in the instant case it is a "pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night," leading the student of the constitutional history of Southern Methodism to the fountain of truth.

Contrariwise, the speeches, contentions, declarations, arguments, avowals, and parliamentary actions of the majority, in the memorable forensic conflict in the General Conference of 1844, signally disclosed their opposing constitutional views, and drew the line of demarcation between the two sections as clearly as if it had been visible to the naked eye.

There was but one ultimate issue between the parties joined; and that was an issue of constitutional law.

But that issue involved the very foundations of ecclesiastical government. True it is, it carried with it many subsidiary issues, all, however, converging to the one fundamental point. In that great ecclesiastical controversy, there was not a single issue of fact involved; the facts were undisputed, and questions of ecclesiastical law and government only were presented for determination. The proceeding was, in that respect, strikingly similar to a great court, sitting upon an "agreed case," with no function but to declare the law and pronounce judgment.

As, when the cases were fully developed and the argument concluded, it appeared that there were neither valid written accusations nor inculpatory facts, a court governed by legal rules and constitutional guaranties would have ordered a judgment of acquittal in favor of both Mr. Harding and Bishop Andrew, to stand as a perpetual bar, notwithstanding the indictments were fallably defective. (Ball v. United States, 163 U. S. 652, 674.) From the trial of Jesus down through all history, ecclesiastical courts have been less scrupulous, less regardful of law and human rights, than civil courts; that seems to result from some inexorable law of their being or constitution.

On June 1, the "previous question" was moved in Bishop Andrew's case, and the yeas and nays being called by delegations, by a vote of 111 to 69 he was deposed and degraded; and on June 3 the delegates of the Southern and Southwestern Annual Conferences "took leave to declare to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, that the continued agitation on the subject of the proscribed civil institution, "in a portion of the church—the frequent action on that subject in the General Conference—and especially the extrajudicial proceedings against Bishop Andrew, which resulted, on Saturday last, in the virtual suspension of him from his office as Superintendent, must produce a state of things in the South which renders a continuance of the jurisdiction of that General Conference over these conferences inconsistent with the success of the ministry in the Southern and Southwestern "State."

The "Declaration" was signed by 51 Southern delegates, presented to and received by the General Conference, entered upon the journal, and was referred to a Committee of Nine, of which Dr. Robert Paine was chairman, with instructions that, if they could not devise a plan for the amicable adjustment of the difficulties then existing in the church, "to devise, if possible, a constitutional plan for a mutual and friendly division of the church."

On June 6, Dr. Bascom presented the "Protest of the Minority in the case of Bishop Andrew," which was received by the General Conference and entered upon the journal, and in which the following grounds of objection and opposition, among others, were stated and supported by elaborate argument:

(1) The act of the majority in Bishop Andrew's case was extrajudicial to all intents and purposes, being both without law and contrary to law.

(2) The General Conference had no jurisdiction to suspend or depose a bishop or subject him to any official disability, except upon formal charge alleging violation of some law or disciplinary obligation of the church, and upon conviction upon due and formal trial.

(3) The action of the majority was a "violation of the fundamental law, usually known as the Compromise law of the church" of 1816, and which was the only law applicable to the case.

(4) The act was an attempt to establish a dangerous precedent, subversive of the union and stability of the church, and especially as placing in jeopardy the General Superintendency of the church, by subjecting any bishop of the church at any time to the will and caprice of a majority of the General Conference, not only without law, but in defiance of the restraints and provisions of law.

(5) In the late act of the majority, law, express law, is appealed from, and expediency and assumed necessity are substituted in its place as a rule of judgment—the law being special, and covering the cases in terms.

(6) The Compromise law "was not a mere legislative act, a simple decree of a General Conference, but partakes of the nature of a grave compact; and is invested with all the sacredness and sanctions of a solemn treaty, binding respectively the well-known parties to its terms and stipulations;" but the majority had "assumed that conscience and principle" required them to violate the law—"the grave compact"—"the solemn treaty."

(7) The episcopacy is a co-ordinate branch, the executive department proper, of the church government; and a bishop is not a mere creature—is in no prominent sense an officer of the General Conference. The bishops, instead of being the officers and creatures of the General Conference, are executive officers and pastoral overseers of the church, and no right of removal accrues except when they fail to accomplish the aims of the church in their appointment, and then only in accordance with the provisions of law; and in the suspension of a bishop by the General Conference, for doing what the law of that body allows him to do, the whole procedure is "an outrage upon justice, as well as law."

The protest concludes with the statement that the "official refusal by the majority * * * to abide the arbitrament of law, is their (minority) principal ground of complaint and remonstrance," and they express the hope and belief that if separation be necessary, "it will be found practicable to devise and adopt such measures and arrangements, present and prospective, as will secure an amicable division of the church upon the broad principles of right and equity, and destined to result in the common good of the great body of ministers and members found on either side the line of separation."

The protest was signed by 59 delegates, and presented in behalf of thirteen Annual Conferences, and portions of the ministry and several other Conferences, embracing nearly five thousand ministers, traveling and local, and a membership of nearly 500,000, constitutionally represented in that General Conference.

III.

The Southern delegates, in stating their case in the "Declaration" and the "Protest," were restrained by a high sense of parliamentary prudence and propriety, ministerial courtesy, due respect and consideration for the majority, and likewise a legitimate prudence and diplomacy, looking to a possible conciliation, failing in which, a fair, just, equitable and constitutional division of the church and property; and the case was not then stated in its full strength and vigor, nor were the radical constitutional views of the majority fully exposed in the documents. The Southern representatives, in that trying conflict, abundantly sustained that high and noble Christian courtesy and prudent statesmanship which belonged to gentlemen of their calling and position in their time, and, though defeated in the parliamentary conflict, they won an honorable separation, and preserved the integrity of Southern Methodism, and transferred their labors to another field, where they could, unrestrained, state their cause and the grounds of the separation in their fullness to the world.

As above indicated, the "Declaration" and "Protest" were amplified and supplemented by the Report of the Committee on Organization of the Constitutional Convention of 1845, which was also written by Dr. Bascom; and, under a familiar rule of construction, those three papers are "one piece," and should be considered and construed together, as an exposition of the constitutional principles of Southern Methodism.

The Report, declaring that the "Declaration" was not intended by its authors to convey the idea or make the impression that no other causes existed rendering a separate organization proper and necessary, was an exhaustive and analytical examination and review of the proceedings of the General Conference, and specifically of the legal and constitutional principles involved; it, the Report, presented a merciless criticism, analysis and exposition of the claim of the General Conference that it was vested with supreme power, legislative, executive and judicial, and possessed the rightful power, authority and jurisdiction to depose, degrade and punish a bishop by a legislative act, in defiance of preordained law; and it demonstrated that the General Conference, pursuant to its revolutionary claim, abandoned the constitution and the entire body of the conventional law of the church, assumed despotic power, and sought to place "the whole Southern ministry in the relation of an inferior caste"—such a "real degradation of the ministry" as would destroy its influence "throughout the South."

The Report declared that the principle of action in the cases of Mr. Harding and Bishop Andrew was "subversive of all order and government;" and that the requisition made upon them was not only extrajudicial, but was "usurpation;" and that as a precedent, the cases gave "to the General Conference all the attributes of a despotism, claiming the right to govern without, above, and against law."

The Report also aimed at the "dangerous doctrines" of the General Conference and the Northern portion of the church, "with regard to the constitution of the church, and the constitutional rights and powers respectively of the episcopacy and the General Conference;" and it was declared:

"We distinctly recognize the jurisdiction of a delegated General Conference, receiving its appointment and authority from the whole constituency of Annual Conferences"—the whole people of the church, not in mass, but in their organic capacity as Annual Conferences, composed of all the preachers, traveling and local, and the private members—"the whole constituency."

IV.

The "Declaration" carries on its face the necessary implication that the majority party in the General Conference of 1844 had entered the field of politics, had adopted the tenets, and were advancing the fortunes of a political party, to the detriment and divisions of the church. (McTyeire, History of Methodism, pp. 601-3, 618 et seq.)

Dr. Wm. A. Smith, of Virginia, who represented Mr. Harding on his appeal, in his argument, too mindful of the courtesies of debate in an ecclesiastical body, refrained from making the direct charge that his adversaries in the cause had entered politics, nevertheless warned them that there was "danger" of the church "stepping out of the track of duty, and engaging herself in political relations, and thus becoming a politico-ecclesiastical establishment;" and he declared that "the ministers are set apart to explain religion, to enforce God's laws, and teach the doctrines of the Bible, and should let all political subjects alone. * * * The genius of our church government requires that we confine ourselves exclusively to spiritual matters. * * * Let the General Conference, let all the ministers in the church, confine themselves to their appropriate calling—let them preach the grace of Christ—and they will accomplish their object."

A new political party had arisen, whose leaders did not hesitate to seek the aid of the ministers of religion, and as early as the sitting of the General Conference in Cincinnati (1836) responses were had from that source, and in eight years the "politico-ecclesiastical establishment" had been realized. A new political party had arisen, whose constant appeal was to the "higher law," and one of whose dogmas was that the "federal constitution is a covenant with death and a league with hell," and of which party the great constitutional Jere S. Black wrote: "They did not conceal their hostility to the Federal and State governments. The Constitution stood in their way, and they cursed it bitterly; the Bible was quoted against them, and they reviled God Almighty himself."

Affiliation with such a political party was a suitable training for the overthrow of ecclesiastical constitutions, statutes and disciplines, the assertion of "universal supremacy," and a resort to the procedural methods of the British Crown of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

TRAVEL LETTERS FROM DR. AND MRS. I. W. COOPER.

Dear Dr. Carley: The past few weeks have been crowded so full of sight-seeing that we have fallen behind with all of our correspondence as well as with our letters to the Advocate. From this time on, however, we hope to send you an epistle each week until you have the whole record of our journey.

This letter is to be about the Holy Land, and it is not altogether a pleasure to write it, because we must tell of one of the greatest disappointments of our lives. We had always idealized these countries—especially Palestine. It seemed nothing but fitting that our Saviour's native land should be one of beauty—but we found it far otherwise. Indeed, the barren hillsides, the parched and stony ways, the poor dwellings, and above all the ignorant, unresponsive faces of the inhabitants, made our hearts ache to think of the hardships and rebuffs which the Master must have met all during his life. Of course we realize, though, that material conditions, as well as the character and nationality of the people, have changed greatly since our Lord's earthly ministry, and yet we feel sure that the same hopelessness we see to-day must have been stamped on the fields and valleys that knew his footprints. To know this makes His pilgrimage in the flesh both a more pathetic incident and a more glorious sacrifice.

Our route took us through Syria, before we reached Palestine, for we landed at Beyruth (also spelled Beirut) which is, by the way, getting to be rather modern for a little Oriental city. All Syria is under French rule, since the war, so we found French soldiers much in evidence all over the town. We found, later, that their presence is necessary to the maintenance of peace, for these people are ruthless, fiery and quarrelsome. We were here the night of the sixteenth of July. The heat was very intense and the moonlight most glorious, so we were tempted to take a carriage-drive around the city. Our hotelkeeper seemed rather loath to see us go and cautioned our driver to take us only to certain streets of the town and by no means to leave the city limits as it was dangerous to go far at night. The moon's light was kinder to Beirut than the sun's—so we left the city next morning without feeling that it was "more dirty than picturesque."

Because of the wonderful mountain scenery through which we passed, the all-day ride from Beirut to Damascus would have been very enjoyable had it not been for poor train accommodations, poor food, almost no water and intense heat. Just about four in the afternoon our whole party felt "wilted," when the train guard came through and told us we would have a stop of fifteen minutes by a mountain stream, for refreshment. It needed no second invitation for our party to "disembark." Never, we believe, did water seem more clear and sparkling, never was its gurgle more grateful to the ear, or its coolness more refreshing to the lips and hands! Memory will long hold a picture of that little streamlet and its delightful, shady setting!

The next three days were spent in the oldest city in the world—Damascus. Of all the dirty, squalid cities we saw in the Orient, this one was the worst. Most of the streets are very narrow and very populous, filled not only with people but with donkeys and goats. Many of their best houses opened into narrow, filthy little alleyways. These streets are usually paved with cobble stones, but they look as if they had never even dreamed of a street sweeper or a water-wagon. The main thoroughfares are sprinkled each day by means of pouring water from bottles made of skins. These skin-bottles are so small that we would be afraid to estimate how long a time it must take to water one city block. Consequently, the streets of Damascus are filthy beyond words and reeking with unpleasant odors. The natives, however, do not seem to realize this and to all appearances they are a very happy people—in their street life. Even if they are not kind to each other, they never fall in their kindness to dumb brutes. Their donkeys and horses are usually decorated with beads, and often with very elaborate collars to which little bells are attached. The goat seems to be the closest friend of every Oriental man. Goats and sheep are tied just within the doorways of shops and houses. There they live all day with their owners. At any time of day in these Southern countries you may see the Easterner milking his goat, or, if he is a dairyman, driving his herd of goats or sheep through the street until he comes to the home of some customer. There he rings the bell or uses the door-knocker and the owner comes out and presents a receptacle for the milk. The "dairyman" sits down and milks there, in the presence of his customer. Thus the "consumer" is assured of fresh, undiluted milk!

The streets are so full of animals, of vegetables and of fruits that one is not surprised to see swarms of flies on all hands. Not one single wire screen door or window did we see in all the East! Ignorance of modern methods is not the only reason for this. Flies are everywhere because they are sacred. They have a superstition that you must never brush away a fly, else the spirits will be angry with you. So, one consequence is that mothers will never drive the flies away from their babies' faces, whether they are awake or asleep and so terrible diseases are carried to the lips and eyes of sleeping infants. Nowhere else in the world, perhaps, is ophthalmia so prevalent as in these Oriental countries.

But there is another, more attractive side of life in Damascus. These people have at least one industry in the execution of which they are real artists. This is the making of brass utensils, which are hammered, or inlaid with silver, or finely engraved. They are also past-masters in fine inlay work in various woods, ivory and mother-of-pearl. We were fortunate enough to visit one of their largest brass factories and see the workmen engaged at their craft. We were, by the way, impressed with the fact that they need a child labor law, for this factory was crowded with very small children who were hammering away as diligently as the old men and women.

It would not be fair to the women if we failed to mention their wonderful embroidery, most of it done with gold and silver thread. A large percent of it is, of course, done by the women of the Mohammedan harems, and the finest of it is on sale only in the exclusive shops.

One morning, we had a drive through the city. It was then that we saw a part of the old Roman Wall and the guide pointed out to us the place where Paul was let down over the walls in a basket, as we are told in the ninth chapter of Acts. Then we went into the street called "Straight" where Ananias was commanded to seek Paul—and found him. From there, we went to the "House of Ananias," and we came, for the first time, into contact with the Eastern custom of building a chapel, or a church, over every spot which has connection with any part of sacred history. So we found not the "House of Ananias," but a little Catholic chapel. The Christians, by the way, have a distinct "quarter" of the city, as do all Jews and Mohammedans.

The street called "Straight" certainly deserves its name, for it runs for over a mile through the central district of the city. It is the principal market, or bazaar, street of the town. It is quite wide and is entirely roofed over with glass, so that shoppers, pedestrians and vehicles of all kinds are fully protected from the weather. On either side of the street the shopmen display their goods in small, open booths. Eastern merchants, by the way, have little need for salesmen as the shop is so small that the owner is able to keep all of his stock under his own eye and supervision. Speaking of merchants, you have, we feel sure, often heard of the Eastern custom of "barter" or "trade." The merchant usually asks three or four times more for his wares than he expects you to pay him. It is for you to demonstrate your keenness of intellect by "Jeweling" him down. The smarter you are, the cheaper you buy. We regret to say that this practice holds in some European countries—particularly Italy—as well as in the Orient.

Our hotel in Damascus was very near to a large mosque. Five times a day the muezzin called from the turret of the mosque which was within a stone's throw of our window. The first call to prayer was at four in the morning. At that time of day the world was so quiet and we were so close at hand that we should have been able to hear the words of his call, but this was not so. Not even the words Allah or Mohammed were distinguishable in this almost inhumanly weird chant. The melancholy of it was certainly calculated to make one feel as if it were time to turn away from a lost world. In another letter, we shall write much more about Mohammedan religion and customs.

Sincerely your friends,

DR. AND MRS. I. W. COOPER.

A JOURNEY TO THE ORIENT—FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF JAPAN.

By Fitzgerald S. Parker, D.D.

III.

Quite naturally I had certain preconceptions of the Orient in general and of Japan in particular. When I looked out upon the harbor of Yokohama on the fourteenth day after clearing from San Francisco and saw the junk-sail fishing boats and sampans and multitude of mighty steamships that bear the commerce of all nations to Japan and the manufactures of Japan to all ports of the world, and later when the ship docked and I observed the native costumes and the jinrickshas with their human draught animals, each feature corresponded well with my anticipations. But when I looked over the parts of the city that could be viewed from the deck of the ship, the great warehouses and public buildings and houses of commerce and finance gave one the impression of an American or European city, an impression inharmonious with the Japanese figures, faces and costumes to be seen on the dock.

Having submitted my bags (for I am not encumbered by a trunk) to the inspection of the customs officer on the dock, I was about to seize my luggage and start for a jinricksha, when the officer detained me with a request for two yen each as a "landing charge" for my bags. I supposed it was worth it, as one would not like to have to get off on the bare sands that must have preceded these docks of massive concrete and stone; but my American dollars were summarily rejected and I had to have recourse to Dr. Hager's purse. With luggage piled up in front of me—two bags, a "Corena" and the brief case presented to me by the Louisiana Conference—in a ricksha I followed Hager, experiencing a queer sensation at being drawn by a human horse, who struck a comfortable trot and trundled me along in the smallest and the handsomest vehicle I have ever ridden in since the time when I remember not the luxury of a baby carriage. The way was over well paved streets between substantial buildings of European architecture. The human horse and his dainty vehicle are here far more important than the automobile. The ricksha is beautifully built, with wire tension wheels, nickel-plated rims and hubs, pneumatic tires, ball bearings, leather hood, and good upholstery. You have but to tell your horse where you wish to go, and he strikes a trot and in a surprisingly short time drops the shafts, and there you are; you hand him about forty sen (20c) for a haul of a mile, he bows low and smiles and goes in search of another passenger. Unable to speak Japanese, when alone I secure in advance a writing in Japanese stating where I wish to go, and lo, my horse can read it, and he takes me there with promptness and certainty. He is classified according to Mosaic principles as a clean animal, for he "divideth the cloven hoof and cheweth the cud." He wears a pair of tobi, or cloth shoes with rubber sole, that have a separate stall for the great toe, thus giving him the appearance of having a cloven hoof. Our destination this time was the Young Men's Christian Association, where we lunched amid conditions that reminded me strongly of great institutions of the same name and order in the home lands, only the polite secretarial staff and the waiter girls in the cafe were Japanese.

After my revision of architectural preconceptions I had another new thought coming to me when I went into the Chartered Bank to sell some Fourth and First National Bank traveler's cheques for Japanese yen. Like the rest of America I had been fed up on the statement that all the bank clerks in Japan were Chinese, as the Japanese were deemed untrustworthy; but even in this great British concern I observed that the clerks were Japanese. On mentioning my surprise to Hager, I was informed that if in any Japanese bank I could find a Chinese clerk the said Hager would eat him. I considered the asseveration sufficient without putting Hager's cannibalistic boast to the test. The way the impression has got abroad is this: In the beginning of Japan's resumption of intercourse with the rest of the world the banks were all branches of the great British, Dutch and French East India companies, and naturally brought with them their skilled and trusted servants, many of whom, because of the intricacies of foreign exchange, have remained with them until recent times, but I understand that this has never been the case in the banks operated by Japanese capitalists.

A trolley car ride of one hour brought us from Yokohama to Tokyo, the capital city, of over two millions population. Seaward the way reminded me of the sea marsh with its intricacies of lagoon and bayou that one crosses on the Louisville and Nashville and the Northeastern Railroads north and east of New Orleans. The humid, warm atmosphere and the appearance of sky and water at this time of the year are the same; but population is dense, while at home we should travel for miles and scarcely see a fisherman's hut. At Tokyo, on emerging from the Central Station, we were immediately in front of the site of the great building that had been erected for the World's Sunday School Convention, and as the result of defective wiring had burned to the ground an hour before the time set for the opening of the Convention. As impressive as the great building, and far more important in developing local sympathy, was the promptness with which the Japanese citizenry and authorities came to the support of the management and averted the disaster by securing the largest theatre in the city for the Convention, even at the expense of canceling engagements for its use at the same time.

Like some of our American cities, Tokyo has no union station, and to get the train for Karuizawa one must cross the city to Ueno. Hager suggested that we take the trolley and put our luggage on a jinricksha, as it was in excess of that allowed on the street cars. Here I had another impression of Japanese untrustworthiness corrected. I demurred at entrusting all my possessions to an irresponsible man, who could easily run away with them, but was assured that he was perfectly trustworthy. At Ueno I waited somewhat anxiously for the appearance of my bags, despite Hager's reassurances, and was much relieved when my man came up smiling, and not only delivered my baggage, but placed it in the parcel check room for me. I have since had occasion to test the "coureman" and have thus far found him absolutely trustworthy.

With nearly three hours to wait for a train to Karuizawa, there was time to walk in the park hard by the Ueno Station and observe the streams of people going and coming and the omnipresent bicyclists scorching along in sinuous courses as they made their way in and out of the foot passengers that thronged the avenues. In an American city the drives would have been monopolized by automobiles speeding back and forth, but here they are conspicuously absent; only a solitary car now and then honks the bicyclists and the pedestrians aside. Here and everywhere else in Japan the ear is accosted by the peculiar xylophonic Japanese footgear. In public buildings and railroad stations, where large numbers of people are constantly passing, it resembles a treble note repeated with the rapidity of vibrations. Both men and women wear a sort of sock with separate stall for the great toe, made of cloth, rather than knit, and for usual out-of-door use a sandal, the thongs of which pass between the great toe and the other toes, having on the bottom two cleats that may be as high as two inches, by which the foot is kept clear of the muddy street. The sock is called tobi and the sandal geta. Sometimes, instead of the geta, a straw-soled sandal called zori is worn. It is the impact of the geta upon the floors and pavements that makes the wooden din to which I have referred. Ueno Park is different from our great city parks in the possession of expressions of antiquity. Shinto shrines, prefaced by the peculiar stone lanterns and torii that one learns to expect at almost every turn are in evidence, but the oldest features of the scene are the trees. Limbs that would long ago have fallen under the pull of gravitation but for the props under them reach over walls and roads, attesting the almost druidic care these people have for a tree. Of course, lakes are a part of the landscape. A Japanese garden, however small, perhaps less than two feet square, has its lake, as has the great park its extensive and beautiful artificial lakes. There are mountains and groves in miniature, or larger, but never absent. It is delightful to observe the way the principles of landscape gardening are wrought out in the least as well as the greatest of opportunities here. The profusion of beautiful flowers, one might almost say their omnipresence, is also a witness to the sense of the beautiful in nature that dominates the Japanese.

A Japanese second-class railroad coach was my next discovery. When my kind and competent Cicerone, Dr. Hager, spoke of second-class tickets I said nothing, a way I have of concealing ignorance, and I have since learned that first-class is almost boycotted by the average citizen. Such a crowd as pressed toward the train gates I have seldom seen, such a clatter as their getas made I have seldom heard, and there seemed to be fair promise of a scramble for seats as we waited patiently in line a long way from the still closed gate, when a polite official approached us and indicated that we were to follow him. I had heard of the inconveniences that foreigners, especially Americans, are subjected to by Japanese officialdom, and felt for my passport and wondered how long it might take to find the American Consul if needed, when, lo, we were being ushered through a special gate and directed to the train. Here was another correction. I have yet to experience any variation from the utmost courtesy and consideration on the part of Japanese officials. Here in Seoul, where I am writing, I did have the thrill, while being driven by Miss Oliver, of being held up by the Japanese police, and enjoying the rapid gathering of a crowd of Koreans around the car while the officer explained that it was necessary for every car to have painted upon it the Chinese character indicating the province whence it had come. Miss Oliver immediately took the offensive and vigorously upbraided the officer for not keeping people informed of the requirements of the law; whereupon we were released and proceeded on our way, the promise having been given that the law would be complied with. But back to the second-class carriage. The roads are of narrow gauge and the seats in the second-class carriages run lengthwise. Your seat is easily held by depositing a piece of baggage if you chance to leave it, but is not strictly distinguished from the next one. Upholstery is of plush and rather elegant, and all the appointments are equal to our first-class day coaches. The Japanese make themselves comfortable on a journey and for that purpose carry what may be deemed necessary in the way of undress, viands, and water for drinking. As it would be vain to protest, I am reconciling myself to the custom of smoking everywhere. There is no escape on land or sea. The cigarette is always in evidence, but in public at least I have rarely seen women of the better class smoking.

The darkness deprived us of the view of wonderful mountain scenery on the way from Tokyo to Karuizawa. I afterwards saw it and wondered and admired. The stretch of road extending some twenty-five miles southward is electrified. The locomotive pulls up by means of a cogged rail, and going the other way holds back by the same means. Within a length of seventeen miles there are twenty-six tunnels. Perennial rushing water and wooded mountains remind one a little of the Canadian Rockies, although the trees are not of the same species. There are spruce and pine and hemlock and fir and the beautiful cryptomeria, apparently first cousin to our California red wood, but their angles are not the same as of those in the Rockies. Everywhere it is evident that the Government does not intend that the mountains shall be denuded, and thus the streams made to alternate between torrent and dry bed, the farm lands to wash away, the supply of timber to cease, the cost of fuel to rise to prohibitive prices. Wherever a tree can grow without disturbing the balance of the arable lands, there is a tree. I have heard of an idiot who criticised the Government for not cutting down the forests and thus developing the country. The ass upon which Balaam rode was a genius and a seer in comparison with this promoter. Manchuria and Korea have used up all their trees, and their mountains and plains are washing into the sea, or were until the Japanese began their great work of afforestation in Korea and in that part of Manchuria for which they have assumed economic responsibility. But if the forestry is wonderful, the agriculture is no less so in its way. The valleys stretch away in green fields and gardens; the hillsides are terraced and cultivated to the limit. Sometimes a terrace six feet high forms a little field no wider in which flooded rice is growing. I observed that there are at least three general varieties of rice cultivated, which mature at different times, thus more nearly assuring safety from disaster caused by unfavorably seasons. One sort was ready for the sickle, another just beginning to head up and a third yet in the blade and wearing its fresh summer green. Rice culture upon our southwestern Louisiana prairies is a different thing. There the broad fields are sown by machine drills and reaped by McCormick binders; here every blade of rice has been transplanted to fields ploughed while wet and every head is reaped with a sickle. The salvation of these people from excessive toil and the deadening of their spiritual natures is to be through industrial development under right restrictions of hours of labor and provisions for well-being. The broad planes of Siberia and our own West should furnish food in exchange for the goods that these people are capable of making more cheaply than we can. Of course this does not square with the Fordney tariff bill, but it does accord with internationalism and must be in the long run the best policy.

It was past midnight when we reached our destination and were taken in charge by the polite employees of the Hotel Karuizawa. The ride from the station of something over a mile was taken in that Western innovation which had reached this height and remoteness, an automobile. I was soon enjoying the luxuries of an American pattern Japanese hotel. My bags had not come up, but I was too sleepy to wait for them, and the next morning found that they were deposited in the hall, but the too considerate porter had refrained from knocking, lest I should have been asleep and preferred not to be awakened.

LOYAL PROTEST.

By Rev. J. H. Holder.

Trivial incidents in boyhood often remain in memory through life. My father was a Tate County farmer. From the time I was eleven years old I had to lead a bunch of Negro wage hands at the plow and at the hoe. If Mr. Negro made row for row with me, he got his wages. The noon hour was the best of the day—good dinner and an hour of rest spent usually on a pallet on the big veranda, or under the shade of a big tree in the wagon yard. Rest hour was up, but George, a young, lazy, buck Negro was still sleeping. Another Negro of the gang decided to have some fun. Taking down a set of plow gear, he slipped near to sleeping George, began rattling the chains on the ground while the others of the bunch began halloing, "Whoa! Whoa! Whoa Pete!" Pete was a big, wild, unruly mule. George, suddenly aroused from his slumber, bleary-eyed, sprang like a cat to his feet and began to climb the wall of the house, while the crowd laughed lustily at his fright and antics. When George, still dazed and half asleep, realized the situation he began to fight everything in sight.

How true everywhere human nature is to its laws! A few months ago the real thinkers and leaders in the educational work of our great church set about to arouse a slumbering, indifferent church to a general condition in society and to existing conditions in the field of education, with the earnest prayer and fervent hope that they might get every man aroused and enlisted in real work and life-saving, sacrificial service. The Christian Education Movement has succeeded beyond the dream of even the enthusiasts. The church is presenting an almost solid front; awakened, she is in earnest about the task. Unfortunately a few "sleepy Georges" are trying to scale the wall or to fight the very thing that brought them to consciousness. Fighting the Christian Education Movement, or blocking its progress with question marks (???) or the airing of individual grievances can speak but one of two things, a misunderstanding of the real objectives of the Movement or maliciously stirring up strife.

The awful truth is that the church at large was asleep to the perils we face in the field of education. Notwithstanding our educational leaders sounded forth a clarion call from one end of this land to another, many of our Methodist folks are still skeptical as to the truth of the warning. This Movement was and is a mighty call to come back to the Old Standards, to Righteousness, to Consecrated Life Service, to a more thorough, purer CHRISTIAN EDUCATION, to Loyalty to the only set of Educational Institutions that we can feel safe about religiously, the sanest institutions in America.

The leaders in this Movement are men whose orthodoxy I have not heard questioned—Bishop Denny, Bishop Candler, Dr. J. H. Reynolds, Dr. Stonewall Anderson, Dr. Cook and such men. They have pledged themselves and the Movement to orthodox teaching. The literature has held up the highest standard of orthodox Christianity. With two or three possible exceptions, there have been no charges that have come to our ears against any man or men teaching in Southern Methodist schools. Our schools stand for the highest type of evangelical Christianity, and the teachings of orthodox Methodism. The product of these schools is an answer to the charges made. There are about FORTY men in the ministry in North Mississippi Conference that attended our Methodist colleges, a number of them graduates, several graduates of the theological schools. I should like for some one to show me one of these forty that is unorthodox.

It is our purpose to turn on the light and demand that those not in accord with our doctrines, if there be such, shall be taken from our school faculties. We stand for scholarship, but we stand for orthodox Methodist Christianity FIRST. Culture and science are important, but REVELATION and spiritual Christianity must be FIRST. Will any Methodist be so unthoughtful as to try to destroy the only hope we have of saving the situation?

If we turn from our church and her schools, to what shall we turn? Where are better ones? Shall we desert our only hope for the future? We do not claim perfection, but where are better ones? Vigorous protest, resolutions, severe criticism where deserved is welcomed, but to fight the church and her institutions while eating her bread, to starve our schools and withhold our help and support because, forsooth, some man is teaching unorthodoxy in some one of the ninety schools is close akin to treachery.

No man in this great Movement has any brief for any man teaching any form of heresy in any school. If there is a Modernist in any Methodist school, then he may prepare himself for the coming storm that is being raised by the propaganda of this great Christian Education Movement, and the assault that will surely be made by those of us who believe in the inspired Bible and the Divine Christ.

NATIONAL OBSERVANCE SUNDAY.

Please call on all pastors and Sunday school superintendents to announce to their people that the fight for prohibition is not over. We want to see to it that law and order prevail, and the practical way to do this is to elect to public office men and women who are in sympathy with the law—you would not elect a burglar as sheriff to break up burglary.

It would surprise you to know the attitude of some public officials toward the present supreme law of the land known as the Volstead Law.

On with the battle! A. W. TURNER,

State Supt., La. Anti-Saloon League.

URGENT NEEDS AT PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

While it is well to remind the busy brethren of Pay-Up Week in the Educational Movement, I do not think it is necessary to argue or exhort. All intelligent Methodists know that our church schools have suffered for lack of funds and all loyal Methodists will be eager to contribute what they have promised, and even more, if they find themselves able to make increase.

Port Gibson Female College stood still during the first half of the quadrennium, as it had been ordered to do, while the Missionary Centenary was in progress and suffered patiently for needed funds. We must have additional laboratory supplies without delay. A heating plant and additional buildings and improvement of the old are vital and urgent needs. The trustees have ceased to lease the institution and are operating it under the approved plan. They are making improvements in teaching force and otherwise as rapidly as facilities warrant. In the nature of things, the attendance will be limited till there are larger accommodations.

The treasurer of our Board is Hon. J. T. Drake, of the well-known and honored family who have figured largely in Southern Methodism. Our Executive Committee consists of Dr. L. A. Smith, Mr. J. J. Jones and Mrs. L. B. Allen, all loyal Methodists and tried friends of Christian Education.

ROLFE HUNT, President.

A SUGGESTION TO THE COUNTRY CHURCH.

This editor has served as pastor of a country circuit and he has been the presiding elder of a district that has many country churches. He knows what he is talking about when he says that indifference towards making the church comfortable in the winter is a great handicap to our work on many country charges. Rather than spend a few cents or at most a few dollars, some country churches will allow broken panes to remain in the windows through which the winter winds will give unbroken pains to rheumatics or people of delicate health who may be brave enough to go to church. Instead of having the house warm and comfortable, some churches are accustomed to building the fire in the heater about the time the service should begin. The members all know this and so they wait for the other fellow to get to church first and start the fire. The average member gets there about 30 minutes after the service should begin. In some churches the fire is stopped or rust has eaten holes in the stove pipe and the smoke escapes and fills the building. In some others the tobacco chewers will sit near the heater and squirt there aniseer on the hot stove and thus envelop the worshippers with a vapor that is sickening. As a consequence many country churches do not have the attendance in the winter that they ought to have. The work lags. Individuals suffer. The church loses ground. This article is written in the hope that the pastor and official boards will see to it that every church in the bounds of the two Alabama Conferences is safe, clean and sweet and comfortable through the winter. See that kindling and coal or wood are on hand. See that the windows have glass and the doors are so that they can be closed. See that it is somebody's duty to have the church warm and comfortable, not by twelve o'clock, but by eleven. See that the first tobacco user that pollutes the stove with foul excretion is sent to the hospital. Keep God's house in such a condition that it may prove attractive and conducive to worship and let everybody know that it is going to be in that condition. We believe such action will be for the good of the church and for the glory of God. Try it.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

We must be as courteous to a man as we are to a picture, to which we are always willing to give the advantage of a good light. Life is not so short but that there is always time enough for courtesy.—R. W. Emerson.

LITTLE TALKS ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By Honorable Josephus Daniels,
Former Secretary of the Navy of the United States.

The Genius of Methodism.
V.

The Methodist Church was born in a college. It hastened to carry the light of religion and learning to men and women in factories and in mines. In this hour when learning too often fails to recognize its debt to religion there is significance in the revolution wrought by the early Wesleyan preachers.

In his "History of the English People," Green says that the early Methodists "gave the first impulse to popular education" and that "the revival began in a small knot of Oxford students who were in revolt against the religious deadness of their times." Naturally Wesley and his associates at Oxford felt that all they had learned in the wisdom of the schools should be shared with those sentenced to hard work at such long hours that neither parents nor children enjoyed schooling.

The first step was to preach to them, to reach their hearts and point them to a better life, and to follow that with arousing the people toward the need of the "popular education" toward which Green says early Methodists gave great stimulus. The education that Wesley and Whitefield received in the higher institutions would have brought little blessing to the toilers but for the driving force of religious consecration. Green says, "The Methodists themselves were the least result of the Methodist revival." It touched the Established Church and spirited dissenters to new faith and holy zeal. It broke the lethargy of the clergy. It gave a new moral enthusiasm to the nation at large. It relieved literature of the foulness which had infested it. It gave a new philanthropic impulse to the world.

In this hour when, "after war and after madness," a shell-shocked world is struggling and floundering, our schools and colleges are crowded to overflowing with earnest youths. These young men and young women are seeking the truth, digging knowledge, and smelting for wisdom. Are they finding it in the seats of learning? The answer is, as to most of them, unqualifiedly yes. But the average parent is disturbed because they fear too little attention is paid to ethics and morals and religion in our educational institutions. It sometimes happens that young men go out of Christian homes to college, with firm faith in the God of their fathers, to return from college with knowledge of everything else except the wisdom which is from above.

Endowed with a vital faith in the Great Teacher, fortified with the lore of the sages, strengthened with wide reading and broad culture, broadened by discussion and toleration, the youth with this equipment runs easily and surely to the goal. Happy the people with such institutions of learning! Strong the nation with leaders so equipped and furnished for solving the grave problems which the coming generations must face!

There is not a well-managed college or university in the country enjoying popular confidence that is not overcrowded. The immediate demand is for buildings to meet the insistent need and for trained teachers. The State, the church and the individual must measure up to this demand by a liberality hitherto unknown. It is an investment that will pay larger dividends for a longer period than any other way in which their money can be employed.

I hope to see the day when colleges will be as free to every capable young man and woman as the primary schools are to every child; when educators will feel the compulsion of being religious guides, as well as mental leaders; and when education not only fits men for larger social service, but when educated men are animated by the same spirit of devotion to their fellow men which sent Wesley and Whitefield direct from classic halls to the grimy pits of the miners, carrying a new light and a new gospel of hope to men denied even the sunlight of heaven.

If the great church to which we belong measures up to its opportunity and responsibility, it may be privileged to have some future historian give it the high place in world uplift which Green gave to Methodists in Wesley's day.

A distinguished Canadian recently lamented the fact that so many young people lacked the habit of church-going. James Bryce deplors the fact that Bible-reading is not followed as in former days.

Is it not true that crass materialism threatens the world to-day as when Wesley and Whitefield stirred a revival of the old faith? What is the answer? It is not in education alone, or culture or commerce or in wealth. It is in the old-fashioned religion preached with demonstration and power.

Is it too much to hope that the Methodists of this century, seeking the baptism of consecration, may take a large place in bringing like blessings to a world that is stumbling in the uncertainties and miasma which have followed war?

ANOTHER LETTER FROM DR. BRISCOE CARTER.

Dear Brother Carley: As I said in my last, we landed in Liverpool on the 30th of August. Dr. Paul Linn, of Central College, Mo., wife, and their nieces, Miss Metcalf and Miss Basket, and Dr. R. H. Cooper, of the Missouri Conference, and I organized the C. L. C. Tours and started to see some of England in the few days remaining before the conference opened. We went first to Chester, possibly the oldest settlement in England with a history. Nothing certain is known of the early history of what is now the Cathedral Church of Chester. The monks claimed that a church stood on the site "soon after Lucius and afore King Arthure." At any rate, one likes to believe that here stood the Christian church of Roman Chester, the city of the Legions; and this is very probable. Tradition has it that it was dedicated to Saints Peter and Paul, and that here later grew up a nunnery, which Ethelfleda, the daughter of Alfred the Great, replaced by a college of secular canons. When Chester was destroyed by the heathen Eitelforth in 607 the church could hardly have escaped.

Ethelfleda is most probably the foundress of the college, for it was she who rebuilt the city and the walls after they had lain waste for many years.

According to the monks, the body of Saint Werburgh, daughter of Wuifer's King of Mercia, was translated from Hanbury, where she was buried in 699, to Chester in 874. It is certain that a church stood on the present site in 968. for in that year Edgar granted a charter to the Canons, and later the great Earl Leopis, the husband of Lady Godiva, gave them valuable presents.

This secular foundation would be particularly distasteful to the Norman conquerors, to whom the regularity of a monastery was the ideal of a religious life. In 1093 Hugh Lupus, the first Norman Earl and a nephew of William the Conqueror, ejected the Canons, and set about building a new church for Benedictine monks.

The saintly Anselm, Abbot of the great Monastery of Bee in Normandy, came to aid him in his plans. It was on his way back from Chester that Anselm was forced to become Archbishop of Canterbury by William Rufus. The monks probably came from Bee, and Anselm's Chaplain, Richard, became first Abbot. Hugh himself entered the monastery in his latter days. In 1541, at the dissolution of the monastery, Henry VIII, the great church grabber of all the ages, converted the Abbey into the cathedral church of his Diocese of Chester, to be served by a dean and six canons.

The last Abbot, Thomas Clark, became the first dean of the New Foundation, and so the continuity of the services so dear to the modern established churchman remained unbroken. So much for its ecclesiastical history.

Here when the style of architecture changes, they do not tear down the house because it is out of date, but let it remain and make the additions according to the then prevailing style. Some of these cathedrals were hundreds of years in building, and you can tell by the architecture when the work was done—so say the antiquarians, and I agree, for here it is. In this cathedral "these stones were wrought," says one "by our forefathers in the land from time to time during all the centuries of British history onward from the Norman Conquest. Knowledge that we have such a past and actual contact with it in our great monument should be strengthening and rest-giving to all who will think of it. The Nation's antiquities are a great inheritance intrusted for a short time to our care."

My belief in the great statement that the gates of death shall not prevail against the church has been strengthened by visiting these great monuments to the faith of the people of the past. No one looking at them will have any fear of its survival. However much we modern men may differ from the church away back there as to some of its doctrines and its policy, as we look at these monuments of their zeal, faith and labor, we have to honor the spirit that produced such lasting monuments to the Cross. In some I have seen the most marvelous wood and stone carving the world has to-day, in an obscure corner of a dim cathedral aisle. Nothing to indicate the name of the worker, but exalting in some emblem the Gospel of the Cross—nothing so minutely expressing the fact of the worker's being lost in his work. These certainly had the right spirit—a spirit that has not always been possessed by all workers since. We walked around the old Roman wall, where in all probability Julius Caesar stood to review the Legions; ascended the old tower and looked out of the same window through which Charles II looked and saw his troops beaten by Cromwell!—my, but that takes you back a few steps! We saw in the tower many Roman antiques which have been dug up in the neighborhood. My, how I have been reveling in the antiques since coming here! We saw the body of a man yesterday who was buried in Egypt in prehistoric times, before history began to be recorded on brick or papyrus or stone, and as far back as you go man is on record as a religious being—in fact, in his effort to preserve his religion, just so far has he immortalized himself. Side by side in the grave with him was evidence of his faith in a life beyond.

From Chester we went to Warwick as headquarters and visited Stratford-on-Avon, Kenilworth, Coventry and its three spires, saw the street down which Lady Godiva rode for love of her people, and also saw the effigy of Peeping Tom, Warwick Castle and Leamington Spa, a great medicinal watering place. Of course, the most notable among these is Stratford—and I guess you know why. Thomas Carlyle was undoubtedly the proper man to write "Heroes and Hero Worship," for has he not written his name on a window-pane in William's house—in fact, in the room in which the great one was born? Of course, having seen where the sun rose, we had to look for the lesser luminary. So to Anne's Cottage we went, and we saw everything that they had, except the shoe that old man Hathaway dropped on the floor when it was time for Bill to go home. I am sorry they failed to preserve that, for I know there was that thud, so familiar to swains nowadays, which broke in upon their devotions and reminded them forcibly that time flies faster under some circumstances than under others! These houses are almost exactly as they were when their illustrious occupants were there. My, but these Englishmen build things to last! The Hathaway Cottage has a thatched roof made of wheat straw, seems never to have had any other. It is about two feet thick and gives it a very unique appearance—that kind of roof is very common in those parts—Bunyan's Cottage in which he lived after he was married is covered with the same stuff.

Of course we went through Warwick Castle. The part through which the public is allowed to go is full of historical interest. You go through FAMILY PRAYERS.

You say you are busy this morning,
In the maelstrom of family cares,
And husband must rush to the office,
So there isn't a moment for prayers.

Then children are sent to the schoolroom,
And the grind of the day thus begins,
With no word from God's book to remember,
Nor the echo of strengthening hymns.

What wonder the burdens are heavy,
And the hours seem irksomely long;
What wonder that rash words are spoken,
And that life seems disordered and wrong.

Pause for a little each morning,
And again at the close of the day,
To talk with the Master who loves you—Remember, He taught us to pray.

A LITTLE BLACK PEACEMAKER.

It was the first time Ethel had worn her new gingham dress. She felt very proud of it as she started down the street for a walk. That is, she felt proud until she passed Mary's house, just two doors below her own. Then she remembered what Mary had said about the pink gingham, and all at once she was so cross that she forgot all about being proud.

"I don't care much for pink," said Mary, when Ethel had told her about the new dress her mother was making. "I'd much rather have blue. Mine's going to be blue."

Then they had quarreled—these two little girls who had been friends for a long time. Mary had gone in at her gate, and Ethel had gone in at hers. That was almost a week ago, and they had not played together since.

It was lonely, playing by oneself. During the long summer afternoons, Ethel hardly knew what to do. There were her dolls, of course, but then, she didn't want to play with them all the time. So to-day she had asked mother if she might go for a walk.

Mary was sitting on the porch, dressed in her new blue gingham. She looked lonely, too. Ethel's feet wanted to go slower and slower. They even wanted to turn in at the gateway and go up to the porch. But Ethel made them hurry past as fast as they could.

Just then she heard a queer little sound behind her. She looked around, and there was a small black kitten following as fast as it could, and crying because it couldn't keep up.

"Go back, kitty!" she scolded, and started on again.

Pretty soon that pitiful little "Meow" sounded again. Ethel stopped, waited till the tiny creature caught up, then gently turned it around.

"There now, kitty," she said, "you go home, wherever your home is. You're too little to be out here alone."

The kitten, as though it understood, started off in one direction and Ethel in another. At the end of the block, she turned, and there was the kitten, again following her and trying hard to walk as fast as she did.

What should she do? She didn't want to go on to the park with that strange kitten crying so pitifully behind her. And she hadn't the least idea where it belonged. She wished it belonged to her, for it certainly was as cunning as a kitten could be.

"Well," she said to herself, finally. "I might as well turn around and go home. Maybe it will follow me back and will stop when it comes to the right place."

So back she started. And the kitten, as though it had been trained to go walking, turned around, too, and followed her. It sat on the pavement and cried whenever she got too far ahead. Then she would have to laugh and wait till it could catch up. At last she picked it up, and it cuddled down in her arms, quite willing to be carried.

"Oh, I do wish it belonged to me," she was saying to herself as she came near home. "Maybe, if we can't find the owner, mother'll let me keep it."

But just then a glad voice called out, "Oh, you found my kitty, didn't you?" Looking up, Ethel saw that she had come to Mary's house, and that Mary was leaning on the gate. Her eyes were all red, as though she had been crying.

"It followed me," Ethel answered slowly. "I didn't know it was yours. You never had a kitten before."

"Cousin Ted gave me this one the other day," Mary replied, "and I have another one just exactly like it. I didn't know this one was lost till a while ago."

Then Ethel told her all about it. They both laughed to think how funny the little thing looked sitting on the walk and crying.

"I'll tell you," Mary said, "you may have this kitty for your own, if you want it. Mother said yesterday that she'd rather I'd have only one. And we can often play with them together, any way." So they could, and so they would, too, for they had forgotten all about their quarrel.

"Your pink dress is ever so pretty," Mary said as Ethel started homeward.

"And so is your blue one," replied her little friend.—Helen P. Metzger, in The Christian Register.

PARTS IN THE GREAT SERVICE.

"Number two hundred and fourteen," announced the voice of the chorister.

"Don't sing, Mabel," whispered Helen. "I'm not going to. I don't see why Mr. Ellis should choose that old song, anyway; no one likes it."

The song was sung. Then a missionary from Africa began to speak. His talk was on, "Small Parts in the Great Service." He spoke of the things that we do every day as being parts of a great service. One thing he said was, "Whether you are a good singer or not, sing. Whether you like the song or not, sing. Think how much you expect to get from the services and how little of yourselves you put into them. Some of us can do only two things to make a service a success—be interested and sing. And if you are interested, you will be glad to help the service by singing."

After the service was over, Helen walked out very quietly.

"Mabel," she said, "after this I'm going to try my best with every song, whether I like it or not. Wasn't it selfish of me to feel that every song must please me? And I've always done so little."

"Yes," Mabel agreed.

That night Mabel noticed that several people glanced twice at Helen's earnest young face as she sang.

At choir practice on Tuesday evening, Helen was still in earnest.

"Do you know," she whispered to Mabel once, "I never knew how to sing before—so that I should really enjoy it, I mean."

"I feel that way, too, Helen," Mabel answered. "And I hope—I do hope—that even our singing helps a little."

"I think—" began Helen, but she did not get to finish.

Miss Nolan, the "special singer" as they called her, who had always sung and whose voice had been trained, rose to speak.

"I would like to train a class of girls to take up church singing, as a sort of legacy to this church." Then she called six names. And two of them were Mabel's and Helen's.

"How very glad I am now," whispered Helen. "It looks as if God planned every bit of this, doesn't it?"—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

WHAT BILLY SMILES DID.

Once there was a little boy who owned a face. Owning a face is not a strange thing, but the visitors who came to see the little boy's face were strange. Their names were Johnny Frowns and Tommy Pouts.

Johnny Frowns ran back and forth on the little boy's forehead until he made ridges all the way across. He then ran up and down between the little boy's eyes until ridges were there, too.

Tommy Pouts sat on the little boy's lips and pulled down the corners of his mouth.

But one day something happened, and everybody was glad. The little boy's face had another visitor, Billy Smiles by name. He seemed to come from behind the little boy's ears, and before Johnny Frowns and Tommy Pouts knew that Billy Smiles was near, he had chased them both off the little boy's face, and they never dared to come back any more.—Boys and Girls.

OUR IMMEDIATE THREEFOLD TASK.

As we come to the close of the Conference year, we are faced by a task that should engage our best efforts to bring it to a successful conclusion. The first phase of that task is, of course, to bring all the regular collections of the church up in full. Since these collections include the pastors' salaries, the running expenses of the churches, and the assessments for Conference and General Work, it is evident that no congregation can feel that it has done all that is expected of it unless it raises in full the amount assumed by it for its usual and normal expenses. This part of our immediate task may be a little more difficult of accomplishment this year on account of the financial depression through which we have passed, but the urgency of the need should make us all the more diligent in our efforts to secure the collections in full. We do not believe there is a single church in all our territory that cannot meet its obligations in full if hearty determination is put into the work of making the collections.

The second phase of this threefold task is the collection of the Centenary pledges due to date. Reference to the latest reports will show that our three Conferences have done remarkably well in making Centenary collections thus far, all things considered; but we have come to a time when we must redouble our efforts to collect all the pledges now due if we would not face the tragedy of having to curtail our appropriations to work already undertaken and of having to send the message to our far-flung battle lines that we not only cannot advance, but that we must begin to make retrenchments. In most cases the collection of these Centenary pledges is dependent largely upon a vigorous effort to collect them. Those who have made the pledges made them in good faith, and they are willing to meet them through sacrifice if necessary. The treasurers and committees cannot afford to be negligent or careless, however—the utmost diligence is necessary for the fullest success at this critical time.

The third phase of this threefold task is the collection of the first payment on the pledges to the Christian Education Movement. In most cases these pledges become due on November 1, and every possible effort should be put forth to secure the payment of these pledges promptly at maturity. Our church has never faced a more urgent need than that of providing for the support of our educational institutions. The Christian Education Movement was launched because we realized that we had to do something worth while to maintain our place as one of the great Christianizing forces of the present age—our colleges and universities could make no further progress unless they were given the support that would enable them to meet the pressing demands that were upon them. The result of the Movement was marvelously encouraging in view of the peculiarly trying circumstances under which the campaign was made, the pledges amounting to practically $20,000,000. But our schools are actually in need of the money that was promised in this first payment, and unless it is forthcoming there will be almost irreparable loss. Those who have made pledges should make every possible effort to pay them at this time, and all the agencies for collecting these pledges should be actively and unceasingly at work.

This threefold task is a great one, but it is not impossible of accomplishment. Business conditions are steadily improving, and the outlook for the future is hopeful. Money is more freely in circulation than for some months past, and there is an apparent desire everywhere to meet the obligations that have been assumed for the sake of the church. Our people are not poor, and they are not discouraged. They can do all that they ought to do at this time, and we have faith to believe that they will do it with joy and gladness.

MEMORIAL SERVICE TO BISHOP LAMBUTH.

A telegram from W. W. Pinson, received last Friday, announced that the secretaries of the Board of Missions and others concerned had united in suggesting that Sunday, November 13, be observed as a memorial day in honor of the late Bishop W. R. Lambuth. Bishop Lambuth would have been sixty-seven years old on November 10, and it is fitting that the Sunday nearest his birthday be designated as a time for paying tribute to his great life and his apostolic work. We are sure there will be a widespread observance of the day to pay honor to the memory of our greatest missionary leader.

OUR GREAT UNIVERSITIES.

Dr. H. A. Boaz, President of Southern Methodist University at Dallas, Texas, has announced that the institution enrolled more than 1,300 students during the first week of the present session. Of this number 1,100 are in the Academic and Theological Departments on the campus, while 200 are in the Extension Department and the School of Finance and Commerce which is located in other buildings in the city of Dallas. There are 65 enrolled in the Theological Department.

Emory University of Atlanta has announced an opening enrollment of 640, this number being smaller than that of Southern Methodist University largely because the Atlanta institution does not receive women.

In spite of the depressed financial situation and the failure of staple crops, both of our universities reported large increases over last year. At Southern Methodist University 444 more students were enrolled in the Academic and Theological Department than were enrolled during the entire first term last year. This increase itself constitutes a student body much larger than is enrolled at the average college. Emory University also reports an increase of about 100 students above the registration last year.

This is a gratifying record and should be a source of pride to every Methodist. It is doubtful if a finer record in education was ever made by a religious denomination in this country. These two universities are but eight years old and neither of them has as yet completed its preliminary building operations. Yet they have student bodies larger than were ever before enrolled in any institution of our church, and they compare favorably in size with any of the old and established institutions in their territory.

But the gratification which Methodists feel at the contemplation of the wonderful records established by these universities in their brief career is tempered by the fact that the church has not given them all the facilities they need. Dr. Boaz was forced to advertise early in the summer that all the rooms in the Woman's Building had been reserved, and this announcement was responsible for turning away at least 200 students. At Emory more than 150 applicants were actually declined, and President Cox has declared that with the necessary space and facilities he could have secured 1,500 students this year.

In view of the pressing need and the great opportunity before these institutions of the church, it seems inconceivable that we should still fail to furnish them the space and equipment so imperatively demanded.

"It is the lack of buildings that hinders the growth of Southern Methodist University now," declares Dr. Boaz. "We must have a new teaching building by the opening of the next session, and a new dormitory is also needed. But above all we need a great auditorium which will be the center of the student life of the university, a place where the college spirit may be generated and from which the religious and educational influence may radiate."

The only hope of these universities rests on the Christian Education Movement. Loyal and consecrated Methodists have pledged many millions to these and other institutions throughout our territory. When these promises have been translated into terms of actual cash, the needs will be relieved and a new day will dawn in the field of Christian education. But promises do not suffice. Universities cannot build on pledges alone. We must do more than make subscriptions, else the burden of poverty will not be relieved.

At the present time the first installments on most of these pledges are due and they should be paid with unanimous enthusiasm. If this is done, the universities which have made such a remarkable record of progress in so brief a time will write another page of glorious achievement in the annals of the church.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. H. Saunders recently assisted Rev. T. M. Ainsworth is a good meeting at Lorman, Miss.

In spite of unusually severe financial conditions, our church at Charleston, Miss., Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, pastor, is coming to the close of a good year.

Revival services are being conducted at Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, this week. The pastor, Rev. Ellis Smith, is being assisted by Rev. W. C. Childress, superintendent of city missions.

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, was elected publicity agent for the secular press at the recent session of the West Texas Conference, of which body he is now a member.

Alterations are being made in the front wall of First Church, Laurel, Miss., preparatory to installing a three-manual pipe organ, which has recently been purchased by that progressive congregation.

The Woman's Missionary Society of our church at West Point, Miss., was in entire charge of the West Point Leader during the month of October, the editor having turned the paper over to them to help raise funds for the new church.

The Missouri, the St. Louis, and the Tennessee Conferences have adopted memorials to the General Conference requesting that hereafter bishops be elected for a term of years instead of for life, with privilege of re-election.

Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon, chairman of the Commission on Constitution appointed by the last General Conference, called the Commission together for a meeting in Memphis on Monday of this week. Dr. F. N. Parker and Hon. H. H. White are members of the Commission.

The Southern Methodist Press Association will hold its annual meeting at Lakeland, Florida, beginning on December 15.

Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Johnson, of Bolton, Miss., announce the birth of a son on October 19, whom they have named Edward Fondren. Blessings upon the young man!

The fourth quarterly conference of the Edwards charge, Mississippi Conference, passed resolutions highly commendatory of the pastor, Rev. G. P. McKeown, and his wife, who have taken the lead in every good work for four years.

Miss Marion Hudson and Mr. Jas B. Grambling honored the Advocate office with a call on Wednesday of last week. Both of them were in the city to take part in the Epworth League institute, which was held during the week at First Church.

In connection with the Centennial Celebration, the churches of Columbus, Miss., united in a service commemorative of one hundred years of religious activity in that historic city, on Wednesday evening, October 19, the service being held in the First Methodist Church.

The fourth quarterly conference of the Crawford and Shaeffers charge, North Mississippi Conference, Rev. Thos. H. Mills, pastor, passed strong resolutions in appreciation of the presiding elder of the district, Rev. A. T. McIlwain, and expressed its desire that he be continued as presiding elder of the Columbus District.

Rev. John C. Chambers, Sunday School Field Secretary of the Mississippi Conference, writes that his attention has been called to an error in the treasurer's report as published in the Advocate of October 13: Canton should be credited with $25, instead of $3.12. The $3.12 should have been credited to Fannin. We regret the occurrence of this error.

Columbus, Miss., began a great Centennial Celebration on October 18. As was altogether proper, the exercises were begun with prayer, Rev. Thos. H. Lipscomb, of the First Methodist Church, being called upon to offer the invocation. The Columbus Dispatch printed the prayer in full on its front page on October 19. It was thoroughly appropriate for the occasion.

Rev. F. J. McCoy, of Houma, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Wednesday of last week. He stated that the contract has been let for the new church at Houma, and that work will be started at once. The building will cost a little more than $15,000. Our work in the French section of the State will be greatly strengthened by the completion of this commodious plant.

After he had returned to his work in New Orleans, Rev. W. C. Childress received a message announcing the death of his mother in the early morning of October 19. Brother Childress had left the bedside of his mother only a day or two before, leaving her, as was thought, on the road to recovery. Our sincere sympathy goes out to our brother in his sorrow—a double sorrow, since his brother had also passed away a few days before.

In the attendance contest between the Noel Memorial Sunday school on the one side and the Queensborough and the Texas Avenue Sunday schools on the other, the figures last Sunday were as follows: Noel Memorial, 475; Queensborough and Texas Avenue, 454 (Queensborough, 231; Texas Avenue, 220). These schools of Shreveport, La., are thoroughly alive to the opportunities confronting them in work for the advancement of the Kingdom.

The celebration of the "golden jubilee" of Methodism in Natchez, Miss., on October 16, was a notable occasion, the sermon being preached by

The Late Rev. J. M. Henry, D.D.

(In the Advocate of October 13 we printed what we thought was a picture of Dr. J. M. Henry, but, through an error which no one can regret more than the editor does, the wrong cut was used. The above is a true likeness.)

Bishop W. B. Murrah. The secular press gave much attention to the celebration of this event, the local papers and the Commercial-Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn., carrying full accounts of the celebration. Under the leadership of Rev. W. H. Saunders this has been one of the best years in the history of the church.

We clip the following from the Alabama Christian Advocate of October 20: "The editor was surprised and pleased last Friday to receive a call from Rev. L. A. Darsey, pastor at Ocean Springs, Miss. Brother Darsey was for a long while a prominent minister in this Conference before he went to Mississippi. The death of his mother-in-law, Mrs. DuBose, a saintly woman, was the occasion of his being in Birmingham. He is visiting his son, Mr. J. W. Darsey, of this city."

Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., has had a year of great prosperity. There has been a large increase in the membership during the year, and the work is moving forward. The prayer meeting is unusually well attended. The foundation of the new building is now being laid, and the handsome structure will be pushed to early completion. Dr. Andrew Johnson, one of our general evangelists, recently assisted the pastor, Rev. T. E. Gregory, in a meeting which lasted eighteen days and in which much good was done.

Rev. J. H. Moore, our pastor at Pascagoula, Miss., writes us as follows: "Will you please announce that I am in possession of a partial set of books from the library of our late Dr. T. B. Holoman, as a gift by his daughter? I have volumes I, II, and IV, and I would like very much to obtain volume III. I shall be glad to pay a reasonable price for this missing volume. The set is a four-volume edition, date 1821. If you will make this announcement in the Advocate, possibly some brother of the Mississippi Conference can help me out of my difficulty."

The fourth quarterly conference of Crystal Springs, Miss., was a delightful occasion. Rev. W. B. Jones has done a great work and is in great favor with his good people. In spite of many difficulties the beautiful new church is nearing completion, and it will be an admirable working plant when done. It reflects credit on those who planned it. It was heartily voted to invite the Mississippi Annual Conference to hold its session of 1922 in Crystal Springs, where it will find ample and delightful accommodation in the beautiful new church. Crystal Springs has not entertained the Conference since December, 1889.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Committee of the First Year.

The members of the Class of the First Year will please meet the Committee at 4 p. m., Tuesday, November 8, at the First Methodist Church, Alexandria, La.
R. H. HARPER, Chairman.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Brethren: The undersigned Institutions of the Mississippi Conference sincerely appreciate the generous response which the pastoral charges made to the Christian Education Campaign last spring, under the able leadership of their pastors. Feeling the need of financial help that was asked for these schools, we are very solicitous that the amounts contributed shall be promptly paid. We therefore join the educational authorities and the Secretary of Education of our Conference in urging upon the pastors the importance of securing the first payment in full during the "Pay-Up Week," November 1-7. We earnestly request that the pastors organize committees for a thorough and exhaustive canvass of their congregations for the payment of the first installment. We hope that the enlightened and efficient co-operation of the pastors may be secured in the conservation and enlargement of the results of the financial drive so that our schools, so valuable to the effective work of the church in the State, may not continue to suffer from a failure of the needed funds.

Pledging you upon our part that we shall attempt to make these institutions of learning, established and maintained by the church, all that the church demands of them in the spiritual and intellectual benefit that they may confer upon our people, we are,

Yours for the cause of Christian Education,

Dr. I. W. COOPER,

Dr. A. F. WATKINS,

Dr. H. W. VAN HOOK,

a plain embattled gateway, leading to a picturesque winding roadway, cut for upwards of a hundred yards through solid rock and overhanging with shrubs, creepers and trees. This roadway conducts to the outer court, called the vineyard, where a grand view of the castle bursts upon the visitor, the main features of which are Guy's Tower on the right, the Gateway in the middle, and Caesar's Tower on the left. Guy's Tower, so named in honor of that redoubtable warrior, was built by the second Thomas Beauchamp in the reign of Richard II, being completed in 1394. It is 12-sided, 30 feet in diameter at the base, with walls 10 feet thick, and rises to a height of 128 feet.

Caesar's Tower, erected between 1350—1370 by the first Thomas Beauchamp, is a marvel of constructive skill. It is an irregular polygon 147 feet high, containing four stories. The part facing outward forms three segments of a circle, its general construction being such as to constitute a fortress of the most formidable character. It is built on the solid rock and therefore impervious to the miner. The loopholes are most scientifically contrived, being placed in positions commanding the most advantageous situations and available for the long or cross bow. Against the weapons of its day it was supreme. Of the various rooms and their contents of priceless treasures time fails me. Perhaps for the benefit of the new lally I may at my next opportunity attempt a write-up of the State Bedroom, the Glee or Green Drawing Room, the Cedar Drawing Room, the Red Drawing Room, the Great Hall and the Great Dining Room, and some of their contents. Am enjoying myself.

WADE H. FELDER, son of Wyatt W. and Sarah Curtis Felder, was born near Topisaw Camp Grounds in 1854. His first wife, and mother of his six children now living, was Laura B. Williams. Two children died in infancy and one, his only son, died tragically at the age of seventeen. The daughters, Mmes. Anderson, Rawls, Felder, Carruth, Barnes, and Rushing, are left to mourn the loss of a good father, who saw that their home was made happy and secure until they went to homes of their own. In 1919 he was married to Mrs. Maggie Bixler, who made his home happy until his going from among us. Brother Felder was a good neighbor, loved his friends, and had many; loved his church and attended regularly its preaching and sacrament; always on the right side, and grew tender in heart as he grew older. His last illness lasted many months, but was endured with much fortitude and he did not fear death. On August 19 he was laid to rest at Topisaw to await the resurrection. A good man has gone from us.

CORNER STONE LAYING AT ALGIERS.

Sunday October 16, 1921, was Corner Stone Day with the Algiers Church. At the morning hour, the Junior Choir had appropriate music. The pastor, the Rev. C. C. Wier, used as a text Psalms 118:22, "The stone which was refused of you builders is become the head of the corner." Before the sermon, a very interesting and solemn service was held, filling the cornerstone box. Mr. Frank Braai, president of the Braai Sheet Metal Works, presented a copper box his company had made and donated for the occasion. The congregation then filled it with various articles, some of which are of interest to the readers of the Advocate and will be mentioned for their pleasure: A copy of Seymour's History of Algiers, 1718 to 1896. This had a nice mention of our church, whose pastor when the book was written was Dr. R. H. Wynn; a short history of the Algiers church; a list of subscribers to the Algiers church building fund since the storm. This list contained more than eight hundred names, showing that we had some six hundred friends who helped from the outside; a Sunday school badge that was given to Mr. W. H. Martin as a schoolboy in 1840, when the church was called Good Hope Chapel. His children are among our good members to-day. A picture of Mr. Frank A. Daniels, who was not only well loved in the church, but who was perhaps the best loved man in his lifetime by the whole community; a copy of an account of the celebration of the golden wedding of his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Francois Daniels; a copy of the Nashville Advocate, October 6, that contained notice of Bishop Lambuth's death; a copy of the New Orleans Advocate, containing a notice of Dr. J. M. Henry's death, who was at one time the pastor of the church and was also a former presiding elder of the district; a poem written by Mrs. R. M. Brown, "Lines to an Old Friend." The old friend was the old church, of which Brother Brown was pastor; a list of men and women who enlisted in the service of the country in the World War; a New Testament that was carried by Rev. C. C. Wier while building the Orphanage at Ruston; a Discipline, and copies of the Algiers Herald and the Algiers Tribune; copies of the three daily papers of New Orleans; Epworth Era, Epworth Quarterly, Epworth Messenger, Missionary Voice, copy of the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference, 1920; Louisiana Orphanage Visitor, Parker Memorial Church Outlook, Rayne Memorial Bulletin, a list of members to December, 1916, and a list of those joining since then; pictures of the old church as it was before the storm, as it was in ruins, as it was rebuilt from the debris of the old church, and the picture of the new lot the day ground was broken, and as work progressed on the building; a telegram from the Rev. W. W. Holmes, pastor at Lake

Charles, who sent us a wire the day we laid the corner-stone; a letter from Dr. E. O. Watson, who was secretary of the War Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when we asked for an appropriation from them; and from Dr. S. H. C. Burgin, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, telling us to proceed with the work, and various other items. The stone was laid at 3:30 p.m. by the presiding elder, Rev. J. G. Snelling, of the New Orleans District. There were a number of our pastors and members from all over the city, who were present to rejoice with us.

The presiding elder made a splendid address and proved to be a very fine open-air speaker. His message was greatly enjoyed by the whole assembly. The church situation has faced many hard problems but it is now under way, and when completed will be a nice structure worth, with the grounds, about $40,000 or $50,000, and is promised to be ready for December 22, 1921, a Christmas joy. "Now let the Father, and the Son,

And Spirit be adored;
Where there are works to make Him known,

Or saints to love the Lord."

REPORTER.

A PLEA FOR THE OLD CAMP MEETINGS.

Dear Mr. Editor: While looking over the list of our sainted dead of the Mississippi Conference, my memory was led back to the time when the old camp grounds and tabernacles, in which so many of them preached the old Methodist doctrines to large congregations of earnest listeners, a few of whom we will mention: Linfield, Montgomery, A. B. Nicholson, Hunnicutt, Dr. Mathews of New Orleans, and many others. When the voices of those sainted people made the altar call, great throngs of people eagerly responded and knelt with deep anxiety for the prayers of those righteous people to bring great showers of blessings or manna from heaven. Of course, there were a few who were altogether moved by emotion, but the majority were filled with enthusiasm. There is no question about it, but other creeds as well as ours, have been benefited by these camps. Our congregations of Methodists are much smaller in this vicinity than when we assembled to hear those great prophets.

I write trusting that some efficient leader or leaders may see this in the same light and investigate this all-important matter of rebuilding the old tabernacles, or erecting new ones, where they are needed.

FROM KEENER MEMORIAL, BATON ROUGE.

Dear Brother Carley: After having spent four years very pleasantly at Merryville, we were assigned to Keener Memorial, this city. We have now rounded out four pleasant and profitable years here.

There has been a net increase each year in membership, which is now around the four hundred mark. The pastor's salary the first year was $1000. This year it is $1600 and is paid monthly. For the past three years, we have easily paid all claims in full.

We began the year with watch night

Recipe For Gray Hair

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1/4 oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.—Adv.

SUFFERING?

Most of the pain we suffer is unnecessary. Why continue to endure it—to sacrifice your youth, beauty, and enjoyment to it?

The combination of simple harmless medicines found in Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills is especially effective in relieving pain without bad after-effects.

For more than thirty-five years sufferers from headache, neuralgia, backache, toothache, sciatica and pains from other causes have found relief by taking these pills.

service and commemoration of the twenty-fifth year of our history.

Just before Easter the church provided a Ford car for the pastor's use, which remains for my successor.

Our pre-Easter meeting, with Brother L. N. Hoffpaulr doing the preaching, was a splendid success.

The church now has a membership and strength which will make a most pleasant appointment for the good brother who is assigned here at Conference.

Sincerely,

J. W. BOOTH.

FROM LAKE ARTHUR, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Things are moving along well up here. Our prayer meeting is well attended—fifty out last Thursday night. Our Sunday school is fine—171 in attendance last Sunday. We expect 200 by next Sunday. We have a contest on between our men's and women's classes for membership. The attendance both at 11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. preaching service is just fine.

We are behind on the finances, but hope to bring everything up. We have the budget system here, and the stewards are supposed to collect everything. I am very busy trying to get everything in shape for the meeting of our Conference at Alexandria.

Fraternally,

S. D. HOWARD.

HOPE.

On the bas-relief which adorns a home for the fallen, in the city of London, is sculptured the figure of a child blowing a dying ember, and this motto appears: "Perhaps there remains a spark." A suggestive and appropriate design for such an institution, surely, but it also fittingly represents the office of hope. Hope does not soon abandon that which does not promise well; it makes the most of littles; it fans the spark into a flame; it reflects a rainbow against the darkest cloud; it pictures to-morrow brighter than today. By its magic wand fountains spring up in the parched desert, honey comes out of the barren rock, the eater is made to produce meat, manna rains from heaven, and the stream of difficulty parts at the feet of the advancing pilgrim. Hope has something to offset every discouragement. It gathers the sunbeams from near and far and causes them to shine upon the pathway. It rings a bell of gladness in the dull ears of those who are struggling in the valley, welghed down by their crosses, so that like Christ, for the joy that is set before them, they endure the cross and dispense the shame.—The Intelligencer.

What is most to be feared is that mental lethargy which accepts error rather than seek truth; the lack of vision which fails to recognize truth; the lack of moral purpose to follow the truth when it is seen; and the fear which turns aside or renders powerless the noblest purpose and the finest conception.—Exchange.

See to it continually that, whatever remorse may possess you at the close of any day, it shall not be this: They made me the keeper of the vineyards, but mine own vineyard have I not kept.—J. Stuart Holden.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Two classes of teachers, one at Poplar Corner and the other at Hind's Chapel, both on the Horn Lake Circuit, were recently organized. Rev. L. H. Floyd, the pastor, understands the importance of having trained teachers for the business of teaching the things of Christ.

If you find any fault with our Sunday school literature, write your criticism fully, give a remedy for the defect, and let us see if we can improve its quality. Some people order and use other literature because it is cheap. It is cheap in more ways than one. Other churches may have a higher grade of lesson helps, but I have not seen them.

In a few days post cards will be mailed to every pastor asking for a report of his Sunday school work for the year 1921. Under the circumstances, I would not ask for these reports unless the law of the church required it to be done. It is a small matter to look after this report, but it is important.

The last Sunday in this month will afford an opportunity for presenting some temperance facts to our Sunday schools. The "whisky devil" is not dead, nor is he driven far into the background. Let all our schools renew the fight. The contest is now between forces of law and order and the forces of anarchy. Abundant material can be found in the October number of the Sunday School Magazine and in every daily paper. We must fight with all our might or surrender to lawlessness.

We all agree that our chief aim in our church work is to evangelize the people. Many teachers do not realize that it requires no less consecration and prayer to teach Christ than is required to conduct a revival meeting. Next in importance to the evangelization of our own people is the evangelization of the people beyond our borders. At least once a month our schools are required to give some missionary instruction and ask for an offering to be used as a special for missions. It is our business to give the instruction, and in time the people will give the offering. The Sunday school has it in its power to save our church from the repudiation of our Centenary obligations. Let it never be said that we regard these sacred promises as "mere scraps of paper." Let every school in the North Mississippi Conference be faithful in giving the information.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

On account of the many conflicts, I was unable to get a letter in the Advocate last week.

On Sunday, the 9th, I visited Moss Point and Pascagoula. On Tuesday afternoon and night we held a meeting with the teachers and workers of the two schools. Brother Moore is getting on well at Pascagoula. They agreed to put in a Cradle Roll, a Home Department, an enrollment campaign, and to do what they could to help in the observance of the Sabbath, and tithing. The school for soldiers at Pascagoula is giving this charge a wonderful opportunity, and they appear to be willing to assume their obligations.

Brother Ellis is doing fine work at Moss Point. He has some very fine workers. The moving of the shipyards has taken many people away from Moss Point. Many others are leaving, but their faithful few are holding on. After all, it is not the number that we reach that counts, but what we do with those we reach. The smallest Sunday school can be as great in its work and great in its teaching as any.

Wednesday we had the pleasure of visiting Gulfport. Brother Linfield is in high favor with his people, and their Sunday school has outgrown their present building and they are planning a basement. They are hoping to be in their basement before long.

Last Sunday we were with Brother Grice at Bude. The Meadville Sunday school is progressing nicely. At Bude we got the re-organization of the Cradle Roll. The Young People and Adult Bible Class were enrolled in the great family of the Wesley Bible Classes. They promised to put in the Graded Literature in their Beginners' class.

We are $741 behind on our Sunday School Day offering, from what we were last year. I am hoping that we will do better by this Conference. Do not forget that even now you can take an offering for Sunday School Day, and send it in.

To any school in the Conference, or in any circuit, that will get a class or group of people to agree to attend, we will supply a teacher for five or six days to give any book in the Standard Teachers' Training Course you may select. Every community in which this work has been done has enjoyed the work, and claims to have been benefited by it.

Pray for the work and workers.

Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

FROM THE ELMORE CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: We have closed all of our revival meetings for the year. Our first meeting began at Vienna the second Sunday in July and continued for eight days. Rev. J. A. McCormack, of Dubach, was with us from Monday until Saturday night, and gave us some good gospel sermons. While the meeting did not measure up to what we had hoped to see, we feel sure that some good was accomplished. We had one addition to the church by baptism.

Our second meeting began at Wesley Chapel the fourth Sunday in July and closed the fifth Sunday. Rev. J. A. McCormack came to us on Monday and remained until Friday night and preached some most excellent sermons, which were greatly enjoyed by our people. The church was considerably revived and we had eight accessions to the church.

Our third meeting began at Long Straw the first Sunday in August and continued six days. Rev. J. R. Roy, of Mer Rouge, came to us on Monday and remained until the close of the meeting. His gospel messages were greatly enjoyed by our people. The church was revived, but no additions.

Our fourth meeting began at New Prospect the second Sunday in August and closed the following Friday night. Rev. W. H. Jordan, of Winnfield, came to us on Monday and remained until the close of the meeting and preached some real soul-stirring and heart-searching sermons, which were enjoyed ever so much by our people, but we did not have any additions to the church.

Our fifth meeting was held by the pastor at a schoolhouse about four miles north of Ruston, known as the Burges schoolhouse. This is a community where there has never been any regular preaching by any denomination. This community is made up of Methodists, Baptists, Primitive Baptists, and people who do not belong to any church. The meeting was continued five days and we had a genuine old-fashioned revival. As an evidence of the genuineness of this revival a prayer meeting and a Sunday school have been organized and considerable interest is being manifested.

Our sixth and last meeting was held at the Riser schoolhouse, the pastor doing the preaching. We had a glorious meeting and six accessions to the church.

We are now closing our fourth year on the Elmore charge and there have been many conversions and nearly two hundred accessions to the church. Nearly all the Sunday school children from eight years old up to sixteen have joined the church and are doing well. We have had a considerable increase in our finances during these four years. In four years the grand total has increased from $880 to $2038.

While some features of the work have not improved as much as I had hoped to see, still I feel inclined to believe that the Elmore charge is on the up grade. H. J. BOLTZ, P. C.

FROM GUNTOWN, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: I feel that I am under obligations to the good people up here to give a little account of what we have been doing.

A good year in some respects, but a hard one because we could not do everything that needed to be done. Our people have been generous and the Lord has been good. They are going to send up a good report to Conference. We have received into the church on profession of faith 17, and by letter 50. We have organized a church at the old Stone's Chapel, which starts well with more than a score of charter members. Some repairs have been made on the parsonage which make it more comfortable and attractive.

We are making a splendid presiding elder of Rev. J. B. Randolph. Our success has been so satisfactory that we want to recommend him for the same relation another year.

There is a nice brick veneered parsonage nearly ready for occupancy at Baldwyn. It has six large rooms, bath and sleeping porch, large basement, all fitted with modern conveniences such as water and lights, etc. This does not mean that the parsonage will be moved from Guntown. It just means, I suppose, a new charge where it has been needed a long time.

Hope to meet you at our Annual Conference. Fraternally,

WALTER W. JONES.

WILL OUR GIFTS BE ACCEPTED?

As we are hurrying on these busy days, do we see no signals of distress on life's broad sea? Do we hear no cries, no bitter walls from souls that are out on the angry waves? Do we heed the signals and hearken to the cries? Do we turn away from our business, our pleasure, our cares, our money-getting, to carry rescue to those souls that are perishing or in sorrow? Or do we hurry on and say that we have no time for these things, no time to save our brother, no time to lift up fallen ones, no time to wipe away a tear? If we do not turn aside to help or save, may not our deepest sorrows in eternity be the memory of cries of distress unheeded?

There is much generosity in the world, but it is of little value to mankind unless you can give of yourself, your love and sympathy. Do not give your dollars alone and expect any benefit to others to result, or any happiness and satisfaction to yourself. Many a widow's mite has done more good in the world and brought greater results than millions flung down in charity through a sense of obligation to the world's opinion.

There are fathers to-day who are wondering why their children have proved so ungrateful; and why their wives are not happy when a fortune has been expended upon them; but they gave their gifts and not themselves. Neither the wife nor children felt the husband's and father's love and sympathy in what was bestowed. Their bills were paid and they were supplied with life's luxuries, but the giver was not given with the gift. It

Is the man who makes his wife and children realize how dear they are to him, and how precious with love and tenderness is every penny bestowed upon them, who reaps a rich harvest from his investment.

The church or public institution, builded from money which has been given from love of the world's approbation, not from utter and absolute love of God and humanity, will not benefit humanity or the giver. The great creative power back of the universe wants us first and foremost; our sympathy, our love, our fellowship expressed towards one another; our faith, our trust, our service expressed in thought and feeling, and act, day by day as we go through life. Then and then only do our gifts count. One dollar given in the spirit of love does more toward the regeneration of mankind than one million given through pride or love of approbation of men. "Offer up thyself and thy gifts shall be accepted."

A NEW MISSIONARY TO THE JEWS.

Rev. Joseph H. Cohn has been selected to serve as a missionary to the Jewish people of the South. Brother Cohn comes from a very prominent family and has had excellent training in Columbia University and also two years' training for a Rabbi in the Jewish Church. He had an excellent business position in Little Rock, Ark., when he was converted under the preaching and ministry of Rev. P. C. Fletcher. He is a man of culture and deep spirituality. He has a message which grips the heart of his hearers. For the last several months he has been going from city to city and delivering his message with great effect. The Jews, as well as the Gentiles, hear him gladly.

Brother Cohn has been employed by the Home Department of the Board of Missions and will work under the direction of its Secretaries. His salary will be paid by this department, but he will take collections for work among the Jews of the South, and send in to our treasurer. This service is purely a matter of love and devotion on Brother Cohn's part, as he will not receive one-half as much in salary as he was getting before he entered the ministry.

We trust pastors in towns and cities where there is a large number of Jews will call for Brother Cohn's services. No engagements will be made for him except by the secretaries of the Home Department of the Board of Missions, to whom he will report every month.

R. L. RUSSELL,

Secretary, Home Department.

FROM WEST MONROE, LA.

Dear Advocate: Let your kindness endure a few notes from West Monroe. I have invested six years of my life-blood in this charge. During the last term of two years the membership has doubled, with twenty-one over. When the roll is purged it will be more than doubled. During this time, from the beginning of first term nine years ago, property has gone from six thousand to more than fifty thousand dollars. True, there is quite a large debt yet. During this year we have built a church, Community M. E. Church, South, out in farming section, at a cost of approximately $2,500. It lacks $360 of being out of debt. This may be reduced by Conference. We organized with 27 members last October. We now have 59 members. They paid their assessment. Harvell held a meeting there for me and did me fine service. He preached with power.

The West Monroe Church is well organized. We have two good Leagues. Each has a good membership. The W. M. S. is divided into three circles and each circle is doing fine work. The Sunday school is well organized. We have 21 Sunday school rooms and all in use. One of these could be made into three. We open in three different departments, having three pianos and superintendents of these departments. Our Sunday school superintendent, C. E. Faulk, is wholly given to his work. He is a live wire. He runs on business methods, not leaving out the spiritual element. He is religious more than his tenth.

Because of health of my family I am passing from this charge this year.

I appreciate an expression of official regrets, and commendation, by the Board. This is a fine charge for some aspiring brother. Plenty to do and trials and problems enough to test the mettle of a good man. A fine set of people to serve! Everything bids fair to be paid in full. Pastor paid monthly. Everything goes in budget. For the last several years this charge has met all claims in full. A drive for next year's expenses will be made before Conference.

H. W. LEDBETTER, Pastor.

Others Relieved— Why Not You?

Catarrh Does Harm—Get Rid Of It.

Catarrh of the nose or throat when it becomes chronic weakens the delicate lung tissues, deranges the digestive organs, and may lead to consumption. It impairs the taste, smell and hearing, and affects the voice. It is a constitutional disease and requires a constitutional remedy. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by purifying the blood removes the cause of the disease and gives permanent relief. This alternative and tonic medicine has proved entirely satisfactory to thousands of families in three generations.

If there is biliousness or constipation, take Hood's Pills—they are purely vegetable, gentle, thorough.

THIS WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE

Brings a Ray of Hope to Childless Women

Lowell, Mass.—"I had anemia from the time I was sixteen years old and was very irregular. If I did any house-cleaning or washing I would faint and have to be put to bed, my husband thinking every minute was my last. After reading your text-book for women I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used the Sanative Wash, and have never felt better than I have the last two years. I can work, eat, sleep, and feel as strong as can be. Doctors told me I could never have children—I was too weak—but after taking Vegetable Compound it strengthened me so I gave birth to an eight pound boy. I was well all the time, did all my work up to the last day, and had a natural birth. Everybody who knew me was surprised, and when they ask me what made me strong I tell them with great pleasure, 'I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never felt better in my life.' Use this testimonial at any time."—Mrs. ELIZABETH SMART, 142 W. Sixth St., Lowell, Mass. This experience of Mrs. Smart is surely a strong recommendation for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is only one of a great many similar cases.

in Richmond, Va., last April took a very definite stand regarding the work our auxiliaries should do for the Negro women and children, urging every auxiliary to appoint an inter-racial committee and to organize a Community Club for the Negro women and children. A copy of the recommendations passed by this body, also a copy of the recommendations from our own annual meeting held in Baton Rouge in February, were sent to you immediately after these meetings. If you have not already followed these suggestions, won't you begin at once to make plans for your auxiliary? There is no more urgent need in the home land, no work which will bring more decided, more definite results than this work among Negro women and children. The Community Club, as you know, touches the home life, giving instructions in home making, the care and training of children, upholds high moral standards for women, and strives to create a race pride, which is the great need of the Negro.

The plans for organization and suggested programs have been sent to you. If you are not already using them, let me urge you to begin at once to make plans for this organization. The Negro ministers and teachers of your community will render valuable assistance and will heartily support your work.

When you have organized please report to me, and your auxiliary, with the name of the Social Service Superintendent, will be placed on the Social Service Honor Roll which will be prominently displayed at our next annual meeting. Cordially yours,

Mrs. W. W. HOLMES.

MACDONELL WESLEY COMMUNITY HOUSE RECORD.

Third Quarter, 1921.

One often hears of the fresh air camps for the poor of the city and the physical and spiritual benefit it is to them, but the need of the isolated country children to have some of the city delights and the advantages not found in the local communities is often overlooked. It is to meet this need of our children and young people, also to develop character and to train for leadership, that the institutes are planned during the summer months at the MacDonell Wesley House.

The week for the younger girls was from July 18 to 22, and there were thirty in attendance. The morning program consisted of Bible study, mission study, sewing and handcraft, and in the afternoons were music and recreation. Two children's services and programs were given by them at the Mission Hall. The week was a period of continuous delight as well as of inestimable benefit, not only to the children themselves, but to the homes and communities from which they came.

The older girls had their inuing next, August 1 to 6. There were fifteen in attendance. The program included Bible and mission study, community leadership training, handcraft, music, and recreation. The Community Sing, the inspirational addresses by Mr. Grambling, and the ride and picnic were some of the special features most enjoyed. These girls have a deeper religious experience, a wider outlook upon life, and a greater ability to make their lives count in the home church and community because of the week of study, of inspiration, and of recreation.

There were eighteen boys with us during the week of August 22 to 27. Their program was similar to the ones outlined above, except that the industrial classes took the form of hikes to, and observation of, the industrial plants and farm work in and near Houma. Their development was fourfold, physical, spiritual, mental, and social—and even in so brief a period as one week there was a marked change in some of the boys.

The opening of school, September 12, found us with five girls to care for. Four of these were fatherless girls whose widowed mothers were unable to pay anything on their support. The supplies of food and garments sent in by the auxiliaries, as well as the cash contributions, were of great help in caring for the girls. Two of the girls have gone back to their mother, who is now able to make a home for them and keep them in school; but there are others in country sections without suitable homes and no school advantages, who ought to be cared for and sent to school, and whom we shall hope to take soon.

Miss Moselle Eubanks took up her duties at the Wesley House on August 1, just in time to be initiated by the Summer Institutes. The special helpers during the summer work were Miss Bertha Griffin, of Crowley, Misses Elvira and Ora Hooper, of Rosedale; Mrs. George Eims and Mrs. J. W. Warren, of Houma; Mr. James Grambling, of Shreveport; Rev. E. V. Duplantis, of Villa Platte, and Mr. James Knight, of Bourg.

Mrs. J. H. McCoy spent some days with us during the early part of September and visited several of the country points. Her visit was an inspiration and very real help to us, and we only wish she could come more frequently.

During the quarter 2866 miles were travelled in the work, 432 folks were given rides in the Missionary Ford, and 1184 garments were distributed. There were 430 night guests in the home and a total of 1621 table guests, including the Institute crowds. There are other interesting statistics and events of the quarter, but time and space are gone. We have tried to "serve the Lord with gladness," and we rejoice in the fruit of our labor and those who have labored together with us in the work.

THE TEST OF MANHOOD.

The Bible supplies many tests for manhood, and records numerous incidents where men have been manly, together with the narratives of some lamentable failures in duty, as in the case of big, ineffectual Saul. Some of these testings came in the direct way of God's ordering, and others were propounded by foes of the faith. Back in Exodus we read of the cynicism and brutality of a Pharaoh who, when the leaders of Israel sought permission to make a geographical change in their condition, thundered ironically at Moses and Aaron: "Go now ye that are men, and serve the Lord; for that ye did desire." The challenge was a fair, if fierce, one, and was finally accepted by Israel, with good results to the world.

Whether from the side of our enemies, or offered by our friends and well-wishers, the testing of manhood may be periodically expected to occur. Certainly the Lord Jehovah demands the consecration of strength to His service. "Go now ye that are men, and serve the Lord." Religion, when of the genuine sort, has never been easy. It has always been a man's task and a woman's sacrifice. Weaklings will do to serve Buddha, voluptuaries to follow Mohammed, moralists to keep alive the name of Confucius, but only full-orbed faith, downright personal devotion, brainy grappling with the problems of life, and perseverance against all difficulties and under all handicaps, will fulfill the ideals and accomplish the lofty and holy projects of Christianity.

The New Testament as well as the Old makes its appeal to might. Paul bids the Corinthians to stand fast in the faith and quit them like men, summing up the demands of life in one crisp sentence written to the Ephesians: "Finally, brethren, be strong in the Lord." The gentle John explains why he addressed his message to certain individuals, by saying: "I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong."

It is perfectly true that the gospel offering of grace comes to the humblest, poorest, most ignorant of earth. It does not, however—and here is the point never to be neglected—leave them in that condition, but, so far as their biological or psychological type allows, it perfects them in intelligence, manners, and morality. There is no danger that the morally strong will ever fail. Moses and Aaron of old were driven from Pharaoh's presence, but they made good, notwithstanding, in the course of the unfolding of the Hebrew epic.

To-day comes the same old challenge and appeal: "Go now ye that are men, and serve the Lord." There is our test—are we equal to it?—Zion's Herald.

FROM PHILADELPHIA, MISS.

The Methodist people at the church last Sunday were "warmed" by the fire which burned the notes against the church and parsonage. All debts are paid on the church property, and the church has some choice property in Philadelphia. At the same service in which the notes were burned, plans were made to make more room for the Sunday school, which is overflowing the church.

A fine Epworth League has been organized with 72 members.

Ninety members have been received into the church since last Annual Conference. We hope to have 100 by Conference. Rev. D. E. Kelly was with us in the meeting, and he did most excellent work. The whole town was greatly helped. Philadelphia will have a good report at Conference.

FROM WALNUT GROVE, MISS.

My Dear Brother Carley: Please spare me a little room to report the work on the Walnut Grove charge. All things considered, we have had a successful year—revivals all held and we have had 45 accessions to the church, 39 on profession of faith and 6 by letter. The spiritual condition of the charge is somewhat improved; not as much, however, as we hoped for, and are praying for.

We had with us in our revival meetings splendid help, namely, Rev. J. M. Smith, of Union, Miss.; Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of Biloxi, Miss.; Rev. C. Y. Higginbotham, of Hermanville, Miss., and Rev. N. S. Loftus, of Goster, Miss., all good preachers of the Gospel and real Christian men.

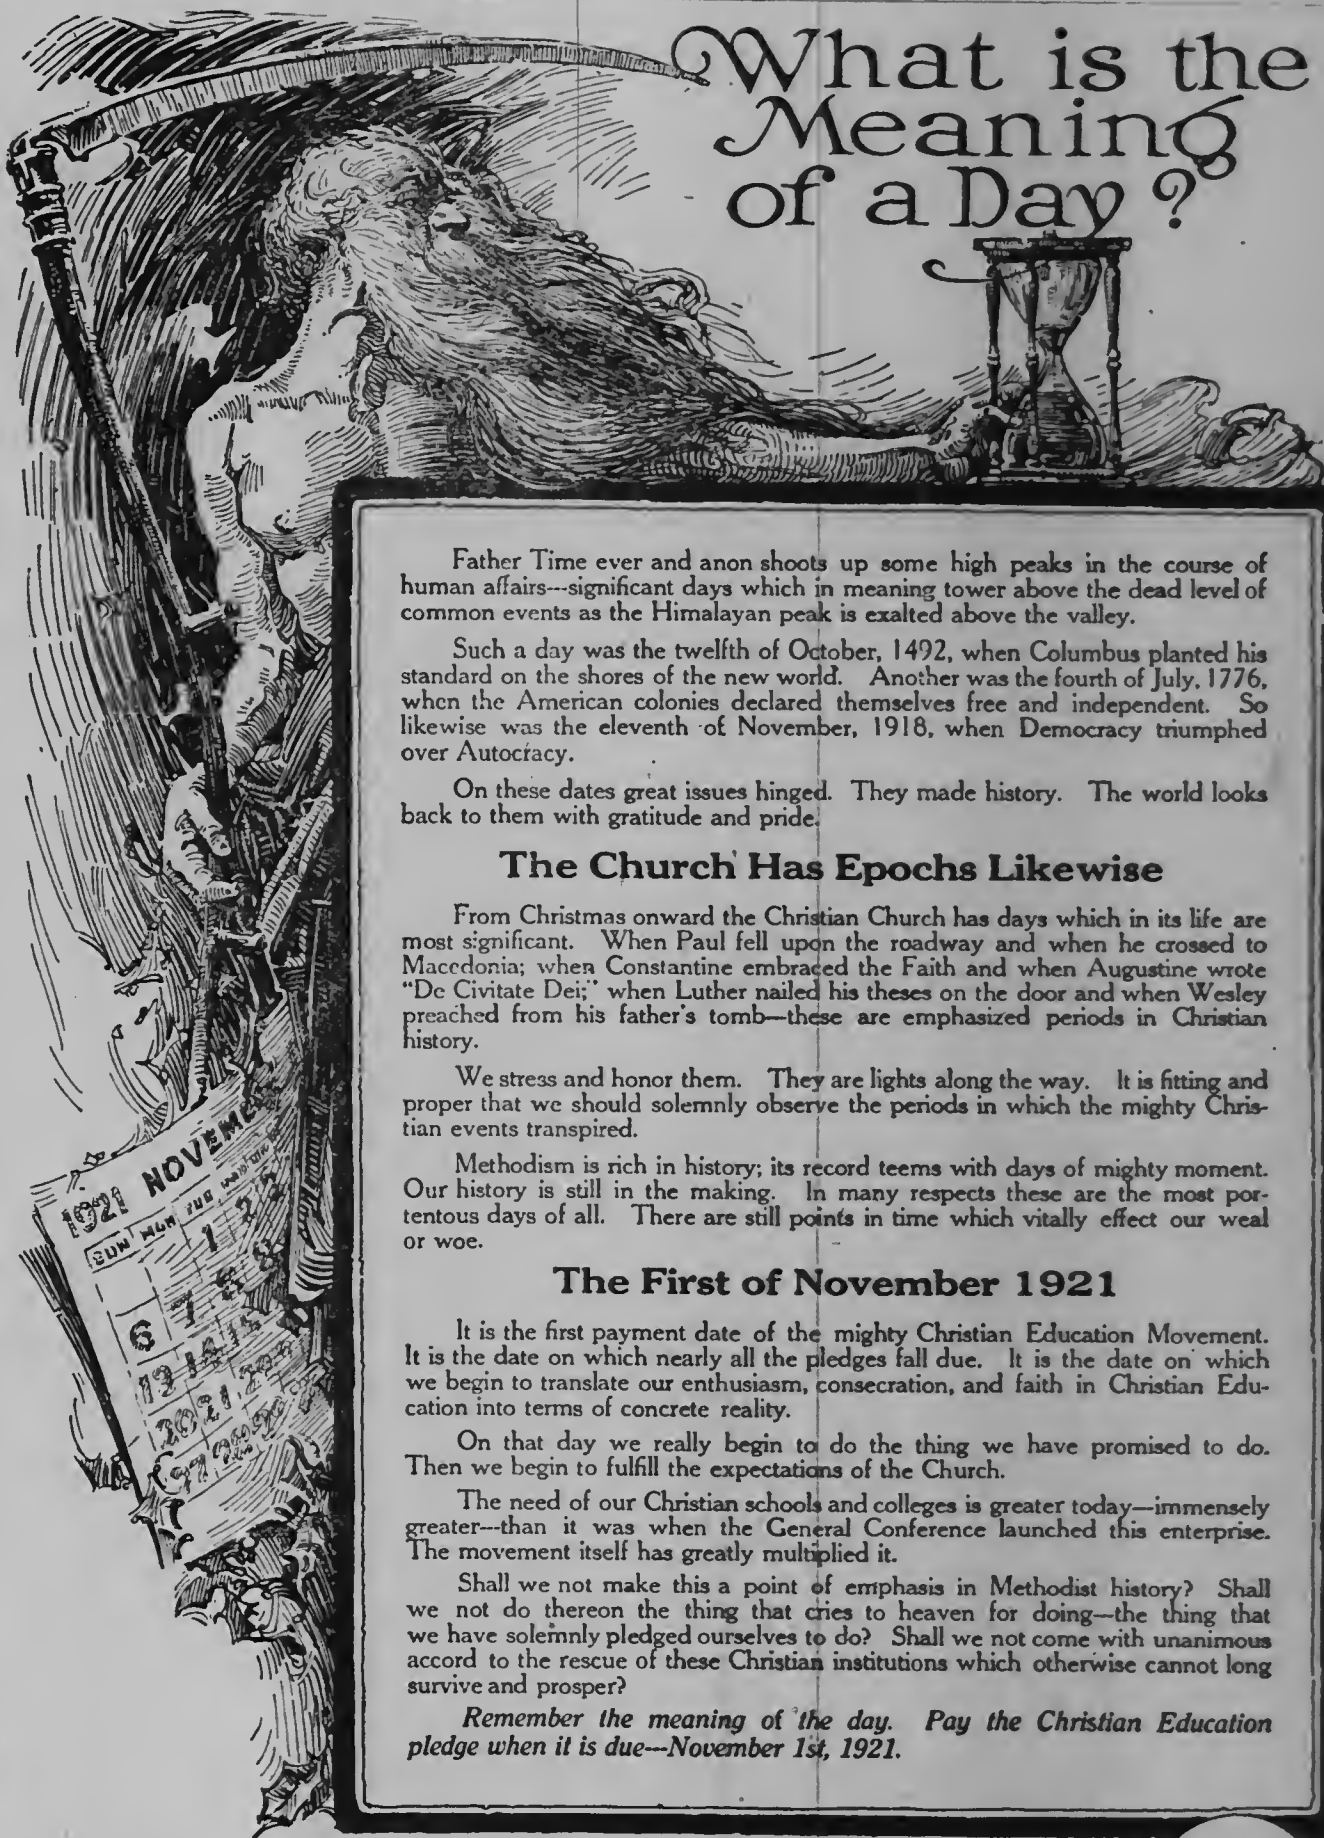

I will say in conclusion that we are moving on to "higher ground." May God bless you, Dr. Carley and Brother Chalmers, in your work for the promotion of the church and kingdom of God.

Oh, yes, I was about to forget to tell you that we have some of the best people on the Walnut Grove charge that can be found anywhere in the world. They are true and loyal to all that God loves. May the God of the harvest increase their number.

Yours faithfully and sincerely,

J. W. PRICE, Pastor.

What is the Meaning of a Day?

Father Time ever and anon shoots up some high peaks in the course of human affairs—significant days which in meaning tower above the dead level of common events as the Himalayan peak is exalted above the valley.

Such a day was the twelfth of October, 1492, when Columbus planted his standard on the shores of the new world. Another was the fourth of July, 1776, when the American colonies declared themselves free and independent. So likewise was the eleventh of November, 1918, when Democracy triumphed over Autocracy.

On these dates great issues hinged. They made history. The world looks back to them with gratitude and pride.

The Church Has Epochs Likewise

From Christmas onward the Christian Church has days which in its life are most significant. When Paul fell upon the roadway and when he crossed to Macedonia; when Constantine embraced the Faith and when Augustine wrote "De Civitate Dei"; when Luther nailed his theses on the door and when Wesley preached from his father's tomb—these are emphasized periods in Christian history.

We stress and honor them. They are lights along the way. It is fitting and proper that we should solemnly observe the periods in which the mighty Christian events transpired.

Methodism is rich in history; its record teems with days of mighty moment. Our history is still in the making. In many respects these are the most portentous days of all. There are still points in time which vitally effect our weal or woe.

The First of November 1921

It is the first payment date of the mighty Christian Education Movement. It is the date on which nearly all the pledges fall due. It is the date on which we begin to translate our enthusiasm, consecration, and faith in Christian Education into terms of concrete reality.

On that day we really begin to do the thing we have promised to do. Then we begin to fulfill the expectations of the Church.

The need of our Christian schools and colleges is greater today—immensely greater—than it was when the General Conference launched this enterprise. The movement itself has greatly multiplied it.

Shall we not make this a point of emphasis in Methodist history? Shall we not do thereon the thing that cries to heaven for doing—the thing that we have solemnly pledged ourselves to do? Shall we not come with unanimous accord to the rescue of these Christian institutions which otherwise cannot long survive and prosper?

Remember the meaning of the day. Pay the Christian Education pledge when it is due—November 1st, 1921.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE BATTLE FIELDS.

We have heard and read much of the battle fields of France—and it is well that we have done so. Our hearts have been stirred as we have learned how heroic men fought on those far-off fields for the preservation of the institutions and ideals that are the bulwark of civilization, and we have been moved to dedicate ourselves anew to the service of God and our fellow-men as we have read of how those valiant soldiers laid down their lives for the right. But there are other battle fields upon which the battle is still raging and upon which the victory is still to be won, and of these we need to know, too. Here at home the conflict is joined between the forces of evil and of righteousness and the struggle is as bitter as any that took place across the seas. We may not hear the roar of the cannon or see the mighty hosts of opposing armies in battle array, but the war is on and we have a part in it. In our own souls the conflict may be raging—the conflict between good and evil—and upon the outcome the issues of eternity hinge. In community life and upon the larger areas of State and nation the battle cry is sounding and the call for enlistment is ringing. The battle fields of life are all about us.

MEDICINAL (?) BEER.

The issuance of regulations by the Treasury Department under which beer and other alcoholic drinks may be sold for medicinal purposes, and the joyful acclaim with which they have been received by the brewers and those who have opposed the Volstead Law, would seem to indicate that these enemies of the public welfare believe that our whole population is afflicted with grievous diseases the only potent remedy for which is beer and plenty of it. They seem to think, too, that all the physicians of the country will immediately begin to write prescriptions for alcoholic drinks at such a rate that the breweries will have to work overtime to supply the demand for their product. We are convinced that much of the jubilant uproar is propaganda pure and simple, put out with the hope of deceiving the public generally into believing that the one thing the people of this country are suffering for is the opportunity to satisfy their thirst for a drink that the highest medical authority has declared is utterly without medicinal value. If our physicians are willing to lower the ethics of their noble profession to the point where they can cater to the depraved appetite of the beer guzzler, and if the druggists of the land are willing to turn their stores into beer saloons and hang-outs for bums and loafers—which we have no idea is the case—we may have before us a period of bacchanalian revelry that will bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of the law-abiding citizenship of this country. But the revelry will not last long. Prohibition has come to stay in this country, and the law will become more and more stringent in enforcing it against the machinations of those whose chief interest is to make financial gain out of the accursed traffic. In this connection the following editorial in a recent number of the Country Gentleman, one of the great secular periodicals of this country, is of interest: "The country has recently been regaled with tales of drink-laden craft hovering off the three-mile limit, and of suspiciously easy robberies of whiskey warehouses on shore. We are told that rum running is a flourishing industry along our northern border; that in every city bootleggers, big and little, ply their trade. These activities are by-products of prohibition, but they present John Barleycorn in no new light. For generations he has been a consistent lawbreaker; to-day he is merely running true to form. The industry is forever outlawed. The efforts to set prohibition at naught do not prove that the Eighteenth Amendment is unworkable; they merely call good citizens to duty."

LOYALTY TO A MISSION.

In his address to the elders of Ephesus, Paul uses these significant words: "And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there: save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." Nowhere else in literature do we find a more heroic expression of a man's supreme loyalty to the mission with which he has been intrusted. These words constitute a challenge to those of us to-day who are tempted to lose heart and hope and to give up the work to which we have been called. And the challenge is not to ministers only, but to all those who have entered into the fight to establish righteousness upon the earth. If, with the apostle, we can see nothing ahead of us but suffering, ignominy, death, still we can remember that the compulsion of a mighty purpose has started us upon our course and that we are the agents of the Omnipotent One in carrying out a mighty plan. Our actual accomplishments may fall far short of what we hoped to do, and the end may seem as far off as at the beginning; but in loyalty to our mission we can remain steadfast, with the full assurance that those who are faithful unto the end shall receive their reward. Loyalty is a beautiful and heart-stirring word.

OFF THE TRACK.

A sad sight is a mighty locomotive off the track, lying by the side of the roadbed, half-buried in the ground, powerless, useless, with a long train of wrecked cars, it may be, piled up around it. When it started on its journey it was the embodiment of power, well oiled, running smoothly, responsive to the slightest pressure on the throttle by the engineer whose pride it was, but something went wrong—it ran into some obstruction on the track, the rails became loose, some part of its mechanism gave way under tremendous strain, and it crashed to its ruin, helpless itself and carrying destruction with it. So it is with a life that suddenly, unexpectedly, tragically has left the straight course upon which it had started—the saddest sight in the world. But all is not lost. The wrecking crew will come with its powerful crane and expert workmen, the engine will be lifted from its place of helplessness and carried back to the shop, where it will be repaired and put back into service. So, again, it may be with the wrecked life. There is one who is able to take even the fragments of a life and put them together in such a way as to restore the life to noble endeavor and useful service. It is the glory of the gospel of Christ that it recognizes no hopeless cases.

"TILL THE LINES BROKE."

In the course of a most helpful discourse not long ago we heard a preacher relate an incident that illustrates how absurdly weak is the faith that some people profess when all is going well. A woman with her little child was riding in a buggy, when the horse became frightened and began to run. The woman used her utmost endeavor to stop the beast until the lines broke, when she jumped from the vehicle with the child in her arms. Fortunately, no serious injuries resulted. When asked later how she felt during the experience, she naively said: "When I realized I was in a run-away, I trusted in the Lord till the lines broke—then I jumped out." We do not call in question the wisdom of jumping, but we do wonder at the faith that gave way when trouble came. The test of real faith comes not in prosperity, but in adversity. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him," is the language of the soul that is really stayed upon God.

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE IS ITSELF IN NEED OF A GREAT REVIVAL OF SPIRITUAL RELIGION.

By James T. Bagby.

ARTICLE III.

When Archimedes discovered how to find the amount of alloy in Hiero's crown, he is said to have cried out "Eureka." Similarly, when we have found out just the right tonic for a sick world, we can go forth, under the leadership of Christ, to do our part in helping to solve the problems involved in the modern social and economic order. Every thoughtful man is interested in overcoming the ills of society and rendering social service to his fellows. If we are to render practical aid to those who are trying to conquer the forces of discord in their natures and bring peace and harmony into their own lives, we must know that there is no force or power under the heavens that will give society the peace of which it is in quest, but the "Redemption that is in Christ Jesus."

As for our Redeemer, "the Lord of hosts is his name." He is our only hope. "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12.) If we are to find remedies for the ills of society that will effect permanent improvement in society to-day, we must make regeneration the foundation upon which the entire social structure must rest. The whole world must be made to realize that salvation can come only by each individual's exercising faith in that Christ who made an atonement that is the only remedy for sin; and before there comes any permanent relief for our modern ills, the Christ of Calvary must become the actual Redeemer of society, and the potentialities of his life must become the actual possession of our individual lives.

Since conversions take place in greater numbers among youths of our land than among the older ones, it is manifestly true that the moral and religious advancement of society is to be accomplished by the young life of our country. The standards of society are to be raised by the youths of our land or not at all. When our youths concern themselves with the moral and spiritual ideals of the Sermon on the Mount and faithfully observe its code, which overflows with the ardent virility of youth, they can go forth with the banner of Christ, the ensign of justice and love, to cheer the drooping spirits of those who have no homes to shelter them and no clothes to keep them warm, and to soothe their afflicted souls with the consoling message of the Gospel of Christ and bring forth fruit worthy of our merciful Father and beneficial to our fellow creatures.

Now this is what is needed and what we must have before we have anything approximating that social order that Jesus came to establish. As I said before, it will take the manliness of youth to bring in this revival and give the world a new era of love and friendship. See the young man Jesus with uplifted eyes and face aglow with divine light in the garden, just as his prayers have been answered and his Father has sent an angel straightway from heaven, giving him strength to endure the humiliating scenes and terrible sufferings of the Cross; when "He bore our sins in his body on the tree;" and let the picture of his suffering inspire the hearts of our youths with loftier emotions, and send them forth to the performance of the sacred duty of establishing the social principles of Jesus in the life of the world.

But how is this world task to be accomplished? A very large proportion of our skilled workers in the church come from the Epworth League. This is because the Epworth League gives expression to the religious life of our young people and surrounds them with the refining influences of truth and noble example and inspires their souls with an ambition to be up and doing their sacred duty, like their Lord and Master. But before the Epworth League can thoroughly prepare and equip its members with grace and courage sufficient to accomplish all that is good and desirable on earth, it must have a great revival in which our boys and girls that answer the call to life service shall be "endued with power from on high;" for the Lord has plainly taught that no power, either in heaven or earth, no learning however profound, and no ordination however apostolic can qualify men to preach the gospel without "the baptism of the Holy Spirit."

If the Epworth League is to give to the world young men and women who show manhood and womanhood in their noblest and grandest self-renunciation in committing themselves to the arduous path of a minister or a missionary, she must lead them by a great revival of spiritual religion into a new and deeper communion with him who died for the salvation of mankind. As this work must be done by the youths of our land, the Epworth League and its sister, the Young People's Societies, must have a revival of spiritual religion in order to give to the world workers whose minds have been made sensitive to the world's need by a personal experience of salvation and who go forth to be leaders in the moral progress of the race. If we are to be successful in our fight against socialized evil, our young people who are to do the fighting must have truest communion with Christ, surrender themselves to his influence, and enter into his spirit of love, sympathy, and service.

Now, since the Epworth League is the one institution of our church that teaches the youth how to express himself in a public way and develop his finer qualities, it must have a great revival of spiritual religion in order to awaken the souls of our boys and girls and impart to them a faith, power, originality, and ambition to save men from immoral and sinful lives and exert an influence for good in turning the minds of men to realities and in making them efficient both socially and morally.

Seeing that these things are so, the revival should have the first claim to the Epworth League's attention, as more nearly concerning its duty and obligation than anything this world can afford. Whatever satisfaction we may feel from the possession of material things is infinitely short of that which we derive from communion with God; and the Epworth League, which delights in furnishing recreation and amusements for our young people, must first furnish them with that spiritual awakening that will lead them to the consideration of the facts and laws of human society and the spiritual ideals of Christianity and the endless felicity of the righteous in this present world and in the world to come. Let us impress upon our youths the part they are to play in the regeneration of social life. Let us teach them that they have desires which this material world cannot satisfy, but that from infancy to the grave they will be continually looking for future blessings without ever being fully gratified; that this desire is so strongly implanted in the soul that nothing short of the salvation of the soul and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit can give us anything like complete satisfaction; that we feel the sweet influence of the Holy Spirit, love our blessed Redeemer above all others, and aspire to imitate his perfection, is proof positive that some day we shall rise above all terrestrial objects and continue our lofty flight until we reach our inheritance in the pasture fields of eternity.

CHRISTIANITY VS. RATIONALISM.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis.

Rationalism is the highest possible fruit of the cogitations of the natural, or unregenerated, mind. It is the sinner at his best. The nature of the natural, or sinner, man is as follows: 1. He is alive physically and intellectually, but dead spiritually. Being a living, thinking personality, he may be either coarse or refined in his life. But be he ever so refined, cultured, educated, polished, genteel, and kindly, it is impossible for him to please God. He can not please God because he is dead, spiritually. Before he can even know God, much less please Him in his life, the unregenerated man must be born from above through faith in Jesus Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit. 2. The sinner is by nature a rationalist. He comprehends, alone, by the power of his human mind. Being dead, spiritually, he can not comprehend by faith. The natural man accepts things only upon the basis of credulity and logic. 3. The natural man does not, nor can he, know God as a loving heavenly Father. He knows God only as NATURE and as the FIRST GREAT CAUSE. 4. The highest civilization that the natural man can build is like unto those of Babylon, Greece and Rome. The greatest power known to the natural man is some manifestation of physical force. 5. To the natural man the Bible is foolishness; because of his being spiritually dead, therefore he can not apprehend God therein as a loving heavenly Father who is eternally at work in the great business of redeeming a lost world.

The nature of the spiritual man, or the Christian, is as follows: 1. The Christian has physical, intellectual and spiritual life. Being alive, spiritually, by the power of the Spirit of God working in him, he must be pure, holy and noble in his life. 2. The Christian, by the power of his new life in Christ, is a man of faith. He comprehends not only by the power of the human mind, but also by faith; that is, through his soul which is in touch with the mind of God through the power of the Holy Spirit. 3. The Christian knows God as a loving heavenly Father. Back of everything visible and invisible, the Christian sees a loving heavenly Father at work for the eternal happiness of His children. 4. The Christian is looking forward to a civilization upon earth whose maker and builder is Jesus Christ. That civilization, when built, will be without wars, without independent nationalities, without fightings between capital and labor, and will be built upon the foundation of justice, love and mercy. The greatest force that will be known to that civilization is the power of love. 5. To the Christian the Bible is the Word of God. The Christian can not explain everything therein upon the basis of the reasoning power of the human mind (by logic), but by FAITH he accepts it as true and is content to wait until God is ready to lift his poor human mind into that realm of thought where his human mind will be able to think the thoughts of God. Until then, just because God says so, the Christian accepts by FAITH the story of Jonah and the great fish, together with all the other miracles of the Bible. The Christian's human mind, because of its contact with God through the power of the Holy Spirit, is wise enough to know that once you slip the question mark behind the miracles of the Bible you thereby let the gap down for the question mark to slip behind the Christian doctrine of the virgin birth of our Lord and all other spiritual teachings of the Bible. The unregenerated man is not that wise, poor fellow. He thinks he is wiser, even, than is God, but he is spiritually dead and does not know it; therefore pray for him.

Adam, before the fall, knew nothing about sin. He had not so much as a theoretical knowledge of sin. The direful consequences of disobeying God could not therefore be grasped by Adam before the fall. True, God told him that in the day he ate of the fruit of the tree of knowledge he would tile, as we had pictured them, but rocky and barren, and now very sparsely inhabited. We had imagined fishermen's cottages all along the way, but they are no more, if they ever existed. Only a few villages dot the shores here and there. The feeling we had while on these sacred waters was an indescribable blending of peace and of sorrow.

At Tiberius we were glad to find a fairly good English hotel and to get a little rest, in spite of intense heat. That evening, after dinner, some members of our party went swimming in the Sea of Galilee. Others were up very early in the morning to go across the sea to the site of old Capernaum, where the excavators have found the remains of an old Jewish temple, the only relic of former grandeur in this historic place. On the shores, too, were the town of Bethsaida—still a small fishing village—and, further up, the mountains from which Jesus preached to and fed the five thousand.

About ten o'clock, our party started out in fourteen carriages to make the long overland trip of a hundred and twenty miles from Tiberius to Jerusalem. Each carriage was drawn by three stout horses and had from four to five occupants—for our number was sixty-five, including the drivers. We had intended to make this trip by automobiles, but our guides told us that parts of the road were much torn up by road machines, as the English government is completing a fine highway from Tiberius to Jerusalem. The Turks had already built, before the war, a large part of this highway and had done their work well, but we feel very safe in predicting that the English will improve on the work of the Turk in every material and governmental way. Well, the condition of the roads and the unsettled state of the country, which is full of bandits, made it seem wiser to make this trip by carriages, which can travel better "en caravan" than automobiles can.

The general aspects of this country were very interesting and rather marvelous to us. The country is very mountainous, with the one great exception of the plain of Esdraelon—of which we will speak later. These hills, or mountains, are very rocky and barren, so much so that wherever a farmer constructs a fence, he makes it of loose stones which he takes from his fields. We hardly see how he can use a plow or any modern farm machinery on this rocky soil—and yet the "desert places bloom" and vegetation rears itself in the bravest way from the midst of stones. The marvel to us was that such a thin soil could hold enough moisture beneath those burning skies to prevent plant life from withering. Yet there were very fair crops spread out before us, even some very good wheat fields. There was a remarkable dearth of trees, except the olives which crown many of these summits, but these, of course, are planted and cultivated.

It would take too much time for us to tell you of the many, many places of Biblical interest which came within our vision on this drive. Every hour or so, and sometimes more frequently, our carriages would stop and the native guides, or dragomans as they are called, would get out and pass up and down the line of the "caravan" and point out and explain places of interest in our vicinity. We were quite surprised to find that these dragomans were well up on both the Old and the New Testament. One of them said he was a Catholic and another was an Episcopalian; still a third was a Mohammedan, but he knew his Bible.

Our first stop was at Cana of Galilee, where the Savior's first great miracle was wrought. The town was more poverty-stricken and the inhabitants were more shiftless and hopeless-looking than in any other Oriental town we had seen up to this time. The streets are narrow alleyways, the houses, which are crowded together, are built of clay, straw and small stones, and resemble, somewhat, the adobe houses of Mexican Indians. This gives the whole town a sodden, colorless, cheerless aspect, which is hard to describe. About the center of the town is a very nice Catholic church and Trappist monastery. The monks of this monastery were very cordial in their hospitality to us. They allowed us to use their dining-hall (or refectory), for our basket luncheon, and after that they showed us their monastery and the church, which is built over the well from which water was drawn for the miracle. We were shown large earthen water jugs which were supposed to be the original ones used by the Master. The church was very interesting, but very Catholic in its ornamentation and its traditions. Just outside the church and monastery, the peasant women and children besieged us, trying to sell us souvenirs, principally tiny water bottles of clay.

A drive of about three hours from Cana brought us to Nazareth, where we stopped for the night. We got to the little English hotel in time for afternoon tea. Immediately after, we started out to see the city, or rather to see certain sacred parts of it. Here we met, in its full strength, the Eastern custom of building a church over every sacred spot—"to preserve it." First, we visited the church which is built over the site of Mary's home. It is one of the most impressive, though not among the finest, of the churches we saw in the East. Mary's house is in the crypt of this church. We had a very saintly-faced, elegant-mannered, old monk to show us around in this church, and it would take a long time to tell all the interesting traditions he narrated. He showed us a little church museum and then his garden, which, by the way, was full of American flowers grown from seeds sent him by his brother, who is a monk living in Maryland. Then he went with us to another church, several blocks distant, which is built over the site of the Carpenter's Shop, where our Lord worked for so many years of his early manhood. After that, we visited the synagogue in which He, perhaps, often spoke. A small part of what is said to be the original structure, hewn out of stone, is still there. Mary's Well is a public fountain from which all the villagers fill their water bottles. It seems to be a place of social gathering, and is not for many minutes at a time a place of peace, for young and old push each other rudely, sometimes good-naturedly, trying to get to the fountain. Others stand by and laugh and gossip, loudly. But one cannot fail to feel sorry for this motley, turbulent, ignorant crowd.

After dinner, our hotel was crowded with peasant women who came to sell their beautiful hand-made lace. It was so lovely and so cheap that many in our party "bought themselves poor." It seems that the women of Nazareth are in the habit of selling this beautiful handwork to merchants from Jerusalem—selling it by the pound—so it was a great opportunity for them to sell it "by the piece."

Next morning, by 6 o'clock we had finished our breakfast and were in our carriages once more. Just a few miles beyond Nazareth we came to the Plain of Esdraelon. It is one of the most, if not the most, historic plains in all the world. Belgium is said to be the battle-field of Europe and just as truly the Plain of Esdraelon is the battle-field of Asia Minor. To name all the great battles that have been fought there would weary us—and you. Its last great scene of conflict was during the recent world war when General Allenby gained his glorious victory over the Turks. We drove through this plain for three hours or more, marveling at its beauty and its fertility—for its record of peace and its richness of soil are as noteworthy as its military history. It seems like an oasis in a desert. When we passed through it, there was little sign of recent combat, but glorious prospects for a wonderful wheat crop.

Not far beyond Esdraelon we came to the interesting village of Jeniu. It is now a large English post, but is still Turkish in its sympathies. We stopped in the outskirts of the village for rest and refreshment for our horses, but an English officer requested our men to move on as there were signs among the natives of an unfriendly demonstration because of our presence—for we were unloved "foreigners."

That night, we stopped at Nabulus, the largest village in Samaria. The town itself was interesting, but we had such a poor, uncleanly hotel that we do not like to recall the details of this visit. It stands for the greatest discomfort and disgust that we experienced in the Orient, and that is saying much.

Just a little way beyond Nabulus, we came to Jacob's Well. We got out of our carriages and spent thirty minutes or more in the really beautiful church and monastery which protect this sacred spot. We drank water from the well and spoke of its wonderful history from the time of Jacob until our Lord talked there with the Samaritan woman.

The only other stop of importance which was made before we got to Jerusalem was in the little village where Mary and Joseph stopped when they missed Jesus from the caravan. They went back to Jerusalem, you remember, and found Him disputing with the doctors, in the Temple.

The approach to Jerusalem is very beautiful. One recalls the expression, "The mountains round about Jerusalem," and sees its appropriateness. After so long a drive through such a barren territory, Jerusalem appeared, in the distance, almost like a fairy city in its dignity and beauty. It was a great "thrill" to feel that we were really coming to this Hill of Zion—this place of sacred interest to so many millions of Christian and of Jewish hearts.

To tell of Jerusalem is a chapter in itself. We have already trespassed too long on your time, so we must write of the Holy City in another letter.

Sincerely your friends,

DR. and MRS. I. W. COOPER.

THE ONE BAPTISM.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Part I.

In Paul's letter to the Ephesians we read: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism"—Eph. 4:5. Our Baptist friends, apparently obsessed with the absurd imagination that the word baptism, wherever it occurs in the Bible regardless of the connection in which it may be used, carries within itself the idea of immersion in water, have employed the Scripture here quoted as a proof text with which to hammer the Methodist Church for its practice of allowing pouring, sprinkling, and immersion as valid modes of water baptism, whereas, they say, there is but one mode, viz., immersion, and then they proceed to quote, "one Lord, one faith, one baptism," deceiving themselves into believing that they have clinched the argument against the practice of the Methodist Church. First, let it be distinctly understood that we do not practice three kinds of water baptism, but accept three modes as permissible because we do not believe that either mode is essential to salvation any more than we believe that water baptism by any mode is essential. They say that water baptism is not essential, but at the same time place such emphasis on immersion as the only mode that the ordinary man who neither thinks nor reads for himself might easily get the impression that while water baptism itself is not essential, the mode is the essential thing—the sine qua non of salvation. Methodists deny that water baptism by any mode is essential; therefore, consistently allow the validity of any mode—even immersion, although that peculiar mode is now almost antiquated in the practice of Methodism, and the writer predicts that the time is not far in the future when its practice among the people called Methodist will cease altogether (may the time soon come)! In view of our present practice in accepting the validity of the various modes, perhaps if the ingenuity of man should invent still another mode which has never yet been devised, and which could be administered decently in the name of the Father, Son, and the Holy Ghost, I see no reason why we should not grant its permissibility and for the same reason that we accept immersion as a valid mode, although we believe that sprinkling is the only Scriptural mode.

But unfortunately for our immersionist friends, including a few others as well as Baptists, the passage quoted at the beginning of this article has no water in it—not one drop. The word baptism here used refers solely to the baptism of the Holy Ghost. By following the marginal references given in my Bible, I turn to Gal. 3:27 and read: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Possibly the immersionist sees water here also, but certainly water baptism by whatever mode performed cannot be called "putting on Christ"—that much must be admitted. Furthermore, unless the doctrine of baptismal regeneration as taught by some of the Fathers of the church and now believed by a few modern immersionists be true, the Holy Ghost is the only agency by which men can be "baptized into Christ." However, we are not left in doubt as to the agency by which we are "baptized into Christ," whether it be by water or the operation of the Holy Ghost; for, in his letter to the Corinthians, Paul calls the name of the Person who baptizes us into Christ: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body."—I Cor. 12:13. The marginal reference opposite this last passage takes us to Eph. 4:5, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism," and, as I have shown by the parallel quotations, it has in it not the slightest allusion to water baptism by whatever mode performed, but refers solely and only to the one baptism of the Holy Ghost. Those who are apparently so much inclined to saturate with water the word here translated baptism must be gifted with some peculiar process of ratiocination not given to other men and are, seemingly, so anxious to prove their notions of water baptism that they dare not only to pervert the words of Holy Writ, but also permit themselves to degrade the doctrine of the baptism of the Holy Ghost to the level of water baptism.

"One Lord, one faith, one baptism"—holding high these words of the Apostle, I venture to affirm that there is no such thing as water baptism taught in the Bible. I do not intend to say that the application of water in the name of the Holy Trinity is not called baptism in the Bible, but I do intend to say that wherever and whenever the Bible speaks of ceremonial cleansing by water as baptism it is only a trope, or that figure of speech known to all grammarians as metonymy, by which a word is used for another which it suggests, or a name is substituted for that which it represents—the name of the thing itself applied to its symbol. For instance, we say, "Mrs. Jones sets a good table," putting the word table for the food; or, pointing to a picture in the album lying open on the table, I say, "That is Mr. Smith;" but you know I mean it is only Mr. Smith's picture. So when you or I, or any one else, or the Bible calls the application of water baptism we are transferring the name of the thing itself to its symbol. It may sound paradoxical, but water baptism is not baptism; it is only the symbol of baptism, the one, the only baptism—the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

Paul said, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism" and he did not have "water on the brain" when he said it. He was writing about the one, the only baptism taught in the Bible—Holy Ghost baptism. It is of the baptism of the Holy Ghost that the Bible speaks in history, prophecy, and song. Joel prophesied of the time when the people should be baptized with the Holy Ghost: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit." In the second chapter of Acts we read the remarkable account of the literal fulfillment of Joel's prophecy: "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." Some mocked: "These men are full of new wine," but Peter denied, "These are not drunken as ye suppose, but this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel." It was of the abiding influences of the Holy Spirit's baptism that Jesus spoke when he said: "And I will pray the Father, and he will give you another Comforter that he may abide with you forever." Our Lord teaches that it was necessary for him to resume his original glory with the Father before the Holy Spirit could enter upon his work. "It is," said Jesus, "expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you." Again he said, "And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." In the gospel of Luke we read where Jesus said: "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."—Luke 24:49. In Acts 1:8 we read how, while talking to his disciples for the last time, he said: "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," and in the second chapter of Acts we find the wonderful record of the fulfillment of the "promise of the Father" when the disciples "were all filled with the Holy Ghost." This is the Pentecostal baptism, the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost is necessary to the individual heart for its regeneration. This is what Jesus meant when he said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." And again: "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

The baptism of the Holy Ghost is necessary to the cleansing the soul from sin. Hence, Paul wrote to Titus, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus 3:5.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost is necessary to empower us for service. Jesus said: "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

We are driven, therefore, to the inevitable conclusion that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is absolutely essential to salvation, and we have the direct statement of the Bible in support of this conclusion. Indeed, it is the declaration of our Lord himself and is found in Mark 16:16: "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved." I am not unmindful of the fact that the immersionist sees water here as everywhere the word baptize or any of its variations occurs. Indeed, he is able to see water even in a desert as he does in the case of the Ethiopian eunuch who himself was surprised to find any water at all—even enough to sprinkle with—"in the way which led unto Gaza which was desert." Acts 8:36. However, in Mark 16:16, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved," there is not enough water for a protoplasm, whatever that may mean, to splash around in. Jesus said, "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved." If he meant water baptism, then water baptism is essential to salvation in such a way that his salvation is incomplete until after his baptism, and we should have to read, "He that believeth, and is baptized (with water), shall be saved." But I contend that our Lord had in his mind no thought of water, but referred solely to Holy Ghost baptism. Read that thought into the words of Jesus and you will get his meaning: "He that believeth, and is baptized (with the Holy Ghost), shall be saved." If it had not been for the over-emphasis that immersionists place upon water baptism, no one would have ever thought that our Lord made the slightest allusion to water. The fact is that some immersionists have placed so much stress upon water baptism, the symbol, that they have apparently lost sight of the thing symbolized; and in a miserable little pamphlet entitled "Methodism vs. The Truth," Rev. Mr. Gregory, a Baptist preacher, informs us that neither he nor his church believes in the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which is, as I have intimated, the logical and inevitable result of the undue emphasis that he and his church place upon water baptism—they have lost sight of the reality, the baptism of the Holy Ghost, by stressing a particular mode of the symbol, water baptism. He and his people need to be reminded of the fact that the "promise of the Father" was not water baptism, but the baptism of the Holy Ghost, "which," said Jesus, "ye have heard of me: for John truly baptized with water (baptizo on hudati, instrumental dative form, "with," not "in"); but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence."

Thus, I return to the point of beginning: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism," and that one baptism is the only baptism taught in the Bible—the baptism of the Holy Ghost. May that "one baptism" come in power upon the church of to-day as it fell upon the church in the days of the apostles!

TO THE MINISTERS AND MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Our Annual Conference meets November 30, at Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss. There are, as you know, many business details to look into and much business to transact. The doing of this under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, and of the honor and glory of God, is desired by all.

On the suggestion of Bishop McMurry, we have arranged to have Dr. H. C. Morrison, of Louisville, Ky., preach twice a day at 10 o'clock at Millsaps College, and at 7:30 at Capitol Street Church.

Our purpose in this notice is to request every one who loves the church to pray that the Holy Spirit may so guide the Conference in the business affairs, and the services, that God's will may be fully done, and that all who attend may go away with their souls filled with evangelistic fire and a passion for the salvation of souls.

Sincerely,

M. I. BURTON,
H. F. TOLLE.

CONCERNING OUR CHURCH EXTENSION WORK.

It is only one month from the date of this writing until the Mississippi Annual Conference convenes. You pastors and laymen who read the report of the Board of Church Extension made to the Annual Conference a year ago know that we have two special funds to raise this year: one of $250 to help build a church at Columbus, Miss., the other $150 from each presiding elder's district for the Washington City Church. Let the pastors and laymen do their best to meet these two worthy church extension enterprises.

Yours sincerely,

I. E. ALFORD, Secretary.

THE TASK AT HAND.

By Rev. A. A. Bernard.

The Christian church should ever have some worthy task in hand. It has just completed one, to which it is now applying the finishing touches, one the good of which no definite calculations can possibly estimate.

There is another that is looming menacingly on the horizon during the last few years. The investigations of the moving-picture situation in America to-day have disclosed and are disclosing some rare thought-gems for our meditation. After a while the sad discovery of the moral inebriety and stupefaction of a generation of youths, crazed in the sewers of a vicious, salacious propaganda, will jerk us from our moods of meditation and fling us into agony of humiliation and prayer. And if such be the case, let us hope that when we come out of them we shall still possess strength, courage and desire to teach these unprincipled purveyors of moral poison a lesson such as we recently taught the brewers of our land. We have far less reason for submitting to the moral poisoning of our children than we had for submitting to the physical poisoning of the alcoholic addict.

The task at hand should not be a difficult one. We have the benefit of previous experience as regards organization, and the sooner we get to the task of driving the moral degenerates, judging from the pictures they send out, from places of influence among the producers, and keep them out, the better off the nation will be.

The moving picture is among the greatest discoveries of this age. It is said that we are the heirs of all the ages; if this is true of ourselves, it is also true of our children. There are thousands of mothers and fathers all over our country who are in doubt as to whether they can afford to allow their children to attend the picture show—and what is significant, their number is growing daily. The question has never stopped and never will stop at the stage of to go or not to go, but it is where we are wanting to know if what the producers say is true or not true.

It has been flaunted in the faces of the decent men and women of our country that the people of our day and time demand the vulgar and impure, the lowbrow and the vile, the libidinous and the lickerish. Is it true? Ask these parents if it is true of themselves or of their children. No, it is not true; it is infamous, it is a crying insult to every decent man and woman.

I am not saying that all who go to these cesspools of intellectual and spiritual poison are not decent people—they have no alternative; it is also true that everything shown is not suggestive. I know a lady who was lured to a picture-show one day by the association of the name of the title of the scenario to a great historical event. She expected to see something; imagine her disgust and nausea when from scene to scene there were depicted the most disgusting views one could imagine. The point is clearly seen in what followed. The picture-show was being discussed by a large group of ladies at one of their meetings, when the above-mentioned lady remarked that she certainly would have left the picture-show on that occasion had it not seemed that she was trying to appear odd. Imagine her surprise when nearly the whole company of ladies present said that had she only made the start they would have followed. I have repeatedly heard ladies say that they were sadly disappointed, and successively so, so much so that they had determined not to go any more.

Since this is true, let us stop and ask ourselves who are these men that are injecting this infamous spawn into the minds and souls of our children? They surely cannot be men of Christian integrity, no, nor of Christian training. It might surprise some of us to learn that "the modern picture influence of the United States is exclusively under the control, moral and financial, of the Jewish manipulators of the public mind; men who not twenty years ago were fur peddlers, newsboys, clothes spongers, men in mercantile lines, clerks, variety hall managers, and ghetto products." As the same writer has said, the fact that these men were thus occupied before they entered the moving-picture business is not against them, but the point is, "how can men coming from such employments, with no gradations between and with nothing but a commercial vision, be expected to view the picture-drama as the most potent influence for the promotion of morals and art? They cannot do it." They must change or the controlling influence must be taken from them.

It has been shown against them, "that every scene detrimental to their race and religion is cut out: that every indignity is heaped upon the Protestant clergymen: that more and more the 'free-love' clergyman is appearing on the scene: that you may not depict a Hebrew as the owner of a sweat-shop; but you may make a Christian clergyman everything from a seducer to a safe-cracker and get away with it." But when have you seen a Catholic priest subjected to indignity? These men soon made themselves felt, and it is a poor leadership we have if it remains unconcerned about this matter.

We must acknowledge that the thing is in a bad way if such men as Maurice Maeterlinck, who recently visited us with a view to scenario writing, is to be taken seriously. We know his philosophy and what it stands for. Hear what he says: "Of a hundred films witnessed in California he found four or five 'truly good, three or four others not so good, and ninety-odd practically worthless.' There were spectacles, scarcely worthy of apes, going to such a point of imbecility, of silliness, of coarseness, of incoherence, and especially of revolting ugliness, that one wonders shamefully why he has come into this gorgeous place where such things are exhibited, how can they bear to waste those hours—contemplating those inanities, and how can they even prefer them to the vastly more interesting sights that any glimpse of street or landscape or sky might afford? Again, take the address of Dr. W. F. Crafts, Superintendent, International Reform Bureau, of Washington, D. C., last February, before the District Commissioner. He says in part: "I do not ask autocratic exclusion of films, but only such suppression as government gives to all other great financial interests—railroads, banks, packers, and the like. As we do not leave it to the packers to inspect their bad beef * * so we should not allow the film producers to handle the bad pictures. * * The motion-picture interests alone of the great financial interests with which it claims rank, have fought all government regulation, whether by city, state or nation." Not only is the above true, but this interest is following the methods of the old saloon gang. It claims to have defeated a mayor who was in favor of censorship; that it interviews men who are candidates for office; that it has muzzled newspapers with the threat of decreased advertising space.

Finally, let us take the statement of Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, that the child makes no discrimination for itself in the impressions that it receives; that the first impressions are the growing impressions and are the basis of all the others, that a child tends to do and be the thing that has been impressed upon it. Since this is true, we have no time to waste, either in keeping the little ones away from the evil, or doing away with the evil. Read her further statement of the survey that she made: "Three hundred and eighty-eight films revealed the following: married intrigue or unfaithfulness, 107; divorce, 36; immodest dress, 163; social or individual drinking, 133; indecent cabaret dancing, 89; interior of houses of ill-fame, gambling halls, etc., 119; undue freedom of contact between sexes, 184; smoking by girls and women, 78; realistic struggle of girls or women to defend honor, 169; tense nerve-racking situations, 218; number of films free from objections, 35." Truly, this is a sad commentary on the picture-show.

The popular scenario is illogical in sequence and unpsychological in principle. The heroine is always gorgeously arrayed; too lofty in the eyes of the hero to seem of common clay; superbly built, and cleverly designed—a creature for other realms, with servants agog. The poor fish of a fellow who brings his girl there too often has transferred such scenes into their lives, and in their re-enactment she soon becomes aware that her "Dear Charley" has failed to become the hero that she thought would refuse to see her soil her hands or contaminate her esthetic desires by work. Then she becomes aware that the whole thing has gone to a frazzle. Here is a picture of it: One day Charlie lies him up to his office and leaves his Gwendoline to confront the unwashed dishes alone. It all dawns upon her as a huge surprise as the grind of life fatally and unmistakably begins to set its wheels in motion. No, of course not, she never was meant to pull this kind of stuff, it is not what the pictures sold. The easiest way out is a cry, a little affected martyrdom, and then the divorce mill begins to grind.

The moving picture is here to stay. No other agency possesses such a potent influence in the education of our race, either for righteousness or for criminality. We must take hold of this agency—every right-thinking man and woman must realize our great danger. This means of entertainment and education belongs to all men and must be preserved as an instrument for the elevation of our children and not their degradation. There should be a movement begun, to terminate finally under the auspices of the State Board of Education, which should devise some plan by which every high school in the State, and lesser schools where practicable, should be used as a common center of education equipped with its moving-picture apparatus. It could be so managed as to be made to pay for itself.

As a part of the educational program of our great public school system the moving picture could be used to the greatest advantage in developing the pure, innocent life of our children. There are thousands of splendid subjects that pertain to all our life and history, and to the love and problem stories of the future, besides the subjects of international interest.

It would not take long for a system of this kind to impress upon some sordid producers the impossibility of their self-appointed task.

GREAT STRENGTH IN TINY BODIES.

Probably the most wonderful feature of a mosquito is its muscularity. This may seem a ludicrous statement, but a great surprise awaits anyone who for the first time examines one of these insects under a glass. Size for size, a mosquito's wing-muscles are equal to an eagle's. Even on a calm day, a mosquito can fly forty or fifty miles without a halt; and with a helping mind, three times this distance! The ordinary housefly, too, has astonishing wing strength; tests have shown that when it desires really to hurry it can "dash" 160 feet in a second—110 miles an hour straight away.

Imagine a man who could lift 73,800 pounds! He would have all known "strong men" of past and present beaten so far that comparisons would be ridiculous. But that is what our average man could lift were he as strong in proportion to his size as a crab; a weight 490 times its own is just a good average lift for a crab! The muscles of a large oyster, too, will support a weight of thirty-seven pounds.

A Belgian scientist found that a bee, weight for weight, was thirty times as strong as a horse. It has been found that an ordinary house-fly can lift a match-stick, and that in doing so it exerts as much power in proportion to its size as a man uses when he holds aloft on his feet a beam fourteen feet long by thirty inches square. Even a very small bug can drag six matches—the equivalent to a man's pulling 330 beams as large as himself.

Spiders sometimes exhibit wonderful strength, especially in conflict. There is a spider in Java that is the dread of all other insects; and it makes a web that can hardly be cut with a knife! With spiders, size is not always a measure of strength, but this fellow has both bulk and power.

One writer states that an ordinary ant can carry ten times its own weight. Personally, I have seen them do far more than this.—L. E. Eubanks in Our Dumb Animals.

The Home Circle

OBEDIENT JACK.

Jack was a great big Scotch collie who was very fond of children; and when his mistress, Jamie and Janet's mother, found that he could be trusted to go with her boy and girl to school every day she was very glad, for father had to go to his office so early that he could not go with them.

When the three, Jamie, Janet and Jack, returned from school at noon (for Jack always went for them at 12 o'clock), mother would give Jack his dinner as soon as they arrived; and then she would pat him on the head and say, "Good old dog." Jack would wag his tail and give a pleased bark.

The teacher knew Jack's bark; and if the children were kept in and he did not see them with the others, he would go around to the window where they sat and bark and bark, and she would say: "A little late to-day, Jack. Be patient." He never came until school was out, although I think he would have enjoyed coming at recess and romping with the scholars.

When the town clock struck 12 mother would say, "Go to school, Jack," and off he would run.

One day mother was talking to a friend in the sitting room and she was telling the friend what a good dog Jack was, and she said: "I just say, 'Go to school, Jack,' and off he goes."

Now, the friend was a little deaf, so she had to repeat it several times, but she did not notice that Jack was just outside wagging his tail. After her friend had gone, mother went into the kitchen to make a pie. Passing through the hall, she saw that it was only 11 o'clock, so she knew she had plenty of time. She was just putting the pie into the oven when she heard children's voices, and there at the gate stood Jamie and Janet and Jack.

"Why, children!" mother exclaimed, "What are you doing here? It is only half-past eleven."

"Oh, mother," they answered in the same breath, "Jack came and barked under the window, and Miss Morse said we might go home."

"Where was Miss Jenkins, your regular teacher?"

"She is sick," said the children, "and we told Miss Morse that you always sent Jack when it was time for us to go home."

"Well, well!" said the mother. "But what made Jack go for you? I did not send him."

Here Jack looked up at her so wistfully that she had not the heart to speak sternly to him.

Then suddenly, as she stood there looking at the trio, who were as much surprised as she herself, mother remembered her deaf friend and how she had told her about Jack and had had to repeat it.

"It's all right, children," she said, laughing. "Mrs. Burke was here, and I told her how I sent Jack to school for you; and I had to say it so loud that Jack must have heard me say, 'I just say, 'Go to school, Jack,' and thought I was talking to him, for he was evidently out on the porch.'"

Then they all laughed heartily, and Jack had his dinner a little earlier than usual; and he enjoyed it as much as Jamie and Janet enjoyed the cranberry tarts mother had made for them. And when they went back to school in the afternoon and told their little friends about Jack, he became more of a pet than ever; and the teacher said she wished that little boys and girls could be as quick to obey their parents and teachers as Jack had been, for though he did not see his mistress, he obeyed her voice right away.—Julia Graydon, in Pittsburgh Advocate.

A POUND PARTY.

"I didn't know it would be so much fun," laughed Tommy as he looked up at the High School boy by whose side he was proudly walking.

"Almost like a Hallowe'en frolic," replied the big boy, who appeared to have been having a pretty good time himself.

These two had just left a group of school girls and boys who had been "pounding" an old couple who lived on the outskirts of the town.

How could pounding an old man and an old woman be fun? It was not the sort of a pounding you have in mind.

The school pupils of the Mooresville Junior American Red Cross had discovered a man and his wife living in great poverty and had decided that each Junior should bring to school a pound of something to eat or to wear and when all of the "pounds" were assembled that they should deliver them to the needy couple.

The High School Juniors were given charge of the work and supervised the collection of the food and clothing in the grade schools. Then came the afternoon when they surprised the old people with their great pile of gifts. Tommy and the High School boy had been members of the committee that brought happiness into the little cottage.

Tommy said it had been great fun and the High School boy agreed with him.—Exchange.

THE ELEPHANT'S FOOT.

The elephant is a good traveler. On level ground, says Mr. Carl Akeley in the World's Work, a fast horse can outrun him, but on rough ground he would leave the horse behind. Moreover, there are few animals that can cover more ground in a day than an elephant; and in spite of his size he can turn with astonishing agility and move through the forest as quickly as a rabbit.

The elephant's foot, on which he moves so quickly and softly, is very remarkable. It is incased in a bag-like skin with a heavy padded bottom that has some of the characteristics of an anti-skid tire. An elephant walks on his toes, which form the front part of his foot. The bones of his foot run not only back but up; and underneath at the back of the foot is a gelatin-like substance that is a more effective shock absorber than rubber heels. One of the curious things about the foot is that it swells when the weight is on it, and contracts when the weight is removed; an elephant may sink four feet into a swamp, but the minute he begins to lift his legs his feet will contract and come out of the hole without suction.—The Youth's Companion.

BATS.

Scientific men believe that they have found out how bats, flying about in the darkness, avoid objects that they cannot see, and they are trying to contrive instruments that will enable aviators to do the same thing. The theory is that the little animals emit a high-pitched note, often inaudible to the human ear, which echoes back from surrounding objects and in that way in which direction every obstacle to their flight is to be found. The experiment was tried with bottled bats in a room crisscrossed with wires and furnished with small holes in the walls just enough for a bat to fly through. The bats flew about with perfect unconcern, never hit a wire and passed back and forth through the holes at will.—The Youth's Companion.

A MISCHIEVOUS ILLUSION.

"It is a mischievous illusion, spreading seriously to-day among many Christians—a fiction fostered in about equal parts by fanaticism, ignorance, cowardice, and mental inertia—the notion that present-day churches are afflicted with some awful plague of heresy which is destroying the gospel of Jesus Christ. The reality of the case is that the full divine truth of the mission and power of Jesus Christ has a profounder grip on the ministry and laity of all churches—much profounder—than twenty-five years ago. The evangelical trend of thought in America is growing stronger every year. The objection of so many Christians to the contrary is a pitiful deception."—The Continent.

INCIPIENT KNOWLEDGE.

That the royal road to learning is full of strange pitfalls is shown by some of the definitions and statements given by school children—some of whom are well along the way. The following are bona fide samples coming under the knowledge of one teacher:

About this time Columbus was cursing around among the West Indies.

Jackson's campaign in the Valley was the greatest piece of millinery work ever known.

The Valkyrie were the Chlovers of the Slain, and the Valhalla the Haulers of the Slain.

The eldest son of the king of France is called the Dolphin.

The Duke of Clarence, according to his usual custom, was killed in battle.

Heathens are parazens (pazins) that wash up idle things.

The Indians call their women squabs.

THE LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The seventy-sixth annual session of the Louisiana Conference will convene in the First Methodist Church at Alexandria, La., next Wednesday, November 9, Bishop W. F. McMurtry presiding. There is every reason to believe that this annual gathering of the Methodist ministers and laymen of the State will be a pleasant and profitable one. In spite of the difficulties that have had to be faced during the year on account of the widespread financial depression, indications now are that this has been a year of reasonable material prosperity, while the reports of the ingathering of members during the revival meetings and through the regular services of the church point to an encouraging spiritual growth.

All the members of the Conference may look forward to a most generous and delightful hospitality. Alexandria is one of the most substantial and progressive cities of the State, and its citizens are always ready to do their part in helping forward movements that are for the general welfare. Methodism is strong in the city, some of the most representative citizens being officially and actively identified with the State-wide and connectional interests of the church. The presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., though young in his office, has proved himself an efficient administrator and a most brotherly official, and it goes without saying that he will add his efforts to those of the pastor, Dr. S. H. Werlein, to make the visitors feel at home. Dr. Werlein is one of the outstanding men of the Conference, known throughout the connection as one of our ablest preachers. His reported transfer to the Los Angeles Conference will take from the Louisiana Conference a native son who has made a notable record in its leading appointments, but it will give to the work in the West a man who will be a strong addition to the forces in that important field.

The Conference will feel the absence of two of its members who have always had an important part in its proceedings—Dr. J. M. Henry, recently advanced to the Church Triumphant, and Dr. F. S. Parker, now in the Orient on a mission for the church. Both will be present in spirit, however, and they will hold a high place in the affection of their brethren.

A full account of the proceedings of the Conference will appear in the issue of the Advocate immediately following the adjournment of the Conference.

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

Dr. A. J. Weeks, editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, in his notes of the recent session of the Northwest Texas Conference has the following to say: "Fourteen men were admitted on trial, but unfortunately a number of these had to be admitted by a two-thirds vote because they could not meet the educational requirements. Of course it is altogether possible that the men who are brought into the Conference under this rule may do efficient work, but it is certain that a Conference that admits a large proportion of its candidates for the ministry without proper educational equipment does so, at a very grave risk. The church that does not furnish a ministry with fair training cannot meet the demands of this day, and the sooner that fact is recognized the better it will be for the church. Provision ought to be made for the proper training of preachers, and then the demand that they secure this training ought to be so insistent that it cannot be evaded."

In our own opinion, the cases where the benefit of the two-thirds rule should be invoked are few and far between. They will occur now and then, but, in the great majority of cases the applicant should be made to meet the requirements of our liberal regulations. This is an important matter, to which many of our Conferences seem not yet to have given sufficient attention.

THE OCTOBER REVIEW.

The October number of the Methodist Quarterly Review is especially interesting because it is the first issue of this historic periodical under the editorial supervision of Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe, the successor of the lamented Dr. Frank M. Thomas in the office of Book Editor and Editor of the Review. It is evident that the high standard of the Review will be maintained under its new editor, the following table of contents furnishing a most appealing bill of fare to those who are capable of enjoying a diet more substantial than is furnished by the daily newspapers and other evanescent forms of literature: "Frank Morehead Thomas," by Bishop Collins Denny; "Rudolph Hermann Lotze: 'The Man' and the Philosopher," by George Trumbull Ladd; "Good and Evil—Their Relation to God and the World," by William Ivey Cranford; "St. Augustine and the Problem of Evil," by Nolan B. Harmon, Jr.; "The Larger Orthodoxy," by William Harrison; "Can We Express Theology in Terms of Life," by Dwight Mallory Pratt; "An Estimate of Moses," by Thomas Whitehead Murrell; "The New Statecraft," by John Witt Hendrix; "Bret Harte in California," by William H. Nelson; "Sunday Legislation," by Robert M. Arnold; "Baptism vs. Immersion," by James A. Anderson. In addition, the usual departments of Exegesis, Editor's Table, and Book Reviews furnish much that is interesting and stimulating.

The editor's salutary, under the caption, "The Outlook for the Review," is thoroughly appropriate and happily phrased. It is not one of the least of the merits of the new editor that he has a sense of humor, which will impart the vital element of human interest to his discussions of fundamental questions. His tribute to his assistant, Mr. Curtis B. Haley, is as gracious as it is deserved.

We join with Dr. Rowe in the hope that the circulation of the Review will soon reach the goal of ten thousand copies—it deserves to do so. It may be ordered of Smith and Lamar, Agents, Nashville, Tenn., Dallas, Tex., or Richmond, Va., at two dollars a year, or fifty cents a copy.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Sixteenth International Sunday School Association will be held in Convention Hall, Kansas City, Mo., June 21-27, 1922.

Dr. S. A. Steel, the "Knight of the Pelican Pines," is delivering a series of lectures in Government Street Church, Mobile, Ala., this week.

A recent number of the Daily Leader, of Ruston, La., contains a beautiful tribute by Rev. Robert W. Vaughan to his friend, the late Dr. J. M. Henry.

Dr. C. W. Crisler, pastor of the Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., occupies the high position of district governor of the Kiwanis Clubs of Mississippi and Louisiana.

Our church at Kosciusko, Miss., has recently suffered a great loss in the death of Dr. C. F. Carnes, a prominent physician of the community and a steward in the Methodist church.

According to reports in the secular press, Dr. Knickerbocker, the famous pastor of our church at Wichita Falls, Texas, is assisting Rev. T. M. Brownlee in a meeting at Starkville, Miss.

The union Thanksgiving services at Shreveport, La., will be held this year at Noel Memorial Church, the sermon being preached by Rev. Claude L. Jones, pastor of the First Christian Church.

A "Civic Drive" for Centenary College was recently put on in Shreveport, La. On October 25 the amount secured was $125,000, with every prospect that the goal of $200,000 would be reached.

At the recent session of the West Texas Conference, Rev. A. I. Townsley, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, but who served the Alamo Heights Church, San Antonio, last year, was appointed to the Columbus and Glidden charge, Austin District.

Dr. W. W. Pinson, General Secretary of the Board of Missions, requests us to state that suitable material for the Lambuth memorial service on November 13 can be had, without charge, on application to J. S. Chadwick, Centenary Office, Nashville, Tenn. The time is short and this material should be ordered at once.

The State Fair at Shreveport, La., affected the attendance at the Sunday schools in Shreveport, La., last Sunday, but the following are the figures in the contest between Noel Memorial and Queensborough and Texas Avenue: Noel Memorial, 418; Queensborough and Texas Avenue, 384 (Queensborough, 198, Texas Avenue, 186).

The Methodism of Crystal Springs, Miss., as well as the community, has suffered a great loss in the recent death of Dr. R. E. Jones. He was one of the best known physicians in the State, and for forty-seven years had practiced his profession in Crystal Springs. His noble wife preceded him to the better land by about three weeks.

A good meeting was brought to a close in our church at Ellisville, Miss., last Friday night, in which the pastor, Rev. H. J. Moore, was assisted by Rev. W. M. Williams, of Purvis, Miss. There were nine accessions to the church—seven on profession of faith. The sermon by Brother Williams on Sunday night of the meeting on "Christian Citizenship" made a profound impression upon the community.

Rev. R. T. Hollingsworth, pastor of the Lintonla charge, Mississippi Conference, requests us to announce that the fourth quarterly conference will be held at Bethany Church on Sunday, November 6. There will be two services, Mr. H. L. Clark speaking at 11 o'clock, and Rev. M. L. Burton preaching at 2 o'clock. The Millsaps College Quartet will sing, and there will be other special music. FIFTH SESSION OF THE ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE.

By Rev. I. W. Cooper, D.D.

Of the five Conferences which have been held since September, 1881, three have been held in London, one in Washington City and one in Toronto. It is understood that the next one will be in America. There are many changes in ten years, hence there are many new faces at each Conference, but the same spirit of unity and of love for Methodism.

The opening sermon was preached in City Roads Chapel at 6 p.m., September the sixth, by Dr. S. P. Rose, of Montreal, Canada. The deliverance was one worthy of the occasion. The text was from the words of Jesus, "Behold, I make all things new." Dr. Rose is a professor in Wesleyan College, Montreal. He is a man of seventy or more but preached with vigor and power a sermon which was spiritual, thoughtful and quite up to date and liberal in the way it touched present-day questions.

All the other sessions of the Conference were held in Central Hall, Westminster, which is the largest Methodist church in the city, a building which cost English Methodists one million dollars and will seat four thousand persons. But before we leave the subject of City Roads Chapel, we wish to tell you something of its history. It is often called the Mecca of Methodism because of its inseparable connection with our great founder, John Wesley. He helped to raise the money to build it, laid its corner-stone and was for years its pastor. By the side of it is the Wesley home; in front of it is Bunhill Cemetery, where sleep Susannah Wesley, John Bunyan, Isaac Watts, Daniel Defoe and many others of note. Nearby is the grave of George Fox, founder of the Quakers. In the rear of the chapel we find the tombs of John Wesley, Adam Clarke, Richard Watson and Joseph Benson. Truly this is "holy ground!" The early Methodists thought so much of the sanctity of the place that many wished to lie near Wesley and; to our surprise, we found that several ministers and one of his sisters were buried in the same grave with Wesley. The Chapel itself has in its gifts in marble columns, tablets, wood-carvings and stained glass windows from Methodists all over the world. It is a church which can not fail to claim the loving interest of every one of our faith. For these reasons, and because all the sessions of the Ecumenical Conferences of 1881 and 1901 were held at City Roads Chapel, it was eminently appropriate that the first service of this Conference should be held there. Central Hall was, however, the logical place for this Conference to be held because of its size and its convenient location.

The purpose and therefore the order of procedure in Ecumenical Conference is quite different from that of our General and our Annual Conferences. Here, the chief object was to create sentiment and to awaken enthusiasm, so the program consisted of prepared addresses, essays and speeches and an hour a day of impromptu speaking and debate from "members on the floor." These hours, by the way, often proved more wide-awake than some of the more formal ones. The morning sessions were rather long—from 9:45 to 1:15. The afternoon sessions were from 2:45 to 5:45. The evening sessions began at 7 and usually closed at 9. The ten branches of Methodism represented in the Conference were given space on the program according to the number of delegates sent.

The personnel of the various delegations was quite interesting. At least seven-eighths of the delegates were men of over fifty-five—men who had grown gray in the service of the church. Europe always honors faithful service—both in state and in church. Missionaries from foreign fields and men of other races than ours were members of the delegation. The only noticeable difference in manner of dress was with the Wesleyan Methodists, some of whom dressed like the priests of the church of England. About two dozen women were members of the Conference, most of whom were there with their husbands and were appointed after they reached London. Five hundred and fifty delegates were due, most of whom reported.

The usual order of exercises was first a devotional service, then an essay on the topic of the session, followed by two addresses which in their turn were followed by another essay and its two addresses. Usually three or four hymns were interspersed with this type of program. We find that our English brethren are great lovers of sacred music. Their hymns are beautiful and dignified and every stanza is sung—sometimes as many as nine or ten stanzas to the hymn. The entire congregation joins in the singing. We find that another admirable trait of English Methodists is that they are very reverent. They rarely ever speak after entering the house of God.

Among the most interesting messages read to the Conference at its first session were greetings and words of welcome from King George and Lord George, Prime Minister.

After the devotional services the first morning, the Lord's Supper was celebrated. It was a solemn and gracious occasion.

The first topic for the consideration of the Conference was: Ten Years' Retrospect of Methodism. Interesting statistics were given showing the wonderful growth of Methodism during the past decade. An optimistic note was sounded in essays and addresses.

The third day the following topics were so ably discussed that the subjects did not seem abstract:

The Supreme Authority of Jesus Christ as Savior.

The Authority of the Bible.

The Authority of the Indwelling Spirit.

Christian Doctrine in Relation to Present Thought.

Modern Biblical Criticism.

The Bible and Experience.

Evangelical Authority in the Light of Experience and Philosophy.

Most interesting impromptu debating was provoked by the subject of Modern Biblical Criticism.

The fourth day was given to the subject of Christian Unity. It was announced that the Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists of Canada have already voted to unite and it was prophesied that all Methodists in England would unite in the near future.

The fifth day was given to Foreign Missionary Problems.

Sunday was the sixth day and the Conference sermon was delivered by Rev. D. G. Downey, LL.D., of New York. A great many members of the Conference were sent out to the various Methodist churches of London and vicinity to preach.

The topic for the seventh day was The Church and the Peace of the World. The evening of this day was given to speeches from the fraternal delegates. Addresses were delivered by Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield, Lord Bishop of Chalmersford, Dr. Gillie, of the Presbyterian Church, and Dr. Cadman, of New York. It is interesting to note that both the Lord Bishop and Dr. Cadman were, in early life, members of the Wesleyan Church. All these gentlemen gave masterly addresses.

The eighth day was given to Woman's Work. One of the speakers on this program was Miss Daisy Davies of our own Southern Methodism. She read an excellent paper.

The attitude of people toward religion was the subject of the ninth day's program.

The tenth day's topic was: Christ and the Social Order.

The eleventh and last day of the Conference was given to the Church and Modern Industrial Problems. In many ways this was one of the most helpful discussions of the Conference.

I cannot close this paper without mentioning the social courtesies our British brethren extended to all the delegates of the Conference. I have said "brethren," but the ladies of Central Hall did more than their part by providing each day at Westminster College, nearby, an excellent luncheon.

The second day of the Conference a general reception was given the delegates in Central Hall. Several days later the Methodist women of London extended a similar courtesy to the lady delegates. The evening of the eighth day a very elegant banquet was given to the delegates at the Cecil Hotel. More than seven hundred guests filled the two dining halls. Last, but not least, Sir Robert Perks opened his beautiful home for a reception to all members of the Conference. Sir Robert, by the way, is the son of a Methodist minister and knows how to give a Methodist welcome.

To have been a member of this Conference was indeed a rare privilege and this delegate is very grateful to his church for the spiritual, intellectual and social advantages which it gave.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Dr. John A. Rice, gentleman, scholar, and minister, has been the occasion of much stir and flurry in ecclesiastical circles during these latter days. If we may credit the secular press report, one of the Texas Conferences passed resolutions condemnatory or denunciatory, and our genial friend, no doubt feeling he had no place among them, withdrew from his chair in the S. M. W. Seilah. I have not read Dr. Rice's book on the Old Testament, but I will venture this remark: if he is more heretical, rationalistic, modern or advanced in his interpretation of the O. T. than some of the current writings of our times, he must be going some. And nobody seems disposed to put other interpreters out of the synagogue; why land on Rice?

The Bible, my friend, is a library. It is not like the fabled Ethiopian Diana dropped out of heaven all at once. Its writings cover ages—ages of ignorance and superstition, during which the immature minds of men were groping after God. There is something of everything in the Bible. You say you believe it all. Well, if you can swallow some of the sensualism and gross materialism contained in the Book of Ecclesiastes you are a better Epicurean philosopher than I am. Your literalist always falls down, and not infrequently it is because he has not sense enough to stand up.

Only the truth can save a man and a man must be honest with himself and his own conviction of truth to be saved. Councils and edicts of same, authorities ecclesiastical, backed by powers civil, have fondly imagined they were the blessed potentates and divinely ordained keepers of the truth, and have sown fields with blood and reaped harvests of untold human woe. The truth is abundantly able to take care of itself. Paul told us that long ago.

I know full well the old Book contains the greatest lessons of life, truth and righteousness contained in all the wide reach of literature, human or divine. I know that its deathless ethical principles are the only secure foundations upon which human relations in the home, in the church or State can be founded. I know that Jesus, the great Master of human destiny, blazes a trail of glorious promises throughout the prophetic utterances of the Old Testament, and that the humble, believing Christian heart realizes these prophecies fulfilled and met by faith in Him. If a man wants to believe Samson is a sun myth, or Jonah a parable or fable, he does not shake my faith. I am holding to the essentials and let the heathen rage and the people imagine vain things. Only this in conclusion: Don't be too rash and pull down the house in which you are living. You need a shelter when the storm breaks.

Mrs. PARLEE GOODMAN was born January 20, 1854, and died October 5, 1921, on the train between Summit and Johnston Station. Grandma was a devoted Christian, always trusting God for all things. She had had much trouble and sorrow, having buried her husband when her children were quite small. She managed to rear and educate them with the labor of her own hands. While living in Jackson for a number of years, she had to give up a son, but she only said, "God's will be done," and trusted in him. She had three married daughters, with one of whom Mrs. Walter Dutt, she lived. They lived in Brookhaven for several years, where they have a number of sorrowing friends now. They moved to Bogalusa, where Grandma lived a happy Christian life. Her pastor there, Brother McCain, now of Hammond, La., was her constant talk when religion was being spoken of in her presence. She always said that she wanted him to preach at her funeral, and had selected her favorite song, "Shall ter Me." Grandma moved to McDonb with her daughter, Mrs. Dutt. She lived on Cherry Street in East Mo-Comb for over seven years. She was a mother to all near her in time of trouble. May God in his infinite mercy show to her loved ones that His will is for the best. The great shock was nearly more than they could stand, her leaving home just a few minutes before, seeming very well and taking the train for Jackson, where she was carrying flowers to her daughter's grave and to visit relatives. She also leaves one sister, many relatives, and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

A TRUE FRIEND

It was at twelve o'clock of May 22, 1921, that the death angel claimed the body of Mrs. BERTHA WOOLEY (nee Porter), wife of Stonewall Wooley. She leaves a husband, five children, a large number of relatives, besides a host of friends. Mrs. Wooley was born May 16, 1875. She united with the Missionary Baptist Church at the age of 17. Those who lived closest to her life, say that her professions were real to her, and her experience of salvation was daily demonstrated in her life. It is comforting how such a life and character will stand the test, for just before passing away she gave the testimony that there was not a cloud in her sky. No fears were haunting her, but a calm serenity was hers even down through the dark valley. Her illness was stretched out over seven long years. Throughout this severe suffering she was patient, saying that she was only waiting for the time when God should call her home. There was never a more tender, thoughtful mother. She trained them carefully, and that training is now reflected in her splendid sons and daughters. In her sphere, her influence is unbounded, and lives on forever. She is greatly missed in the home, church and community. May we all emulate her, and some day all be joined in the Heavenly Land.

Resolutions on the Death of Mrs. M. E. Featherston.

The Coldwater Missionary Society suffered an irreparable loss in the going away of our beloved co-worker, Mrs. M. E. Featherston. For years she gave to her Master the first place in her heart, thoughts, service and interest. While for months she has been unable to be actively engaged in the work of her beloved church, her zeal never abated and her interest was untiring. As the infirmities of age encroached upon her, her faith in the promises of her Lord increased, and her implicit trust was beautiful and inspiring to those who were privileged to know her intimately. To her pastors, loved ones and friends, she was a great inspiration and her daily life exemplified the words of Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Therefore be it resolved:

First—That we, the members of the Missionary Society, extend to her loved ones our love and sympathy, and pray that her mantle may fall upon her devoted niece and she may be in the Master's service just what "Auntie" has been.

Second—That her unswerving love, her untiring devotion and patient submission to God's will be emulated by her co-workers.

Third—That while we shall miss her sorely, we thank God for her life, and the influence she exerted here, and the privilege that is ours to join her in realms above.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be sent the family, another be spread upon the minutes of our Society, and one sent the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. M. E. Veazey, Mrs. P. T. Callicott, Mrs. C. L. Graham, Committee.

Resolutions on the Death of Mrs. George L. Regan.

Whereas God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved member and co-worker, Mrs. Georgia Lomax Regan, and while we bow in humble submission to His will, yet we deplore the loss of one whose lovable character and kindly disposition made her generally beloved. Therefore, be it Resolved, That in her death, The Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, at Belzoni, Miss., has lost a member whose character as a devout Christian contributed greatly to its strength and growth.

Resolved, That in her death we feel keenly the loss of Mrs. Regan.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her sorrowing family and a copy be spread on the minutes of this Society.

FROM PONCHATOU LA, LA.

Dear Advocate: We are thankful to state Methodism in our little city is moving along very nicely. We hope to say, "all in full, Bishop," at Conference. We are behind some, but our stewards are hopeful of a full report. We have received 32 members this year; and have had our share of weddings and baptisms. I am in reasonably good health and have done a hard year's work, although the results are not satisfactory to us.

Our youngest son, W. J., better known to our Conference brethren as Willie, has been very ill at his home in Birmingham, Ala., with some kind of heart trouble caused by other complications. His mother went to his bedside on September 9, and remained there until he was able to come home with her. After some recuperation he went back to Birmingham for an operation. His physician says he is now on the way to a speedy recovery, for which we thank God.

We were pleasantly surprised on October 12 (which was our 20th wedding anniversary) by our members' giving us an aluminum shower, also a wedding dinner, such as baked hen, cake, pies, salad, jelly and fruit.

I have served here only two years, so my removal has not been decreed by the Bishop. If any of the brethren are to celebrate their 20th anniversary next year, they had better see the Bishop in advance.

Hope to see you all at Alexandria.

Fraternally,

A. J. COBURN.

"THE GEORGE WILLIAMS I KNEW."

Under this title Hon. John Wana-maker gives in Association Men for October a charming sketch of a lifelong friendship and fellowship with the founder of the Y. M. C. A. We quote the description of his visit to the little room where the Association was born:

My intimate acquaintance with George Williams, merchant of London, began in 1871. I met George Williams first in his office of the store in St. Paul's Churchyard downtown in Old London. The little man who founded the Young Men's Christian Association walked me up three staircases to a small room in his warehouse and set me down at a table saying, "Here's where the Young Men's Christian Association was born."

A large business was in active operation downstairs, but the active chief of the ancient firm of Hitchcock, Williams & Co. seemed obsessed or possessed with an all-absorbing spirit of consecration to something greater than the wholesale and retail dry goods business. His big heart and little bright eyes saw and felt the vision of a world-wide undenominational Christian organization of its young men.

Then and there he sat, unfolding to me the story of his life from boyhood, his joy in the birth of the Young Men's Christian Association, and his belief that it would spread the world around, if its leaders labored and followed the ways that the Divine Ruler would open to us if we were "true to the faith."

That little eight by ten upper story room has always seemed to me somewhat like the Mount of Transfiguration—the Spirit of God that day shone in the face and form of that little man, God's faithful child, as he saw and fore-shadowed the glorification of his Master, the Lord Jesus Christ. It was profoundly evident that George Williams' heart had no corners in it, and that his Master filled it all.

FROM THE HARPERVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: I am tempted to write you in regard to our status as a charge. Brother G. G. Yeager, our pastor, has proved himself both a capable and faithful servant, and has been the means of enlarged fields of worth and patient endurance. The charge consists of 8 or 10 churches, some of them lately organized or reclaimed where they had succumbed to neglect. Some of these places were brought back with an added number of large proportions.

Brother Yeager held all of his meetings save one. Many churches requested him to do this, and gave as a reason financial depression, and we have found him equal to all this laborious season of revival work. Surely the laborer is worthy of his hire in material things, and the plaudits, "Well done, good and faithful servant." That a crown of righteousness with many stars shall be his in the beautiful Home Beyond, is the earnest hope and prayer of his members.

A MEMBER.

FROM GREENSBURG, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed our fourth revival meeting last Sunday, October 23, here at Greensburg, with a good degree of success—12 additions to the church of young people and children. Brother W. D. Kleinschmidt, of New Orleans, did the preaching to the satisfaction of our people and the pastor. God honored his Word as it was presented by this preacher of his gospel.

The other meetings were held by the pastor and Brothers L. N. Hoffpauir and J. Wilson Brown, and I am sure much good was accomplished in the work of the Kingdom. Brother Hoffpauir was hindered a great deal on account of death in his congregation, and other things that drew him away. His preaching was of a high order and was very much appreciated by our people.

I am more and more convinced that we should have a Conference evangelist in our Conference to assist us in our revival work. The prospects have been a little gloomy for our closing up of the Conference year's work, but we now see a little clearer for a better closing.

We are closing the four years of our pastorate on the Greensburg charge, the first four-year term of one pastor since Brother J. P. Haney, fourteen years ago, who has gone to his blessed reward and whose body awaits the coming of his Lord in the Greensburg cemetery. He has three daughters living here.

We leave some very choice people here who will welcome our successor.

Yours in Christian love,

L. E. CROOKS, P. C.

"He Fixed My Destiny in Life."

Thus said Thomas Jefferson of William Small—his teacher. It was tribute enough for any man—to have made the great Jefferson what he was. Unknown and obscure—unrewarded by either pelf or plaudits—William Small made an invaluable contribution to the world.

Teachers stand next to Mothers as moulders of character. How important, then, that they be full of wisdom, enthusiasm, and faith.

In some institutions of higher learning there are teachers who deaden faith rather than inspire it. Doubting and denying God, they are more of a menace than a help to budding manhood and womanhood.

But in the colleges of the Church all the instructors are Christian. More than 99 per cent of them are members of the Church. More than 70 per cent are Methodists. More than 65 per cent are in some form of Christian service outside the class room.

No wonder that 85 per cent of all the students are themselves sincere Christians.

The Christian Education Movement stands pledged to make our institutions Christian to the core, to provide a larger number of consecrated teachers, to bring all our youth under their influence, to maintain the finest and most deeply spiritual system of colleges in America.

Will you not support this holy objective by paying the Christian Education Pledge immediately? It means life or death to many of the schools and colleges of the Church.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

As long as we teach the whole Bible to all the people we shall never need to spend time in defending any part of it. Teach its precepts and God will do the rest.

To-day we have not room enough in our church buildings to care for the people already members of our church, much the less the thousands of others for whom we are responsible. We have only 78 church buildings in the Conference that have more than one room, and not one of this number is properly constructed for teaching religion. This is no time to halt or to turn backward, but every man ought to do his utmost to get the Centenary pledges paid in full that we may build up the waste places at home and extend our line on the foreign field.

It is easy to go the way of least resistance; but to go against ignorance, selfishness, and all manner of worldliness requires as much sacrifice and devotion as it did in the days of Paul. To take up the cross and follow Christ may cost position and popularity, but in the end no cross-bearer ever suffered the loss of things that are eternal.

When the leaders in the local churches place the estimate upon childhood that it deserves, the leaders will do something toward training teachers for the purpose of directing childhood. Enough has been done already to show the good that can be accomplished by intelligent teaching. The Sunday School Board is ready to lend all help necessary to give helpful training to teachers and other workers.

Our New Sunday School Papers.

Sunday school leaders of all denominations are giving special emphasis to work for the teen-age boys and girls and for young people. Since it has been found out that more than sixty per cent of Sunday school pupils drop out soon after passing the Junior department, earnest efforts are being made to stop this serious leakage by making the Sunday school a more vitally effective agency in meeting the needs of the young at this period of their development. One of the means through which the various denominations are seeking to accomplish this is by the publication of adapted Sunday school papers, which will not only supply wholesome and stimulating reading matter, but promote class organization and all types of religious activities.

Dr. E. B. Chappell, Sunday School Editor and General Secretary, has given much time and thought to this matter and after earnest and prayerful consideration, our Sunday School Editor and the Publishing Agents have decided to issue a series of papers, one for boys from 10 to 17; one for girls from 10 to 17; and one for young men and women between the ages of 18 and 24. Dr. Chappell says that the recent rapid development of our Sunday school work makes it impossible for a single periodical to longer meet the needs of the whole Sunday school and that this forward step, which has been in contemplation for some time, is in line with the policy of other denominations to provide suitable literature for the various stages of young life in the Sunday school.

Beginning January 1, therefore, the following periodicals will be issued: "The Haversack" for boys from 10 to 17; "The Torchbearer" for girls from 10 to 17; and "The Young People" for boys and girls over seventeen. The new publications will be eight-page, illustrated weeklies suited to the tastes and needs of those for whom they were designed. It is important that all Sunday school superintendents place their orders for the new papers at once, so that there may be no lapse in the service when the present publication, "The Visitor," is discontinued.

FROM DUBACH, LA.

Dear Advocate: The work is progressing satisfactorily. Brother K. W. Dodson has made us a good elder and we are anxious for his return. He has been on the job all the time and has made a fine impression on the preachers and membership of the district.

At Dubach next Sunday the Bernice and Dubach Sunday school rally will convene for its third session. Dinner will be served in the basement of the church. Come up and get a "square meal."

Very truly,
J. A. McCORMACK.

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas Almighty God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to take from us our beloved pastor, Rev. D. C. Foust, we do hereby in quarterly conference vote an expression of appreciation of his labors of love among us, and pray that the fruits of his life's work may be gained in the years to come. We further express to his bereaved wife and family our profound sympathy and love, and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their great sorrow.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the minutes of this quarterly conference, also copy sent Christian Advocate, and one to family.

Respectfully submitted this the 21st day of October, 1921.

G. D. GARRISON,
W. W. BROWNLEE.

MESSAGE FROM MEMPHIS.

Dear Advocate: As a long-time reader I feel that I should make report as the time of Conference draweth nigh. I have been in Memphis eleven years. It is such a Mississippi town that one feels very much at home. Madison Heights Church has more than doubled its membership in three years. We now have 1010 members, 268 having been received this year. We have property easily worth $150,000. Our Sunday school enrollment is over 1600. Last Sunday 1365 were present. Mr. T. B. King, the well known layman, is superintendent.

Dr. C. W. Webdel is doing a marvelous work at First Church. They have over 2100 members, and conversions and additions occur at almost every service.

Dr. C. C. Grimes is preaching to throngs at St. John. They have over 1000 members, and a great Sunday school. St. John has one of the best equipped plants in the city.

Dr. J. R. Nelson, our presiding elder, says that three of our present churches will merge into one. They are Mississippi Avenue, Washington Heights and Parkway. The changing population of the southern part of the city has imperiled the life of the first two, and it is believed that if all three will unite a strong church with one thousand members can be built up right away. It will be called South Side. Our million-dollar Methodist Hospital will open Tuesday, November 1. It is easily the handsomest, most modern, most beautiful, and most substantial structure of its kind in all the land. Rev. L. H. Estes is the present Secretary of the Board of Managers, and he will give his entire time to the work after Conference.

Our educational work drags. There is a movement on foot to build a first-class, A-grade co-educational college within our bounds. We need it very much.

The resignation of Dr. Rice presents some interesting phases of our present-day thought. It is the source of great sorrow to me to observe the tendency among some of our preachers to go back to Darwinian evolution as the scientific explanation of man's creation and development. I have read Dr. Rice's book, and I regard it as a dangerous production for immature people. Some of his studies in prophesy are fine. He shows a familiarity with Hebrew history and literature that is very helpful, but when he attempts to state his conclusions concerning a good many matters he wanders far afield.

As to unification, may I say in all humility, that my judgment is, let the matter rest. The brethren of the M.

E. Church evidently do not want "Unification by reorganization." They turned down the only plan our Commissioners could agree to. And the only one our people would ever endorse was suggested at Oklahoma City. I do not believe that more than one-tenth want unification under the most favorable conditions.

T. W. LEWIS.

The Best Cough Syrup is Home-made.

Here's an easy way to save $2. and yet have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? Thousands of families, the world over, feel that they could hardly keep house without it. It's simple and cheap, but the way it takes hold of a cough will soon earn it a permanent place in your home.

Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to fill up the pint. Or, if desired, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, never spoils, and gives you a full pint of better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times its cost.

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy conquers a cough—usually in 24 hours or less. It seems to penetrate through every air passage, loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, heals the membranes, and gives almost immediate relief. Splendid for throat tickle, hoarseness, croup, bronchitis and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

This Month and Catarrh.

Many people find that during this month, catarrh is so aggravated by sudden changes of weather, indiscretions in the matter of clothing, and other things, that it becomes constantly troublesome.

There is abundant proof that catarrh is a constitutional disease. It is related to scrofula and consumption, being one of the wasting diseases. Hood's Sarsaparilla has shown that what is capable of eradicating scrofula, also relieves catarrh, and aids in the prevention of consumption.

It is not easy to see how any sufferer can put off taking this medicine, in view of the widely published record of its remarkable successes. It is called by its proprietors America's Greatest Medicine for America's Greatest Disease—Catarrh.

In some cases there is occasionally need of a thorough cathartic or gentle laxative, and in these cases Hood's Pills are taken with very satisfactory results.—Adv.

A REPORT FROM INDIAN BAYOU, LA.

(Abridged from the pastor's report to the Fourth Quarterly Conference.)

During the year we have strengthened our church at Indian Bayou in a material way by adding essential, though seemingly small equipments, among these being an individual communion set of seventy-two cups, a cistern for drinking water, a piano, and other conveniences. The organ has had a cleaning out and been made usable for the elementary department of the Sunday school, and the tabernacle that hitherto has only been used for summer revivals has been lighted and converted into a meeting place for the Epworth League and the elementary department of the Sunday school. A joint committee from the Epworth League, the Mother's Bible class, and the Sunday school elementary department now has in hand the work of enclosing the tabernacle for winter use, that our work be not interrupted at the close of summer. Some rearranging of the seats in the church has made our equipment for class assembly there better, too. Early in the year our Hebron church was blown some six feet from its pillars, but has been repaired at but a small cost, and little permanent damage, and is ready for a rededication at this time, the church having been rebuilt only last year.

Various improvements in the parsonage have made the pastor's home more comfortable and habitable, and a better example in home making to the parishioners. Some of the fences have been rebuilt, the gates all have been made over, the garden has been redeemed from weeds, a new garden has been fenced in, walks have been thrown up in the yard and lot and the drainage improved, the barn loft has been floored, and stalls have been made for the cow and horse, and the crib made ratproof. A chicken house, according to a government sanitary plan has been built, and swings and play equipment have been added to the yard for the pleasure of the children in their various social gatherings. In the way of furnishing the parsonage a heater has been added to the sitting room, practically all of the chairs have been rebottomed and painted, washstands for the three bed rooms have been added, the kitchen flue that endangered the building from fire has been rebuilt and made safe, the kitchen has been enlarged and equipped with shelves and various conveniences, and practically all of the doors and screen doors have been reset, and some rearranged for better protection and service, and the back porch and bath room have been shelved and arranged for various conveniences. A library table has been added to the furniture, also, and book case has been made. The dining room and the center tables have also been overhauled, or remade, and various leaks in the roof have been stopped. The ladies of the church are planning to paper and paint the dining and the sitting rooms in the near future, and to add other internal improvements, the mattresses recently having been remade by them.

We have also done good work in a movement to care for our graveyard, there having been four work days observed by the community this year, and a committee has in hand funds to complete the work of cleaning up for the first time in its long history, and the matter of employing a permanent sexton for full time is seriously considered, and we hope to see this plan realized.

In the development of our Sunday school work during the year, we have added a needed adult class to our otherwise well organized school at Hebron, and have gone from a state of practical disorganization at Indian Bayou to a reasonably well organized school of ten graded classes, and a young people's teacher training class that meets during the regular session of the school, and a training class for the enlisted teachers that meets in connection with the Workers' Conference. The Adult department of five classes meets in the church, and the elementary department, with regular officers and six classes, meets in the tabernacle. We have both of our schools well supplied with literature, and in almost every instance have good teachers for the classes, seven of whom are teachers in the public schools. New song books have been supplied both churches, including Children's Praises for the Indian Bayou elementary department, during the year. The new Cradle Roll started in the summer at Indian Bayou now numbers some 125 members, and a Home Department is being started with 30 charter members. A school conducted in her home by Miss Edna Petrie numbers 42 children.

Senior Epworth Leagues have been organized at both churches during the year, and a Junior League at Indian Bayou, and while the League at Hebron is new and is just beginning its work, the two at Indian Bayou have done good work in their mission of training a mission study class, taught by one of the public school teachers, being among the latest forward moves. At Indian Bayou a prayer meeting for the adult church membership, using the helps of the spiritual resources department of the Educational Movement, meets in the church at the same hour that the Epworth League meets for young people in the tabernacle. A Woman's Missionary Society has been organized at Indian Bayou, and is getting equipped for and is already beginning to do good work, and we are prospecting one for Hebron in the near future.

In our revivals we were blessed in the ministry of Rev. C. D. Atkinson, of the Parker Memorial Church of New Orleans, in our regular meeting at Indian Bayou, and in the ministry of Rev. E. V. Duplantis, of Ville Platte, in a special series of services in French. Rev. J. W. Booth, of Keener Memorial, Baton Rouge, assisted us in a high order of revival preaching in our meeting at Hebron. There were added to the church in these and the regular services during the year one hundred and ten members. Forty-six infants have been baptized.

At the beginning of the year the duplex envelope system was adopted as the financial policy of both churches, and started off well for a new move, but owing to the strenuous financial conditions of the community, and other causes, our finances are still largely unprovided, but with our good harvests, we are trusting our people to pay all of the financial claims against the charge, and have a missionary committee looking after the benevolences, while the stewards care for the ministerial support.

Our music at Hebron is proverbially good for a small community, having for a number of years had the leadership of a gifted public school teacher who has also taught music; but at Indian Bayou we have been deficient here, and to correct this the pastor has taught a class in music for a time during the year, and invited a music teacher to conduct a regular singing school, which effort did not fully materialize at the time, but is held in prospect for a future date. The pastor's wife and daughter have had a class in instrumental music, and some of the pupils are developing rapidly in their musical efforts.

"A refuge from the storm." A place to be a refuge must be out of the storm, or if in the midst of the storm, it must be stronger than the storm. God is a Refuge from the storm—a Refuge required by all, and resorted to by many, but in which there is always room; a Refuge stronger than the concentrated force of all the storms which have ever raged; a Refuge in which we may stay until all storms are over, and a Refuge affording efficient shelter.—S. SUFFERED SEVEN LONG YEARS

Finally Relieved by taking
Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Ravenswood, W. Va. — "For seven long years I suffered from a female trouble and inflammation so that I was not able to do my housework.

I consulted several doctors but none seemed to give me relief. I read in a paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound so I decided to try it, and before the first bottle was gone I found great relief so I continued using it until I had taken eight bottles. Now I am very well and can do my own housework. I can gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine to suffering women." — Mrs. BERTHA LIERING, R. F. D., Ravenswood, W. Va.

The ordinary day of most housewives is a ceaseless treadmill of washing, cooking, cleaning, mending, sweeping, dusting and caring for little ones. How much harder the tasks when some derangement of the system causes headaches, backaches, bearing-down pains and nervousness. Every such woman should profit by Mrs. Liering's experience. Remember this, for over forty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been restoring health.

Mrs. Woollard, secretary of Greenville District, reported new auxiliaries at Sherard, Mrs. S. T. Lockhart, corresponding secretary; Bobo, with Mrs. Chas. Keeler, corresponding secretary, and one at Murphy, with Mrs. Dr. Westmoreland, secretary. I have not been able to get names of presidents or superintendents yet.

Mrs. Williams, secretary of Columbus District, sent me names of secretaries of new auxiliaries at Weir, Mrs. Mavis Lynch; Sturgis, Mrs. J. C. Crosby; Siloam, Mrs. P. S. Miller, West Point, Route 1.

Mrs. W. J. East, of Sardis District, reported new auxiliary at Mt. Olivet, Mrs. Cora Lewellen, president and Miss Lois Ely, Superintendent of Study.

Mrs. A. W. Stokes of Grenada District reported new auxiliary at Shrock, Mrs. C. L. Dickerson, Goodman, president.

HARVEST DAY.

Your Conference is asking your auxiliary to observe this occasion some time early in December. The programs you need for making the service attractive and profitable may be had from the Home Base Secretary. Do not fail to order as soon as you read this notice. Lay your plans well for a successful observance of the day and bring your auxiliary to the close of the year with all financial obligations met in full. Make it truly a Harvest Day.—Council Bulletin.

FROM ABERDEEN DISTRICT.

(We are publishing an article that we meant should come in next Bulletin; but I asked Mrs. Busby for it, meaning to tell her for December. Since it is here, and so well adapted for this issue, I am letting it go, which is not quite fair to the other district secretaries, as I had expected them to edit the December Bulletin. Maybe Mrs. Busby will make hers the best district of the Conference if she gets two of these good articles to her auxiliaries.)

Since we are beginning the work of the last month of the year, let us pause long enough to consider what we have accomplished and to think what we have yet to do.

During the second and third quarters we have had reported nine new organizations and two reorganizations, making a total of fifty-four auxiliaries. Twenty-nine of these are adult, nine are Y. P. and sixteen are Juniors. We can report only one of these for organization quarter, but we are not discouraged for lack of members. We feel that good work has been done by these faithful women whom we asked to help in the organization. They report literature sent to churches, and attempts were made to organize. Some have not given up, but hope to report auxiliaries later. The way is paved for future service. We are all working toward the goal set by our Conference.

A large per cent of the auxiliaries reported the first and second quarters. Sixteen failed to report the third quarter. Let me beg you, the presidents of each society, to get your officers together and make a full report to all officers as soon as you observe Harvest Day. We know you do good work but we cannot report when you do not report to us. A few auxiliaries in the district have failed to report to me this year. Won't you report this last quarter? We do not want one single loss in Aberdeen District.

Much interest is manifested in Mission and Bible Study throughout the district. This means a better day for our missionary interests. Don't neglect to fill your card and return to Mrs. Steele. October is the month set aside for Mission Study campaign. I wish we might be a hundred per cent in this.

I know this quarter is full, but let me beg of you to press forward until the work is finished. If you have not put on the Round Robin Stewardship campaign, do so at once. We believe this is one of the best plans for getting stewardship before our women.

November 6-12 is set aside for Week of Prayer. We trust each auxiliary will observe this prayer week, getting the rich blessing in store for you.

Mrs. Thomas is reminding us of the needs of our Orphans' Home. Let the Superintendent of Supplies from each society be busy with the boxes for Thanksgiving and Christmas. Then do not fail to report to Mrs. Thomas.

This is the time of year when we can do a great deal of Social Service work. If you have not been telling Mrs. Pittman about all the good things your society has done during the year, redeem yourselves by sending her a good report. May we not do ALL in His name?

Thanking each of you for your splendid co-operation and praying that the work may prosper under the guidance of Him whom we serve.

MRS. JEFF BUSBY,

of work accomplished during the year ending October 1, 1921:

This society has effected the organization of one new society with 14 members, located within the bounds of the Second Church in Richardsontown, and has carried on a number of programs for said society in order to help it to its independence.

RENWAR VS. RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says, "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatment, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." For sale by druggists, price 50c; or by mail on receipt of price from WABNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Ad.

FROM MANGHAM, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: We are now on the "home stretch" of our fourth year at this place. During this time we have added 250 members to the church, and it has been our privilege to see equally as many taken into other churches where we have assisted in revivals. We have held eight meetings outside of our own charge. I held one of my own meetings this year, and was assisted in two others by Revs. L. F. Alford, of Mississippi, and J. A. McCormack, of this Conference. Both of these men did us most excellent work. They are at home in the pulpit, and know how to use the Word with telling effect.

I have had three elders these four years—Lutz, Atkinson, and Dodson. I love all of them, and it has been a real pleasure to be associated, in the Lord's work, with these good men. Although new in the work, Dodson has made good, and is in high favor with our people, and beloved throughout the district. He is faithful, punctual, and always "on the job."

During the quadrennium now ending, this charge has more than doubled in finances. We have organized a new church, one Sunday school and two Missionary Societies, and more than doubled the membership. Withal, I trust that the spiritual state of the church is as good, if not better, than when we came.

Our greatest material success has been in securing a splendid parsonage conveniently located on three acres of ground, and the erection of an up-to-date new church at Baskin. This church was recently built, and was under the ministry of Brother W. T. Woodward, who has been supplying this point since our district conference. He also had a great revival here, with fifty or more additions.

Yours cordially,
J. M. ALFORD.

THE CONGO BOAT A SUCCESS.

For days and weeks we waited to hear the answer to our question, "is the boat a success?" Mr. Chas. T. Schaedel, the industrial engineer of our Congo Mission and pilot of the new boat, "The Texas," passed by recently on his first furlough and heartily assured us that the boat already was seeing service and was a decided success.

The boat was first built in Scotland, then shipped in sections conveniently to be shipped overland around the rapids of the Congo. The structural work in setting up the boat was done by a representative of the builders, but the work was done by the natives under the supervision of Mr. Schaedel. Part of this will not be completed until Mr. Schaedel's return, although the boat is sufficiently complete for use and recently carried a group of the returned missionaries to our Mission.

The original time required from the landing of the nearest river point from our Mission was nine days' journey. This was not a Pullman journey nor a trip by automobile, but of slow walking through jungles, fording streams, and climbing hills. With our new boat the missionaries can go up the Lubefu River to within nine hours of our Mission at Wembo-Nyama.

GARFIELD EVANS.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT REVIVAL CAMPAIGN.

Dear Brother Carley: The District-wide Revival Campaign in the Alexandria District for rural communities was a glorious success. The committee on evangelism for the district employed Rev. Clarence Ridge, of S. M. U., to direct the singing and used our own preachers over the district to do the preaching. The committee with its singer held six meetings during the summer and the results are as follows: Infants baptized, 19; accessions to the church, 78.

The plan worked well and almost paid for itself. We hope to do much better next year, as we are now convinced that the plan is a good one.

mending clothes, for both adults and children.

The Department of Supplies, under the leadership of Mrs. J. M. Gilbert, has sent boxes to the Mary Werlein Mission, to St. Mark's Hall, and to Poland, the total value of which was $194.

The Missionary Department has raised the following amounts during the year: Dues, $94.40; Retirement and Relief, $4; Conference Expense Fund, $18.54; Undirected Pledge, $99.65; Week of Prayer, $8.53, and Scarritt Bible and Training School, $4, making a total of $230.18. It now has on hand in various funds $58.90, which brings the total collected to date $289.08.

The Local Department, under the superintendency of the lamented Mrs. W. C. Magee, raised and expended funds as follows: Amount spent on all objects, including first payment to Trustees on new church building, is $1225.85. Amount now in hand of local treasurer and in the hands of treasurers of Work Circles under this department is $208.97.

It may be noted here that in all of its departments during the year the Missionary Society has raised $1917.90.

While we have been thus engaged in material things Mrs. K. I. Bean has led the Society in the completion of two mission study books taught by Mrs. J. E. Cooper and one Bible Study Class taught by the pastor. Regular meetings have been held, the Week of Prayer observed, stated conventions attended and work in behalf of the local church and parsonage of such a nature that figures do not express. In all, we are glad of the results of the year just closed.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. G. F. POOLE,
President.

The Work At Keithville, La.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Thumb was beautifully celebrated last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. H. Keith by the children of the Keithville Junior Missionary Society. The home was most attractively decorated with pot plants and goldenrods and was the scene of much merriment as the boys and girls gathered for the mock wedding.

The rainbow color scheme was carried out in the bridesmaids' gowns. The bride's costume was made en train and the exquisite bridal veil was looped with a coronet of orange blossoms. Marguerite Rembert was maid-of-honor, and Brandon Clingman was groomsman. The attendants were Margaret Carr with Fred Rembert, and Adell Nelson with Fullilove Clingman. Behind the attendants came the little ribbon girls, Evelyn Eaddy and Ella Hendrick. Then, just preceding the bride and groom, came the lovely little flower girl, Dorothy Flores. Clingman Munday acted as minister, and I. W. Miller and Delia Clingman as parents of the bride, Olive James was her old-maid aunt, John O. Hendrick and Curtis Miller acted as ushers.

The silver offering, $18.34, was put into the treasury of the Junior Missionary Society.

The Keithville Adult Bible Study Class met with Mrs. R. M. Rembert Tuesday afternoon. An interesting programme was enjoyed by all. The class made a study of the 6th chapter of Mark. Mrs. W. H. Keith played a beautiful piano solo and Mrs. Keith and Mrs. McCord gave a vocal duet, "Be Still and Know."

The class will meet with Mrs. E. G. Howard, October 16, the lesson being a review of the first two chapters of the study book, "The Gospel of Mark," which covers the first six chapters of Mark.

Superintendent of Publicity.

FROM ROCHELLE, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: I have spent two busy years in the Louisiana Conference, both years here at Rochelle. This charge was not in the list of appointments for some time before I was sent to it. When I came here two years ago, I found no parsonage, no furniture, and no board of stewards, no Sunday school, no Epworth League, no Woman's Missionary Society, no plan of the charge. All I found was a great big job with a fine bunch of people ready to back up the preacher. I got together some of the men and appointed them as stewards and they constituted the official board. My salary was fixed at $1620 and I was paid $1708. The elder was paid in full, and more than half of the Conference claims were paid. The board authorized the purchase of a set of good furniture for the parsonage and asked the preacher and wife to select it. With the help of the women, the parsonage was well furnished and the Woman's Missionary Society, as we had already organized one, took over the debt for the furniture and before Conference every dollar was paid. This year my salary was put at $1900 and will be paid in full. It is paid by the month. We will pay a greater per cent of the Conference claims, I believe, this year than we did last year. All in all, we are going to Conference feeling that we have not failed in the task that was before us.

We are leaving behind us a charge that promises to pay the preacher not less next year than this, and perhaps more, and a good six-room house, owned by the Tremont Lumber Co., but rented by the church for a parsonage. It is well lighted with electricity that burns all the time, has water works all over the house, with bathtub, washing basin and dishwashing sink, and water in lot and front yard, with a good garage, cow barn, and garden spot.

The house also has a large, new sleeping porch. This house is well furnished throughout. The preacher will not need a stick of furniture. I am also leaving several loads of wood in the yard. I am leaving a good official board, Woman's Missionary Society, Sunday school well graded, Epworth League, and no debt on anything. All the preacher will have to do when he gets here is go to work. The plan of the charge will perhaps be changed a little, but it will not weaken but strengthen if anything. I failed to state that the church pays the rent on the house for the preacher.

The Sunday school has a Cradle Roll of more than a dozen and a Home Department of fifty. Cordially,

D. B. BODDIE.

PACIFIC CONFERENCE OFFERS SCHOLARSHIP TO CONFERENCE TRAINING SCHOOL.

The Pacific Conference has taken a step in a new direction which is of such an interesting and stimulating nature that we wish to pass it on to our constituency. It is this: The Sunday School Board has offered to all Sunday schools of the Conference a scholarship of $25 with which to send a student to the Pacific Training School at Berkeley in 1922.

The requirements for securing this scholarship are based upon the Elementary Departments of the school attaining a certain standard rank, and are graded to suit the needs of schools of varying possibilities.

The following shows the schedule of requirements:

One-room church—3d rank, Beginners' Department; 3d rank, Primary Department; 3d rank, Junior Department.

Two-room church—2d rank, Beginners' Department; 2d rank, Primary Department; 3d rank, Junior Department.

Three-room church—2d rank, Beginners' Department; 2d rank, Primary Department; 3d rank, Junior Department.

Four-room church—1st rank, Beginners' Department; 1st rank, Primary Department; 1st rank, Junior Department.

Young People's Training Class organized.

The above not only shows the importance the Pacific Conference Sunday School Board attaches to Teacher Training, but reveals the high value it is placing upon the proper sort of work and equipment for the children.—Bulletin.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

There will convene this week in the city of Washington a conference called by President Harding, to consider the practicability and the advisability of an agreement by the great nations of the world to begin a process of decreasing their armaments in order that the ruinous cost of maintaining such armaments may be done away with, and in order that the danger of war itself may be eliminated. All the great Powers have appointed representatives to this conference, and the assemblage will be one of the most brilliant of those that have ever been brought together to consider the welfare of the world. There seems to be general agreement that some understanding must be arrived at whereby the nations may be saved the economic burden of maintaining and enlarging their equipment for war, but the plan itself will have to be worked out in the consultations that will take place between the representatives of participating Governments. Only those people, however, who have failed to take into account the tremendous, delicate, and difficult problems involved believe that an agreement will be readily reached. National prejudices, jealousies, ambitions and ideals will so be brought into conflict that only the most careful deliberation and the most statesmanlike consideration of the issues involved can give any promise of a real solution of the momentous question. If ever there was occasion for united prayer on the part of the Christian people of the world for divine guidance of their representatives, that occasion is at hand. God must not be left out of account at such a time as this, and all the resources of the spiritual universe should be made accessible to those who are dealing with the destiny of mankind. Prayer may be the key that will unlock the door that stands between a world of war and a world of peace.

NOVEMBER 11.

By concurrent resolution of Congress and proclamation of President Harding, November 11—Armistice Day—becomes a holiday, and the people of the United States will pay tribute on that date to the men who served their country and the world in the great war. As a symbolical tribute to all those who gave their lives in the great struggle, an unknown American soldier will be buried in Arlington National Cemetery with all the honors his country can bestow upon one who has won its gratitude by military prowess and a patriotism that shrank not, even in the face of death. On that day all of us will pause a little while in the midst of our various activities to thank God for the successful issue of the conflict that so recently engaged all the world, and to offer a prayer that wars may be known no more. No great nation ever forgets its heroes, or the triumphs of righteousness that have marked its history.

DO IT YOURSELF.

One of the easiest things in the world for the average human being to do is to tell another human being exactly what he ought to do and how he ought to do it. Out of this fact, negatively, grows the disposition to find fault and criticize harshly, and, positively, to become intolerant and overbearing. It is unfortunately true, however, that the possessor of so much knowledge does not often prove that he knows what he is talking about by doing the thing himself. It sometimes happens, too, that the man who is so ready to offer advice or find fault is not engaged in any other task that would prevent his giving a demonstration of the perfect performance of duty on the part of the one upon whom his displeasure has fallen, so that his assumed superiority is all the more trying to the man who is actually engaged at the task. It is a pretty safe guess that the man whose business it is to do a certain thing can do it better than the man who makes it his business to tell him how.

BUT THE FULL PRICE MUST BE PAID.

Our attention was attracted not long ago to an advertisement in a local newspaper in which the invitation to buy was introduced by the words, "Pay Nothing—Down." Somehow or other, a great many people seem to have an insatiable desire to get something for nothing, and the artful advertiser appeals to them in a way that seems to hold out the prospect of their being able to satisfy that desire. Of course it is only a psychological phenomenon that such an appeal should have any force, for experience has proved beyond any question that things worth having cost their value; but we suppose the business of the firm in question is increased by the suggestion that the day of payment can be postponed. Many a man will assume a heavy financial obligation to be discharged in the future if only he can feel that he does not have to pay at once. Where there is full and definite realization that the debt will finally have to be paid in full, there is, perhaps, not a great deal of objection to the system of deferred payments in business transactions. But in the realm of morals, it is a most dangerous procedure. The penalty of violated law is invariably inflicted, and the violator has to stand the consequence of his act in the future as surely as if he had to "pay down." The enticement to evil may come in such guise as to make the evil appear perfectly harmless—but there will be a reckoning. But for the provision of infinite love by which the merits of the Savior are made available for the sinner, all of us would stand convicted before the judgment bar of God.

"DAVID AND GOLIATH."

Without any thought of irreverence, reporters of sporting events throughout the United States have likened the football team of Centre College, a comparatively small institution of Kentucky, to David, and the team of Harvard to Goliath, as the two met in contest in the Harvard Stadium a week or two ago. The fact that the game was won by Centre, and that one player on the Centre team, "Bo" McMillan, is credited largely with the victory, gives point to the simile and emphasizes a fact that the world ought never to forget—that "the race is not always to the swift, or the battle to the strong;" that is, that outward evidence of superiority is not always to be relied upon. Many of the conflicts of life are waged against apparently insurmountable odds—but an indomitable will and the determination to win in spite of obstacles have turned impending defeat into glorious victory. When the right is on one's side, one need never despair, no matter what the world may think or say. Self-consciousness of rectitude reinforced by the spirit that fights to the end is a source of strength that makes even the weak ones, as the world counts weakness, mighty for the pulling down of strongholds.

A SURE REFUGE.

What a blessed thing it is to know that there is a sure refuge in the midst of the world's troubles and trials! But it is infinitely more blessed to have access to that refuge when need arises. God is such a refuge for those who know and love and trust him—a refuge that never fails. By the simple act of faith the devout soul may find shelter from the fiercest storms that blow.

HOW IT HELPS!

We saw a man the other day to whom a word of appreciation had just been spoken and a token of love presented. The light in his eyes and the tone of his voice made us know that a beautiful thing had been done. How a little kindness along the way helps!

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

By Hon. C. L. Bates.

Fifth Paper.

I.

The ecclesiastical decree deposing and degrading Bishop Andrew was not aimed at him personally; it was aimed at Southern Methodism collectively, preachers and people; the Bishop was only a vicarious victim, sacrificed upon the altar of a political crusade. Its design, intent and purpose were to align the Annual Conferences in the Southern and Southwestern States against local law and authority, or, failing in that purpose, the decree was designed and intended to operate as a sentence of condemnation, punishment and ecclesiastical excommunication of the whole body of Southern Methodists; and it was so understood at the time by the delegates from that section of the church, who formally declared that the decree had rendered a continuance of the jurisdiction of that General Conference over those Annual Conferences inconsistent with the success of the ministry in those States, and that view is supported and maintained by the Report of the Committee on Organization adopted by the Constitutional Convention.

To have complied with the "requisition"—to employ the very apposite term chosen by Dr. Bascom to define the decree—the "requisition" of the General Conference would have blighted, disintegrated, destroyed Southern Methodism, and dishonored and degraded its ministry.

When all the relevant facts and circumstances involved in, antecedent to and concurrent with the action of the General Conference are assembled, marshaled, analyzed, and read and examined in the light of contemporaneous history and the actions and opinions of the Southern delegates had and taken and made manifest at the time and immediately subsequent thereto, the compelling power of inexorable logic drives the mind to the conclusion here stated.

Had the majority, pursuant to a sound, prudential and just policy, simply desired a division of the church and nothing more, that could have been easily and amicably achieved without violent or illegal action; there were then existing precedents for a peaceful, orderly, legal division of the church. Men are conclusively presumed to intend the necessary consequences of their deliberate acts; and the verdict of history cannot, upon a consideration of all the facts, acquit the majority of the General Conference of 1844 of intent to destroy Southern Methodism. History "is a voice for ever sounding across the centuries the laws of right and wrong. Opinions alter, manners change, creeds rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity. * * * Justice and truth alone endure and live." May not history teach Southern Methodism the constitutional principles, of its being, and the importance of their faithful preservation and administration? Does our beloved church still "distinctly recognize the jurisdiction of a delegated General Conference, receiving its appointment and authority from the whole constituency of Annual Conferences?" Or has the voice of history been hushed in the clamor of altered opinion, changed manners, the rise and fall of creeds? Has Southern Methodism failed to bear the fruit which its founders—preachers and people—looked for?

II.

The deposal of Bishop Andrew with the attendant circumstances was a causus belli; it imposed upon the Southern and Southwestern Annual Conferences the necessity of exercising the Right of Revolution, a right inherent in all peoples, in respect to both their political and ecclesiastical relations. Jesus imposed upon his disciples no craven spirit. Luther, joined by thousands of his coreligionists, exercised this great right; and there are men now living who do not believe that the Thirty Years' War was too great a price to pay for it, notwithstanding the rise of the Tubingen Theology.

III.

The minority delegates promptly accepted the gage of battle thrown to them by the General Conference, and, acting in their representative capacities, representing their respective constituencies, presented to that august body a Declaration of Ecclesiastical Independence of Thirteen Southern and Southwestern Annual Conferences, specifically named upon the record, separately, distinctly and severally; and, thenceforth, legislation was suspended, the General Conference was divided into two ecclesiastical Chancellories, the Southern and Southwestern delegates were converted, by the necessities of the case, into ambassadors of their respective Annual Conferences, and the proceedings of the body assumed the distinct character of diplomatic negotiations between the "General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church" on the one side, and, on the other side, the representatives, respectively, of the Thirteen Annual Conferences which had declared their independence.

In the negotiations that followed, the Southern delegates sought and obtained from the General Conference (1) a relinquishment of its jurisdiction over and a recognition of the independence of the Annual Conferences in the slave-holding States, (2) a delimitation of the boundaries between the Northern and Southern sections of Methodism, (3) liberty to "ministers, local and traveling, of every grade and office in the Methodist Episcopal Church," to adhere without blame to either connection, (4) an agreement to make a just and equitable division of the common property of the church, and (5) a release of any and all claims of the Northern Church to all real property, school and Conference funds situated "within the limits of the Southern organization."

Those agreements, covenants and stipulations were made by the General Conference with practical unanimity, and evidenced by an entry on its journal.

IV.

By the adoption of what is known as "the plan of separation," reported on June 7, the General Conference, in law and in fact, relinquished all its right, jurisdiction, power and authority over the Annual Conferences in the slave-holding States, and over all church property, real and personal, situated within their borders and subject to their respective jurisdictions.

The relinquishment was made, not to the delegates nor to the preachers, but to the people—to "all the societies, stations, and Conferences, adhering to the church in the South by a vote of a majority of the members of said societies, stations and Conferences." This "vote of a majority of the members" was the one and only condition upon which the relinquishment was made to depend (Smith v. Swormstedt); and it, therefore, inevitably follows that, as a legal and logical necessity, the ecclesiastical sovereignty theretofore vested in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church over the Annual Conferences in the slave-holding States was by the "plan of separation," and its acceptance by them in the manner provided, fully vested in those Annual Conferences, each respectively; and by the phrase

"Annual Conferences," as used in that memorable document, is meant, not merely the "traveling preachers," but the "members of said societies, stations, and Conferences"—the whole body of Methodist people, in their organic capacity, constituting, severally, those Conferences.

The legal and governmental results of the ecclesiastical revolution mark a new era, a new development, a distinct departure in the constitutional principles of American Methodism, in so far, at least, as Southern Methodism is concerned; the revolution did not stop at separation; it changed the seat of sovereignty, the power to govern, to make and unmake constitutions, to dissolve and establish churches and church relations and connections.

In the old church, created by the "traveling preachers," acting upon their own motion and behalf, representing no constituency, the seat of sovereignty was first in all the preachers assembled in mass General Conference, and then in the delegated General Convention created by them; but, in organizing the Southern Church, a new ecclesiastical principle, a new "plan" of action, was brought into play. The relinquishment of sovereignty in the South was made in favor of the people, and the whole question of creating a new church and of uniting in a "distinct ecclesiastical connection," was referred to them.

V.

Immediately upon the adjournment of the General Conference of 1844, the delegates of the thirteen Southern and Southwestern Annual Conferences held a meeting for consultation, at which they adopted a plan of action to be recommended to the Conferences they represented; and at the same time they sent abroad an Address, signed by them, "To the Ministers and Members of the Methodist Church in the Slave-holding States and Territories," in which, after explaining the "plan of formal and pacific separation," they declared:

"Provision is made for a peaceable and constitutional division of church property of every kind. The plan does not decide that division shall take place; but simply, and it is thought securely, provides that it may, if it be found necessary. Of this necessity you are to be the judges, after a careful survey and comparison of all the reasons for and against it."

That address, officially issued, was a contemporaneous construction of the plan of separation by the men who obtained its execution, and were parties to it, and were then devising and promulgating a method of procedure under it; and in it, the address, they declare that the fundamental rule of action is the new constitutional principle evolved by the revolution through which the church was then passing. They advise their constituencies that the grave question whether their old ecclesiastical connection is to be dissolved and a new one established is to be submitted to their consideration and ultimate decision.

And more than that: "The reasons for and against" are to be submitted to them; all the facts are to be disclosed to them; their representatives are to account to them; there is to be discussion and a careful survey and comparison of reasons.

It is not surprising that revolutions should bring forth and put into operation new and beneficent principles of Government. Of course it goes without saying that the revolution staged by the American Colonies—thirteen in number, a strange coincidence—resulted in the creation and establishment of the greatest and best Government known among men. As the wrongs inflicted upon the Southern section of the church were traceable directly to a centralized despotism, it would have been strange indeed had not the Southern Methodists builded upon more liberal principles.

REV. DANIEL G. FOUST.

Daniel C. Foust, son of John and Sarah Foust, was born July 12, 1851, in Lafayette County, near Oxford, Miss. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in August, 1867. He was educated at the State University, at Oxford, Miss. He was licensed to preach by Rev. Amos Kendall, P. E., March 2, 1873, and was received on trial in the North Mississippi Annual Conference at Kosciusko, in 1875. He was admitted into full connection at Holly Springs in 1877. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Keener in 1877, and elder by Bishop Kavanaugh in December, 1879, at Water Valley.

On November 4, 1877, he was happily married to Miss Josie L. Hudgins, daughter of Rev. J. E. Hudgins, near Oxford, Miss. Three children were born to them. One died in infancy. His son, Rev. K. P. Foust, died January 3, 1919. His daughter, Mrs. J. M. Autry, lives at Hickory Flat, Miss., where Sister Foust will make her home.

Brother Foust served the following appointments, all in the North Mississippi Conference: 1876-78, Caswell circuit; 1879-80, Attala circuit; 1881, Fulton circuit; 1882-85, Banner circuit; 1886, Lexington; 1887-89, Winona circuit; 1890-92, West circuit; 1893, Chester circuit; 1894-95, Louisville circuit; 1896, Eupora circuit; 1897, Saltillo circuit; 1898-99, Guntown circuit; 1900-01, Kossuth circuit; 1902-03, Okolona circuit; 1904, Buena Vista circuit; 1905-06, Coffeeville circuit; 1907, Abbeville circuit; 1908-11, Ashland circuit; 1912-13, Wheeler circuit; 1914, Vardaman circuit; 1915-18, Smithville circuit; 1919, Wall Hill circuit; 1920-21, Hickory Flat circuit.

Brother Foust passed to his eternal home at midnight, on Sunday night, October 16, 1921. We laid him to rest in the cemetery at Hickory Flat on the afternoon of the following day, after funeral services at the Methodist Church conducted by this writer. Brother Foust had preached that Sunday morning at Ebenezer Church from this text: "Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus." Rev. 22:20. He spoke often of going home, or to heaven, never of dying.

Brother Foust was a strong preacher, a good husband and kind and indulgent father. He had a long and fruitful ministry—forty-six years an itinerant.

"The voice at midnight came,
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame,
He fell, but felt no fear.

"His sword was in his hand,
Still warm with recent fight,
Ready that moment at command
Through rock and steel to smite.

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow ceased,
And Life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace."

We extend sincere sympathy to the bereaved loved ones.

J. B. RANDOLPH.

THE ONE BAPTISM.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Part II.

In the preceding portion of this article, I have shown that there is but one baptism taught in the Bible and that is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. As a result of the controversy on the subject of water baptism, whenever the topic is referred to or the word baptism is used, the manner or mode of its administration occurs to the thought and, since I am writing of Holy Ghost baptism, the mode demands some attention. In this connection, the question arises, Can we determine the mode of Holy Ghost baptism? I reply, the Bible settles that question beyond all caviling, and no one has ever disputed the mode of Holy Ghost baptism except a few extra immersionists who have irreverently translated certain passages in the Bible with the apparently specific purpose of evading the logical and, therefore, irrefutable conclusions drawn by affusionists from the mode of the Holy Ghost baptism to establish their contentions relative to the mode of water baptism.

What, then, is the mode of Holy Ghost baptism? That question is so easily answered that it seems needless to ask it. The Bible everywhere represents the Holy Ghost as being poured out, falling upon, descending upon, etc. The prophet Joel represents God as saying, "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh"—Joel 2:28, and on the day of Pentecost, Peter tells us that what transpired on that occasion was the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy: "But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel"—Acts 2:16. So the mode that God used that day was affusion. In Matt. 3:16, the record is that, after the baptism of Christ, John "saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." When Peter was preaching to Cornelius and his household, the Holy Spirit fell on them: "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on them which heard the word"—Acts 10:44. These quotations are more than sufficient to establish the mode of Holy Ghost baptism. It is plain that no one was ever immersed or dipped or plunged into the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is a divine Person, and to immerse or dip or plunge any one into a person is not only inconceivable, being impossible, but the very thought in connection with the third Person of the Holy Trinity approximates irreverence.

Now, having established the mode of Holy Ghost baptism, I repeat that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is the only baptism taught in the Bible—"One Lord, one faith, one baptism," said the apostle and he meant nothing but the baptism of the Holy Ghost. For the sake of emphasis as well as to refresh our memories, I reaffirm a statement I made in Part I of this article, viz.: The application of water to the person, or the person to the water—take it as you please—is not baptism, but by a figure of speech, known to grammarians as metonymy, whereby the name of the thing itself is transferred to its symbol, the application of water in the name of the Trinity is called baptism. So, then, water baptism, so far from being baptism, is only a symbol of the real, the only, the one baptism—the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The symbol, of course, must accurately represent that which it symbolizes; otherwise, it would not be a symbol. Now, having shown the mode of Holy Ghost baptism, the only logical conclusion is that the symbol, water baptism, must be administered by the same mode—the water applied to the person; and because of the similarity of pouring and sprinkling, both being applications of water to the person, and because God says, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you," the Methodist Church performs the rite by sprinkling.

I am not unaware of the fact that immersionists, using Rom. 6:3, 4, and a parallel passage in Col. 3:12 as proof texts, take the position that water baptism symbolizes, not the baptism of the Holy Ghost, but the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Here lies the very root of their blunder on the question of the mode of water baptism—they make water baptism symbolize the wrong thing and are, therefore, unscriptural, Jesus himself declares that water baptism is not and cannot be the sign of his burial. Read Matt. 12:39-40, "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, and there shall no sign be given it but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." The reader will observe: 1. Jesus is speaking of his death and burial; 2. Of his death and burial he says, "No sign shall be given but the sign of the prophet Jonas." The immersionist says that immersion in water is the sign of his death and burial; Jesus says that it is not. Either the immersionist or Jesus is wrong—and probably it is the immersionist. Furthermore, there is no water in Rom. 6:3, nor in Col. 3:12. The apostle in both citations is not talking about water baptism, but is speaking of the baptism of the Holy Ghost and what he accomplished in the hearts and lives of men. The reader will note the exact words of the apostle: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" To be baptized into Jesus Christ is to be saved, and if we are baptized into Jesus Christ by being "buried" in water, then water is a saving element. Absurd! The truth is, we are baptized into Jesus Christ by the Holy Spirit. Let the reader compare the following passages: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" Gal. 3:27. The reader, no doubt, will note that these words are almost identical with the words of the same apostle in Rom. 6:3—the latter being the proof text of the immersionist. Then, in his letter to the Corinthians, the same writer tells us plainly by whom this baptism is performed: "For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body" 1 Cor. 12:13. I challenge every immersionist from the days of the Anabaptists till now to produce one single recorded instance showing that the Holy Spirit ever immersed any one in water—yet Paul declares that the Holy Spirit baptizes. Will the immersionists tell us by what mode the Spirit baptizes and in or with what element? Furthermore, if the Holy Spirit baptizes as the apostle affirms he does, and it cannot be shown that he baptizes in water, then the word baptize does not always mean immersion in water, as immersionists claim. From the passages quoted above, the reader will note: 1. We are baptized into Jesus Christ—not in or with water; 2. We are baptized into his death—not into water; 3. We are baptized into one body; 4. Each operation is identical; 5. The Spirit is the administrator. Yet the immersionist says that to be "buried" with Christ, to be "baptized into Christ," to be "baptized into one body," each performed by the Holy Spirit, is to be immersed in water. Great is water! Let the clouds rain down floods! Let us have more water—oceans of water!

But whatever the immersionist may say, water baptism is not a sign of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. The only sign of his burial is the fate that befell Jonah—Jesus himself says so, and that settles the question. Water baptism is a symbol of nothing but the baptism of the Holy Ghost. John the Baptist (pioneer, rather) settles that question forever, if those who claim to be his successors would receive his testimony: "I indeed baptize you with water (Ego baptizo en hudati—instrumental dative form, "with water," not "in water") * * * he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost"—Matt. 3:11. Jesus also makes water baptism the symbol of Holy Ghost baptism: "John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence"—Acts 1:5. When the Holy Ghost fell on Cornelius and his household, Peter immediately thought of, and called for water to be brought and administered as a symbol of the baptism of the Holy Ghost which they had just received: "Can any man forbid water to be brought, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?"—Acts 10:47. So the question is settled by John, Christ, and Peter, that water baptism is the symbol of Holy Ghost baptism. The mode of the latter determines, necessarily so, the mode of the former, as the mode of the thing symbolized must determine the mode of its symbol. The Bible describes the mode of Holy Ghost baptism; therefore, the mode of water baptism is settled by the Bible beyond reasonable controversy. But what this old world needs, what human hearts need, what the church needs is another Pentecostal baptism of the Holy Ghost. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism"—the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

Hollow trees are always stiffest, but the mighty oak, if sound, can bend. The more exalted a man is by station, the more powerful should he be by kindness. There is no policy like politeness, since a good manner often succeeds where the best tongue has failed. Politeness is most useful to inspire confidence in the timid and encourage the deserving—E. L. NOVEMBER ELEVENTH.

American Cemetery in France.

By Kate Jordan Bigham.

How still they lie who gave us peace;
 Their upturned faces pale as lilies fair;
 While o'er the windswept turf the brown leaves fall,
 And lone homing birds chant requiems.
 The wondrous gift they gave o'erwhelmed me quite,
 This brooding peace that waked the world to joy:
 Peace, now, where once reigned war's unsated greed,
 And tears, and babies' cries, and women's prayers.
 With dash and joyful shout they met the foe,
 As tho' it were a gala day, and life were cheap!
 While we were bowed with grief and misery,
 And agony was gnawing at our hearts for them.
 How silent now, and calm they lie;
 The dash, the shout, the cry of victory stilled,
 All in so brief a time!
 But no, they smile! they are not dead but glorified;
 They do not sleep, but wake! And lo, they speak:
 What we surrendered was but naught;
 We purchased peace because we loved the world;
 'Twas well!
 They purchased peace, because—they loved—the world;
 What they surrendered—was—but naught!
 God! the Calvary man.

THE ECUMENICAL ADDRESS.

To The Churches.

"Grace be upon you, and peace from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

"We are met together in tempestuous days, in times of unrest and uncertainty. We stand between two worlds—one dead; the other, without Christ, powerless to be born. The world sighs for a great leader: we have found ours in Jesus. He accuses and condemns us, but forgives and inspires us. We have sinned and come short of the glory of God. Assembled together in this Conference we have heard the call to repentance and faith. The days in which we live are crowded with perils, but they are also ringing with hope and calls to new adventures. When Wesley entered a city of England more sinful than he had seen elsewhere, he said, 'Surely the time is ripe for Him who came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.'"

"It is thus we must approach the great tasks of difficult days. For the times are indeed ripe for Christ. We need more verve, audacity, inventiveness, and to keep all our wits about it. There is a wondrous lilt in our gospel. It is no dirge, but a love-song. We challenge our age with our song, but we can only do this by loving the men and women in it. We summon you to an aggressive and militant Christianity. Let us strive to love men as Jesus loved them; to be as he was, a friend of all the Father's children. Let us love tenderly, inventively, unstintingly."

"We realize that faith is individual, but we know that it cannot retain its individuality unless it finds social expression. Life is a walk from Jerusalem to Jericho, and the true lover of Jesus is ever the good Samaritan. Ours is not the religion of the cloisters, but of the road. Every social problem is a Christian problem. Every man who fights for peace, for freedom, for the rights of small nations and races, for temperance, and for the unlocking of the treasures of education, is a soldier in the great campaign of Christ.
 We need a more spacious conception of the task of faith."

"The world is dying for lack of fellowship.
 Christ came to make us a band of brothers and sisters, to break down barriers, and to welcome all men into the Father's home. Fellowship is life, and lack of fellowship is death; fellowship is heaven, and lack of fellowship is hell; and the deeds which we do on earth, it is by fellowship we do them. We call you to this great fellowship."

War breaks the fellowship, let us destroy it; intemperance murders tens of thousands, let us slay it; social injustice makes slaves of God's children, let us break the fetters, and live and suffer to make men free. Christ claims all life. Wesley, with his wide-embracing love, cried out, 'The world is my parish.' We must, however, also remember that every parish is in our world. Every province of life needs the vitalizing power of love —nationalism, internationalism, the home, education, art, literature; especially is this true in the industrial world. We welcome the emancipation of women, and hail them joyfully as our fellow-workers in all the crusades of Christ's kingdom.
 If we answer the tragic cries of our age, we shall find the road to Jericho is also the road to Emmaus, for Jesus will walk the way with us."

"We have heard the call to the union of the churches. It has come to us with majestic instan-cy. We cannot stop our ears and be deaf to its claims.
 Our first duty is to heal our own divisions, and to call the children of the one Methodist family to a greater unity than we now enjoy. We have a hero-roll common to us all. Wesley, Coke, Asbury belong now to no section of the churches—they are our common inheritances. We are one in faith, even if not in polity. A living creed, however, is greater than a polity, and love has eyes which are quick to see the underlying unities.
 Here is another call to courage, patience, and a tolerance which is born of vision. The union of Methodism is our first step on the road which leads to wider union."

"We are called to a world-wide evangelism.
 The poignant cries of many countries beat upon our ears. We have seen the vision of the world's needs. Here is our glorious task. The thought of it makes life great. Let us learn to look upon every land as our Father's land, and the inhabitants thereof as our brothers."

"The world needs the fire of a great love. Only those with the burning heart can bring the kind-ling for which men yearn. We often linger with joy, when reading Wesley's Journal, under the entry of May 24, 1738: 'At a quarter to nine * * * I felt my heart strangely warmed.' But that is not the wonder of his life. The great fact is that from then until the day of his death each day tells the same glowing story. Wesley speaks not of cold grates or white ashes, but of flame and fire.
 The fire never dies down, for he ever fed it with the divine fire of love. Day by day he held his vigil with God. Thus the fire burned higher and hotter. Here is the great secret: but it is the open secret. Neither age, nor feebleness, nor approaching death could damp down the fires of his love, for he called in his last moments to his children of many lands, and still he calls to us to-day—

"The best of all is, God is with us."

POSITIVE PREACHING.

By Rev. J. H. Holder.

My Dear Brother Carley: It has occurred to me that in this stir created by the propaganda of the Christian Education Movement against hetero-doxy, some one should speak a word of caution with regard to preaching on these themes.
 It has come to me that some of our preachers are discussing, and no doubt ably so, from the pulpit some of these vexed questions. I do not pose as a counselor, but desire just a word.

In the first place, let me say to each one of us.
 "Believe our beliefs and doubt our doubts," is safe ground. Take abundance of time to consider before allowing a question mark in our faith about any established principle or doctrine. Fight anything that throws a doubt over any truth that has been believed through the years by the best of men. Bible truths, fundamentals of salvation, are not built by the inductive method. They are revealed, God-breathed. If fearful of our faith, we had best leave critical study alone.

We do well in our preaching to avoid the things that provoke doubts. Our people do not want our doubts, our criticisms. They want our tested faith. They want the truths that have comforted the millions preached in a POSITIVE way: They want to hear of a Divine Christ that is able to save. They want the doctrines of the Immaculate Conception, the Virgin Birth, Holy Ghost Baptism, Wonderful Teaching and Miracle Working, Crucifixion, Resurrection, Pentecost, Forgiveness of Sins, Conscious Salvation and Fellowship with the Father, the Direct Work of the Holy Spirit, Evangelization and world-wide Missions, Fatherhood and Sonship in Jesus Christ and Eternal Life.

 When we have preached these great doctrines with all our souls, Modernism and New Thought and Bible dissection will have little appeal to us, or our congregations.

Methodist people were not raised on reactionary preaching, nor have sinners been saved through critical studies. They were raised on the real, hopeful, forward look of faith and the preaching of the wonderful doctrines of a supernatural Christianity. We will never get sinners saved nor the world brought to the foot of the cross by injecting doubts into the "Thus saith the Lord," our final authority. What men want is salvation from sin and self. The Old Gospel gives the ONLY SURE remedy. It has done it in all the ages past; it never fails where it is tested; we can safely rely on it for all time to come:

CENTENARY PAYMENTS IN LOUISIANA.

It is very gratifying in view of the great financial oppression the past year to have had so many of our churches pay their three years' Centenary pledge in full to date.

In the Alexandria District, Forest Hill has paid 62 per cent and Simmsport 82 per cent of their pledges.

In the Baton Rouge District, Oak Grove has paid 60 per cent, Springfield 60 per cent, Wesley Chapel in the Ponchatoula circuit 78 per cent, Tunica 80 per cent, and Alford's Chapel 86 per cent of their pledges.

In the Lake Charles District, Hayes has paid
 60 per cent, Ludington 60 per cent, and Robeline
 64 per cent.

In the Monroe District, St. Joseph has paid 60 per cent and Magnolia 67 per cent of their pledges.

In the New Orleans District, White Castle has paid 62 per cent.

In the Shreveport District, Bayou La Chute has paid 60 per cent, Homer 60 per cent, Benton 61 per cent, Lake End 75 per cent, and Blanchard 75 per cent.

Quite a number of others have paid 50 per cent or more and it is probable that they will make up the difference by the convening of the Annual Conference. Diligent attention has been given to the collection of Centenary pledges in a great majority of cases. Although no "Pay-up Week" has yet been instituted, the total payments for the Conference are one-third of the pledges, and this is the average of the entire Methodist Church, South. A "Pay-up Week" has been determined by unanimous agreement of the presiding elders and our Bishop for December 4 to 11. It is hoped at that time, in view of no other interest before us, that a great effort by all churches will be made.

STEPHEN S. THOMAS.
 Conference Centenary Treasurer.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The regular time for Pay-Up-Week is November 1st to 7th, but as this is so near to the meeting of the Annual Conference, we have deemed it advisable to let the Conference Board of Education set the time. Then let the whole Conference get behind the time set and see that we come up one hundred per cent on our collections. This ought to be done and it can be done.

It is necessary to have a collector for each church; where this has not yet been done, let the pastor appoint some one before Conference and send his name and address on to me.

We are anxious to have all the pledge cards and the money collected sent to our office, so that we may have a full report by Conference.

REV. DINSDALE T. YOUNG, D.D.

By Rev. I. W. Cooper, D.D.

During my stay in London, I heard sermons from Dr. Luke Wiseman, Ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, Dr. Sharpe, the present presiding officer of that body, Rev. John Armstrong, pastor of City Roads Chapel, Dr. Rose of Canada, who preached the opening sermon of the Ecumenical Conference, and two sermons from Dr. Young, who is pastor of Central Hall, which is located in that part of London known as the City of Westminster. It was in Dr. Young's church that we held the meetings of the Conference.

In the Conference room we had essays and impromptu speeches which, though full of information, contained little room for oratory. But one speech was full of spirit and demanded attention—it was the one by Dr. Cadman, of New York, who brought a message from the Evangelical churches of America. I have heard Bishops Doggett, Kavanaugh, Wigbtman, McConnell, Quayle, Candler, Galloway, and William Jennings Bryan, but I place Dr. Cadman among the greatest speakers of this age. He thrilled the Conference when he declared that Francis Asbury saved America to Protestantism. Dr. Cadman in early life was a Wesleyan minister.

However, this paper is not to be about Dr. Cadman, but is to call attention to the ministry of Rev. Dinsdale T. Young. His church, Central Hall, including the lot, cost one million dollars. There are more beautiful Protestant churches, but few in the world so large or so well equipped. The auditorium will seat four thousand. It is well located, for it is not more than three hundred yards from Westminster Abbey, of world-wide fame.

It is said that Dr. Young preaches to more people than anyone else in the world. Theodore Parker had not such drawing power! Mr. Spurgeon was not more magnetic! Often fifteen minutes after the doors are opened there is not a vacant seat—and many are turned away, for the people are not allowed to stand during the services. It is most remarkable to see from a thousand to fifteen hundred people waiting in line for the doors to open! And then the rush when the doors are opened! And this in the city of London where so many scholarly ministers preach to almost vacant pews!

Dr. Young, I would say, is not under sixty-five years of age, is at least six feet tall and weighs a hundred and eighty pounds. He has gray hair and does not wear any beard. He is rather handsome. Has a kindly and rather a spiritual face, and a perfectly beautiful speaking voice. His enunciation is fine and every word which he utters, even in a conversational tone of voice, "carries" over that vast auditorium.

You could not call Dr. Young an orator or a great preacher. When you hear him and see the audience, you wonder and wonder what are the elements of his power. I offer the following explanations—and yet they do not explain:

First—Some think that the fine music, rather than Dr. Young's sermons, attracts the audience. Central Hall has the largest pipe-organ, the largest choir, the best choir leader and the greatest organist in the city; and how the English do love sacred music! Here the Methodists, as well as the Episcopalians, sing every stanza of each hymn. I had a little experience with their "singing customs." I was sent by the committee, on Sunday, to the suburban town of Fleet, to fill the Methodist pulpit there. In order to shorten the service I omitted the singing of one of the hymns which had been chosen. After the service, the organist asked me why I left out the song and laughingly remarked that in England people loved "much singing and short preaching." But in spite of this love for music, we feel sure that the great organ and the great choir are not the drawing card at Central Hall. If they had been, why were not all the visitors' seats filled during the sessions of the Ecumenical Conference. Not one time during the meeting of this great body did we see all of the places taken.

Second—Some think that the secret of power may be the man, rather than the message. It is the old story of the "man behind the gun." Personality is, indeed, a great force and without doubt Dr. Young has great personality. But that is not all!

Third—He believes with all his heart what he preaches and he does not fear criticism of any kind. He realizes that by the "higher critics" he would be called narrow and old-fashioned. He rather glories in this and throws down the gauntlet of defiance.

Fourth—He evidently has a rich personal experience in holy things.

Fifth—He keeps in touch with his audience. He loves and understands rich and poor and has a message for each.

Sixth—He uses very simple though picturesque and vivid language.

Seventh—He is rather original in the turn of his thought and in his expressions. For instance, the first time I heard him preach, his subject was to be wise, one must esteem himself a fool. He brought out the thought that though the Bible tells us not to call our brother a fool, it nowhere states that we should not apply the term to ourselves.

It may be a combination of all these reasons, it may be other elements which I failed to analyze—that make for the power of this great preacher. Whatever it is, I found him a very interesting study and wished very ardently as I listened to him and looked over his vast audience that more like him—at least like him in power—might be raised up for the glory and progress of our great Methodism.

"I SECOND THE MOTION."

I refer to the announcement of Dr. H. C. Morrison's preaching twice a day at our Annual Conference, and Brothers Tolle and Burton's request that we all pray specially for the occasion. With much prayer, hearty co-operation with Dr. Morrison, and the preachers more concerned about being "filled with evangelistic fire and a passion for the salvation of souls" than their future appointments, a revival will break out among the preachers that will scatter to the "four corners" of the Mississippi Conference! God grant that it may come!

Since a mere boy I have known Dr. Morrison. He held a wonderful revival near my father's old home when I was a poor sinner; the country for miles around was stirred. After the Lord called me to preach and I was in college, he held a revival in the college. Not so very long after this, I joined the Mississippi Conference, and have been with him several times since, and have often caught my thoughts running thus: "Oh! if Dr. Morrison could preach at a session of our Annual Conference!" When at his best, I, with hundreds of others, think he has very few equals. If any, in Southern Methodism as a pulpit orator but he has been in feeble health recently occasioned by overwork. He writes that his health is somewhat improved. May I ask that special prayer be made for him, too, that he may be physically equal to the task at our Conference? Between the dates of October 19 and December 11 he preaches at seven Annual Conferences.

Yours anxious for a Conference revival,
J. A. WELLS.

A NOTE OF APPRECIATION.

Dear Brother Carley: Rev. R. P. Goar, of the North Mississippi Conference, wishes, through the Advocate, to thank the preachers and laymen who have visited him in his affliction; also those who have written such helpful letters. It has been a source of great comfort to him to be remembered by the brethren. He has been confined to his bed for eight months; is now helpless.

METHODIST HOSPITAL.

More than fifteen years ago a layman from North Mississippi visited a sick preacher in the charity ward of the St. Joseph's Hospital in Memphis. The preacher afterward died there. This layman was grieved to know that it was necessary for Methodist people to be compelled to receive charity from the Roman Catholic Church. He wrote to Washington for figures and found that Methodism was poorly equipped for hospital facilities. He talked with a Baptist pastor in Memphis about the need of Protestant hospitals. That man got busy and the Baptist Memorial Hospital was erected and has been in operation for some time.

On Tuesday, November 1, the Methodist Hospital was opened in Memphis. The dream of that same layman, who, for more than twelve years, has been chairman of the Board of Trustees of this institution, and is still chairman, was realized, and Brother J. H. Sherard was the proudest man in all the "tri-State" territory when the crowds inspected this million-dollar plant, which is the last word in hospital equipment. The Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi had the honor of making the very first contribution to the enterprise in its beginning, more than twelve years ago. Mrs. L. C. Short, of Sardis, was then president of that organization. To see this splendid plant is but to be proud that North Mississippi had a part in its erection. Rev. L. H. Estes, of the Memphis Conference, is the newly-elected secretary, and will give his time to the responsible undertaking of carrying the work forward, with the aid of the Methodist pastors and people throughout the "tri-State territory."

QUESTIONS OF SUPREME INTEREST.

By Rev. E. S. Lewis.

Our great church is stirred from one border of its territory to the other, not by one question only, but by many. It has a right to be stirred. No man with an ounce of reason could suppose that it could be otherwise. The times in which we live challenge the church to a higher order of ministry and a more Christlike service. So many things are out of joint these days and our success in healing the woes and wounds of the age has been so meager that it is a very easy and natural thing to fall into a state of censoriousness and fault-finding. It takes less sense and less religion to make a first-class critic than anything else in the world.

Again, it is a mighty easy thing to feel that the man who doesn't think as you do is surely wrong and very likely in league with the devil. It is a good time for all of us to seek the baptism of the Holy Spirit that we may be possessed of the spirit and heart of the thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians. The man who does not feel the need of such a baptism day by day is either sprouting wings or else is just a plain f-o-o-l. A church-wide revival of this type would go a long way toward stopping the mouth of the critic.

Here is another phase of the question: Some of our people seem disposed to think that the church has just about gone to the bad. That is a pity, a pity that some people in the church have gone to the bad, but I do not believe for a moment that any overwhelming per cent of our people have forsaken the faith of the fathers and gone over to the enemy. Too many of them have. It is only a blind credulity and a foolish optimism that says everything is all right. We know that is not true. It has never been true since man's Eden home was broken up, but when a man gets under a juniper tree and begs to die because he is the only one left that has not gone over to the enemy, it is high time somebody should tell him the story of Elijah. This old prophet of the Lord had had a wonderful experience on Mount Carmel. Then we find him at Jezreel, where he received the threatening message from Jezebel. The Book says, "And when he saw that, he arose and went for his life." He concealed himself in the wilderness and there under the kindly shade of a juniper tree he requested for himself that he might die. Forty days later he was found in a cave in Mount Horeb. God said to him, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" He answered, "I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts, because the children of Israel have forsaken thine altars and I, even I, am left, and they seek my life to take it away." The Lord said to him, "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him." The man who has lost confidence in the rank and file of the church or in God's ability to keep his promises is to be pitied. Is it not quite likely that the man who thinks that bishops, elders, pastors, school men, leaders in all the departments of the church, not to say anything about thousands of others, is it not quite likely, I say, that the one who charges others with such glaring derelictions may not be an angel himself? But aside from this, are the charges true? Every man will have to answer according to what he may know. Surely fault-finding and carping criticism will not get us anywhere. A little more charity and brotherly kindness would be a big help.

The question of unification still disturbs. However, in this section there is practically but one thought on this question and that is, for the present it is an impossibility. Some of us have thought for years that if the right way could be found so that the two great branches of Methodism in America could be united so as to present a solid front, it would be the greatest religious agency in America. Many good people, North and South, earnestly prayed for such a thing to come to pass, and many other good people, North and South, were unalterably opposed to it. The people were not ready. A plan was proposed, but when the General Conference of the Methodist-Episcopal Church met, scant courtesy was shown the plan that their own commissioners had helped to frame. It was discounted and set aside. And they proceeded to elect a couple of Negro bishops, which action has greatly aggravated a situation that was already as tense as could be. So far as we are concerned in North Mississippi further agitation of the question will produce evil, and only evil. Let those who propose to thrash out the old straw and feed us on the same old "grits and gravy" go fishing or somewhere else. Let us memorialize the General Conference to discontinue the Commission on Unification. Maybe in the next generation the two sections will be ready for union. In the meantime, let us content ourselves with the great program of our own church, a better prepared ministry, a more religious church, more efficient plans for the carrying forward of our work, better Sunday schools, more souls saved, and the placing of all we have upon the altar of the church. Some things can't be forced. Bishop Hoss said in substance at the Oklahoma City General Conference: "When we are ready, God will find a way." But we are not ready yet.

Lastly, while waiting for the leading of Providence, is it not disloyal and wicked to make any sort of an effort to hinder the great enterprises of the church? Some people did not sympathize with the Centenary and they stood in the way and allowed it to fail. Some did not think well of the Educational drive and allowed it to go abegging. How can such conduct be justified? There was a call for a forward march of the church on the ranks of the evil one. Some of them said, "We don't like the commander." So they said: "Every fellow his own boss." Well, we did pretty well, but if we had caught the step and felt the enthusiasm that comes from the onward march of a great army, we would have done incomparably better. God surely is overruling many of our mistakes. This is our hope and our comfort. With our faith in God and in our fellow-man, our prayer and effort will still bring their reward. There is still a balm in Gilead and there is still a Physician there. We still have hope as long as some of those in high places read the Bible every day and say grace at the table.

THE CHURCH—HER RESPONSIBILITY AND OPPORTUNITY.

By Rev. J. A. Poe.

Never before in the history of the Christian church has there come to it such an opportunity, and never before has such a responsibility rested on it. EVERYTHING ELSE HAS FAILED. Science, culture, wealth, militarism, selfish organization, clannish co-operation—all, all have utterly failed. The further these things are carried and the greater the effort made through these channels to find a way out of the world's dilemma, the deeper grows the darkness and the greater the tragedy of earth.

There can be but one solution of the present world problem—the coming of the Kingdom of the Christ. It was foretold that, "The government shall be upon his shoulder—and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Prince of Peace."

The only hope of the world is in the reign of Immanuel. All other leaders are blind, leading the blind into ever-deepening gloom. It is time that preachers and people of the Christian nations were following the Christ instead of corrupt politicians and ambitious rulers. Every nation has its war party, and when they lead disaster must follow. I heard a candidate for President of the United States say not many years ago, that he was a believer in war as a necessary evil, and he was elected. That man to-day is in high authority in our Government, and can do much to encourage another war. If war is necessary, then Christ is a failure; all that he taught by precept and example is false;

there is no hope; the world is doomed to endless strife and suffering. Can we, the church of the Living God, of love and mercy, believers in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, keep silent in such an hour of danger? We must strike for "a warless world." The pulpit must give no uncertain sound. Let's heed the stirring admonition of General Tasker H. Bliss: "If the clergymen of the United States want to secure a limitation of armaments, they can do it now without further waste of time. The responsibility is entirely on the professing Christians of the United States. If another war like the last one should come, they will be responsible for every drop of blood that will be shed and for every dollar wastefully expended."

The highest patriotism is not in following the leadership of ambitious leaders, but in being true to God and the welfare of humanity at large. The prophets of the Old Testament times were the highest types of true patriotism, yet they often reproved kings and nobles. One of the world's greatest tragedies, and Christianity's greatest reproach took place when the so-called Christian nations followed their willful rulers into the bloodiest war of all history. It was a colossal mistake, inspired by diabolical principles and led by demonized human beings. There can be no civil wars. All wars are cruel, barbarous, and "set on fire of hell."

Now, the Christians of all denominations are called to co-operate with the leaders of the disarmament movement, by holding special services November 6, 7, 8, 9. These services should not only be held, but these days should be days set apart for fasting and prayer. Every church where it is possible should have a noon prayer service on November 11. Great publicity should be given to these services, and pastors should urge their congregations to observe and do all these things. The time has come when it must be said of the world, as Franklin said of the United States: "Without His aid, we shall succeed in our political building no better than the builders of Babel. We shall be divided by our little partial local interests: our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves will become a reproach and byword to future ages. And what is worse, mankind may hereafter from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing governments by human wisdom, and leave it to chance, war and conquest."

Let the church of the living God say the world must be disarmed, and the world will be disarmed. Let the church say the world must have peace, and peace to the world will come.

We appeal to the mothers of Christendom who have literally given their lives that their sons might live. Will you give these, the fruits of your plighted love, the heart-strings of your life, the hope of your age, to be sacrificed on the altar of the god of war? If you will not, let the lullaby of your cradle be love, the counsel of your nursery be peace, and the example of your life kindness toward all mankind. Teach your children that war is contrary to the teachings of our Savior. Cultivate a definite religious conscience against war.

We appeal to the leaders of our nation, who entered the world war with the slogan, "Down with Militarism," who, if they carry out the present military program, will be inconsistent, and place themselves in a bad light before the people of our nation and the nations of the world, that they be true to the high principles set forth in the call to war, and do all in the power of the nation to bring about a general disarmament.

Oh, mother, can't I have some cake?
 Can't Johnny have some pie?
 Can't we come in—just us—and take
 An apple by and by,
 If we both wipe our feet off clean
 The way you told us to?
 And if we run across Bill Green,
 Can't Billy have one, too?

Oh, mother, have you seen my hat,
 The one I wear to play?
 And say, ma, where'd I put my bat
 And bail the other day?
 Can't Johnny wear my other shoes
 Till his own pair gets dry?
 Do you care, mother, if we use
 Your old broom by and by?

We want to use the broom to sweep
 The home plate off, you see.
 And, mother, we want you to keep
 Our things for John and me
 So we won't lose them when we play;
 Our knife and marbles, too—
 Won't you please put them all away
 Just as you always do?

If Billy Green should come and knock
 At the back kitchen door,
 Tell him we're in the vacant block
 Right next to Johnson's store.
 And let him have my other shoes—
 My old ones—so's to play;
 He can't play barefoot or we'll lose;
 He's got to pitch to-day.

And would you care if Johnny came
 To supper when we're through?
 If Bill should pitch a dandy game,
 Can't I bring him home, too?
 If Bill comes to the kitchen door,
 Won't you give him some pie,
 So he'll be strong and curve 'em more?
 Thanks, ma! Good-by! Good-by!

FLOWERS AND SUNSHINE.

The lonely big man lived on one side of the fence, and the lonely little boy on the other. There was a great deal of difference between the big man and the little boy besides their size; in fact, their loneliness was about all they had in common. Oh, no, I forgot; the little boy's name was John. The big man's name was John, too.

And really their business couldn't be said to be a thing in common, either; it was so very different. The little boy's loneliness was achey and wistful and broke out in little sweet, winning smiles to the big man. But the big man only frowned, for his was the surly sort of loneliness that broke out in gruff grunts.

The dividing fence was a white picket fence, and there wasn't a single picket loose except one. That one picket the little boy was very careful the big man did not see; for if he should nail it fast, then the little boy could spend no more lovely moments peeping through into the big man's posy garden. The picket was loose only at one end. The little boy could slip out and poke his yellow head through to where wonderful flowers—nasturtiums and peonies and verbenas and roses and, oh, just everything sweet and beautiful were putting out buds and getting ready to bloom. Whenever he heard the "thump, thump" of the big man's cane he would draw his head back quickly and slip the picket into place.

He never knew how many times the big man standing hidden behind his ivy vines saw the yellow head blossom out among the flowers, then disappear. The big man made his grunt awfully low, so the little boy did not hear.

On the little boy's side of the fence there was a big, ugly washpot, and there were dirty black cinders from the wash fire. Almost every day there was a tired woman washing over the pot; and then the little boy did not have time to put his head through the fence at all. He had to carry wood and keep the fire poked and hold the clothespins—to pay for his "board and keep." For the woman who washed was not the little boy's real mother, but just an auntie who was "making believe," and who was not a very good make-believer. She often told the little boy that he was "the fast feather," and that she would not have to work so hard if only she had fewer mouths to feed.

As the summer came on, the black washpot was kept going more than ever. In fact there was not a day that the smoke did not blow over into the big man's yard and make him cough. Then he grumbled very loud and thumped his cane angrily up and down the brick walk.

As the little boy carried sticks for the fire he thought wistfully of the flowers blooming on the other side of the fence. And one morning, when he had started to go and his auntie had called him back, he saw, peeping through at him, a yellow nasturtium. It seemed to say: "I can put my head through the fence, too." The next morning there were two of them, and then a cluster of pink verbenas.

The big man's morning-glory vine put a tendril through and then decided to do all its growing on the boy's side of the fence! Soon the petunias came also, and a pansy. Every little picket space was a gate to let a lovely flower through. The little boy's yard grew beautiful, and he clasped his hands with delight as he touched each blossom with a little loving finger.

One day he put his head through the broken picket, and it seemed to him that the big man's yard looked dark and deserted. The blossoms had all come through to his side. It seemed as though the old man's grunt and the "thump, thump" of his cane had frightened them all away, just as it had the little boy himself.

The little boy felt very sad. Then he looked up, and there was the big man, leaning on his cane and looking at him. He started to jump back, but the big man motioned to him to stop where he was.

"I see I've lost my flowers," he said gruffly, though somehow it didn't sound gruff to the little boy who felt so sorry. "I want you to tell me why. What have you done to coax them over there?"

"I—I haven't done anything but love them," the little boy stammered. "I guess it's sunnier over here. They like lots of sunshine."

"I guess you're right. I guess you're right," the big man said thoughtfully. "A little sunshine wouldn't hurt on this side, too. The flowers all crawled through to your side; supposing you crawl through to this side and see if they will follow you back. I shouldn't wonder if the sunshine really had been on the wrong side of the fence. How would you like to be my little boy?"

"Are—are you a good make-believer?" the little boy asked tremulously, as he began to crawl.

"I don't know. What do you think about it sonny?" And the little boy decided that he must be, because the man's grunt always had sounded so ferocious. Why, it really wasn't fierce at all!—Maud M. Hughey, in The Continent.

SERVED HIM RIGHT.

Senator Hughes, of New Jersey, was worried to distraction by the importunities of a person who had a grievance against the Interior Department.

The senator called up Secretary Lane, who had been worried by the same person.

"Will you listen to his story?" asked Hughes over the telephone.

"I will not," Lane replied.

"Well, then," urged Hughes desperately, "will you appoint some one to hear the story?"

"Yes," answered Secretary Lane. "I appoint you," and he rang off—Catholic Telegraph.

GRATITUDE.

A psalm which cultivates the spirit of gratitude is a psalm which we ought often to read. If we were more grateful, both our joy and our strength would be increased. Gratitude is born in hearts which take the time to count up past mercies. If we cannot sing about them, we can at least think about them. Thinking about them is a means of grace. Meditating on God's dealings begets in us a spirit of humility. It cultivates a feeling of dependence and trustfulness which is a fountain of joy and strength.—Charles E. Jefferson

This pleasure-seeking age is by no means a pleasure-finding age. The joy of life and the duty of life should be mutual complements and comparisons.—Viscount Grey.

Editorial

THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

On November 16—just a week after the convening of the Louisiana Annual Conference—the North Mississippi Annual Conference will meet at Amory, Bishop W. F. McMurry presiding. If we mistake not, this is the first time this prosperous and attractive little city has played the host to this notable gathering, but we are assured that a hospitality will be shown such as will make it a pleasure to look forward to another meeting in the same community. The pastor, Rev. E. R. Smoot, assisted by the membership of the church and the citizens of the town generally, irrespective of church affiliations, will make it a delightful occasion for all those who are fortunate enough to be in attendance.

While it is probably true that the time is coming when these annual gatherings of the church will be held in some central place, where hotel accommodations are ample and where provision will be made for paying the expenses of the delegates, no preacher who has ever attended one can forget the blessedness of a Conference session where the hearts and homes of the people were open to receive these workers in the Kingdom as guests honored and beloved. The intimate association thus made possible has been a blessing to the community and Conference alike, and not infrequently has it happened that forces were set in motion in hearts and homes that will tell for good in eternity. It is chiefly for this reason, perhaps, that there is still strong opposition to any other method of entertaining a Conference.

The North Mississippi is one of our strongest Conferences in personnel and in resources. Embracing a portion of the State that is economically productive, it has made large material progress, and, in spite of recent financial disturbances, in which all sections of the country have shared, indications are that it will be able to make a good report on the financial side. Evangelistic work has been actively carried on during the year, and it is probable that the reports of the pastors will show a fine net increase in the membership of the church. Altogether, this promises to be an interesting and profitable session of the Conference. A full report of its proceedings will appear in the Advocate.

THE LAMBUTH MEMORIAL SERVICE.

We call attention again to the memorial service to be held in honor of the late Bishop W. R. Lambuth next Sunday. A general observance of it throughout the church will be a fitting tribute to a man who achieved a world-wide reputation as an ecclesiastical statesman, but who, more than that, gave his life in indefatigable efforts to extend the Kingdom of God to the uttermost parts of the earth, and the influence of whose apostolic labors will be felt for decades to come.

THE FINAL PULL.

Every year in almost every charge in Southern Methodism there is a hard final pull to bring up all collections in full, in order that pastors may go to Conference able to report that the churches have met their financial obligations. It is altogether to the credit of our people that these efforts are so largely successful, and that year by year the number of charges that pay all claims in full is increasing.

But it would be better if the larger part of this strenuous work could be spread over the Conference year, so that preachers and people would not be subjected to the nervous strain they have to endure at its close. That it can be so distributed we have not the least doubt, if official boards and congregations would agree in the beginning of the year that a business-like system be followed month by month. The budget is usually fixed within the first few months of the Conference year, and it is fully known what obligations will have to be met in order to have a clean sheet at the end. In some cases there are reasons why the bulk of the collections will have to be secured in the fall, but in many instances the "pay-as-you-go" plan could be followed. In fact, this plan is already in operation in an encouragingly large number of charges, and its advantages are so obvious as to make it desirable everywhere. It would be a distinct gain throughout the connection if the last few weeks of the year could be devoted to intensive evangelistic efforts instead of a hard drive to raise money.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Plans are under way to erect a new $40,000 church at Canton, Miss., Rev. H. A. Gatlin, pastor.

We greatly regret being out of the office one day last week when Dr. C. W. Crisler, of Jackson, Miss., called.

A report in the secular press states that there were 104 additions to the church during the recent meeting conducted by Rev. D. E. Kelley at Vivian, La.

Mrs. E. J. Guice, of Hamburg, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate states that the paper has been coming to her home since she was a child.

Dr. A. J. Weeks, editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, declares that Dallas is one of the greatest Methodist centers in the world, and that potentially it is the greatest.

The work of the church in New Orleans has met with gratifying success this year. The reports of the various pastors at Conference will show marked progress in many directions.

November 13-19 will be observed throughout the United States and Canada as a Week of Prayer for Young Men, this being an annual custom of the Young Men's Christian Association.

A small fire, of undetermined origin, in the home of Rev. W. C. Childress, superintendent of missions in this city, resulted in the loss last week of a considerable amount of wearing apparel and bed clothing.

Dr. Briscoe Carter, our pastor at Minden, La., was in New Orleans last week to attend a meeting of the legal Conference of the Louisiana Annual Conference. He was elected president, to succeed the lamented Dr. J. M. Henry.

According to a statement in the "Big Brother," only two other churches in North Mississippi have had as many additions to the church during the past four years as Greenville, Greenwood and Clarksdale being the other churches named.

The School Board of Hattiesburg, Miss., has issued a statement in which it expresses the determination to eliminate from the school system those teachers and pupils who persist in attending dances to the detriment of the school work.

Rochester Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y., has installed a course in Religious Publicity. The course will be given by Dr. Charles A. McAlpine, whose work in the field of religious publicity has been well known for several years.

Rev. J. Early Gray, of Magnolia, Miss., says: "We are ready for Conference so far as the business side is concerned, but we hope to add more souls to the Kingdom before the year closes." The membership of our church at Magnolia is, by far, the largest it has ever been.

At the fourth quarterly conference of the Kosciusko station, North Mississippi Conference, resolutions were passed asking for the return for the fifth year of the pastor, Rev. E. H. Cunningham, and for the reappointment of the presiding elder, Rev. A. T. McIlwain, to the Columbus District.

The editor will be absent from his office during most of the next two weeks in attendance upon the Louisiana Conference, of which he is a member, and the North Mississippi Conference. Correspondents will understand, therefore, why he may not be able to give prompt attention to communications coming into the office.

As had been surmised, Dr. S. H. Werlein, whose transfer to the Los Angeles Conference was announced some weeks ago, was appointed to the presiding eldership of the Los Angeles District. He will not leave for his new field of labor until after the session of the Louisiana Conference, of which he has been a distinguished member, and of which he is host this year.

Mr. W. D. Hawkins, the very efficient Centenary Secretary-Treasurer of the Mississippi Conference, recently attended as a delegate the national convention of the Junior Order, of which he is a prominent member, all his expenses being paid by that organization. The Board of Missions gave him a leave of absence and urged him to take advantage of the opportunity to make such a fine trip.

We regret to learn that Mrs. H. M. Ellis, wife of the presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, has recently been seriously ill with pneumonia, Brother Ellis having to be at her bedside constantly. We are delighted to know that she is now greatly improved and will soon be able to sit up. Mrs. Herring and Mrs. John A. Ellis, daughter and daughter-in-law, respectively, of Brother and Sister Ellis, both from Memphis, Tenn., are with them.

The Ad Interim Committee of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, met in Brookhaven recently and, after due examination in the prescribed course and prayerful consideration, granted license to preach to Oliver Hamilton Scott, recommended from the Fernwood charge and now attending Millsaps College, and Albert Thomas Long, recommended from the Summit charge and living on his farm near Pisgah church. This gives the Brookhaven District three new preachers this year.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: B. F. Goza, Magnolia, Miss., 3; Rev. E. A. King, Benton, Miss., 2; Rev. W. E. Akin, Jena, La., 2; Rev. L. A. Darsey, Ocean Springs, Miss., 3; Rev. A. J. Boyles, Hattiesburg, Miss., 13; Rev. W. N. Duncan, Drew, Miss., 5.

TO THE PASTORS AND CENTENARY TREASURERS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Co-workers: If you have not already sent in your Centenary report, please do so at once, in order that we may be able to give your church proper percentage on the chart we are preparing for Annual Conference. Please send remittances for all you have on hand, or if you have deposited in the bank, please send in duplicate deposit slips showing name of church and charge, so that we may draw the money, and give your church credit, and include it in this month's report. This is very important, and we trust that each of you will see that your report is in, showing the amount collected for the church of which you are treasurer.

We hope the collections this month will put us in the fifth place, and we are going to ask that every one help so that we may reach that goal. Collect all you can between now and the 18th, and send it in on that day, so it will be included in the chart.

Thanking you, one and all, for the interest you have taken in the Centenary this year, we remain,

Yours for service,

W. D. HAWKINS,

Conference Centenary Treasurer.

DIGGING FOR GOLD IN KOREA.

By Rev. R. S. Stewart, D. D

IV.

One of the picturesque characters of the Korean Church is Yu Moksa. He was a high official under the old government and a favorite of the Emperor. He is now a Southern Methodist evangelist who since last September has organized about 50 new churches in as many villages, and who has made over 4000 converts within the past seven months. His personality is winsome, his character unassailable and his ministry apostolic.

Christianity had a very inhospitable reception from him at the first. He drove away the first Christian worker who approached him. He had the police to bind and intimidate the next one that came to his house, but finally he listened to the Christian preaching, and yielded to Christ. About eight years ago he came into the experience of entire sanctification and is a witness and a preacher of the "grand depositum of Methodism." He has a zeal for the kingdom, a love for God, and a burden for souls which is consuming.

The biography of this man would exert the charm of a romance. The former court days when he was an intimate and favorite courtier of the old Emperor; his resistance against Christianity until the final triumph of the Christ in his life; his gracious baptism with the Holy Ghost; his persecution and imprisonment by the police; and now his remarkable ministry of evangelism—all of these conditions surround the life of this man with a most vivid interest.

Last year he was accused by the police of being a revolutionary. He was taken to prison and was beaten severely with rods at several different times. Several of his teeth were knocked out by the police in their efforts to force certain statements which they wanted to hear. But this kind of treatment has not been extraordinary in Korea. The extraordinary thing is that Yu Moksa came out of it all "without the smell of fire upon him." I have been associated with him for days, heard him recount his experiences and listened to him preach a number of times. But not once have I detected any note of vindictiveness in his utterance or seen the shadow of resentment upon his face.

He was in prison for three months, after which he was released because of the impossibility of sustaining the charges against him. But imprisoned with him were eleven others who were not Christians. The preacher did not forget that he was God's minister. He preached the gospel to these eleven and each of them was converted. Then a Bible school was established in the jail and in three months time he took the eleven through the New Testament and as far as the Acts of the Apostles the second time before his release came. He is instant in season and out of season. One occasion several of us climbed up into a pear tree which was an object of idolatrous worship in a remote mountain spot, and we were waiting for a camera to be arranged for a picture. Yu Moksa was one of the number in the tree. A Korean stopped by the wayside and regarded us fearfully as we encroached upon the devil of the pear tree. But the evangelist began to exhort him about his soul while we were waiting for the picture to be taken. The man was convicted and followed our company several hours that day to hear more. May God grant that he shall walk in the light.

The special work at present undertaken by this man is in the small villages where the message has not been preached before. He has a tent which in America would seat about 75 people, but which accommodates over 200 in Korea. His party consists of a singer, Bible woman, colporteur and the local pastor and Bible woman. Besides this, two of our missionaries usually accompany the party.

The evangelist is a master of ridicule and soon has his audience laughing at themselves as he shows up the absurdities of their ancestor worship and superstition. He inveighs against drunkenness, gambling and concubinage with the spirit of John the Baptist. Then he presents Jesus. The sermon closes and the personal workers, including the preacher, charge into the congregation to make a direct appeal to every person there. The baby organ presided over by Miss Jackson, comes into its own, and the Korean musician blows his flute. This holds the congregation steady and erects a barrage for the personal workers to operate under. The first tune I heard them play was Dixie. Perhaps Miss Jackson used it to keep within the range of flutists' repertoire; or perhaps it was because it takes something fast to keep pace with the Korean revival. At any rate it has remained for the Koreans to discover that "Dixie" is great music for multitudes to march into the Kingdom of God by.

At about midnight the service is over and the evangelist calls to the front all of those who have decided to believe. Ordinarily about one out of five accept the proposition. This gives a group of from 25 to 40 adults, and they are immediately organized by the election of class leaders. A place for regular worship is arranged for, and then after a special prayer the congregation departs homeward along toward one o'clock in the morning. The village sleeps, but the most momentous event in all its centuries of history has transpired that night, an event as momentous as Bethlehem and Calvary. Yesterday these people were in sin and without the power to extricate themselves; now "to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up."

These groups are at once included in regular circuits and their pastoral care begins. Several from each group are invited up to Songdo, which means "Jerusalem" in Korea, and they are there trained in Bible and Methodism, while they are held close to Pentecostal fires for three weeks. In this way classes of about sixty persons have been trained each month and sent back to their villages enriched in heart and head and prepared to be stack poles for the other new believers to lean up against. One thing that, to me, is full of grave concern is that this stack pole factory at Songdo is about to shut down for lack of funds. I trust that in some way the money may be forthcoming for the continuance of this work, which is necessary to the proper establishment of the revival.

But let us pursue the evangelistic band and overtake it if we can. The tent has been sent on to another village where it will be erected for the night service. But in the meantime the party has gone to a village where a group was organized a week earlier. An appointment has been made for all to gather in the forenoon to have a group picture taken. While we are waiting for the arrangements the group packs into a small room, sings a hymn, prays and listens to an exhortation from Yu Moksa. Before the service an old grandfather was seated by my side. Brother Stokes asked him, "Do you have peace?" "Who am I to have peace?" was the reply. After the prayer service was over the old gentleman again spoke to Brother Stokes. This time his eyes dimmed with tears as he said, "I understand now how it is possible for even me to get to heaven." Another man on the outside declared that he also had decided to become a Christian. Thus, a gathering to have a picture taken was an occasion for evangelism and for God's blessed Spirit to bring peace and courage to hearts. And the work goes on supported by the money and prayers of the Centenary.

COURT STREET CHURCH, HATTIESBURG, MISS., BURNED.

Just as we were closing the forms on Tuesday, we received the following note from Rev. C. M. Crossley:

"Court Street Church was destroyed by fire yesterday noon, November 6. It is a great misfortune coming just at this season of the year. Our congregation is already arranging for temporary quarters. Of course we expect to rebuild at once."

We extend sympathy to this fine pastor and congregation in the misfortune that has overtaken them. We feel sure, however, that a greater church will rise from the ruins of the old.

WHAT YOUR NAME MEANS.

"We had the jolliest time at Arthur's house," said Richie. "His brother George showed us our names in the back of the big dictionary and read what each one means. Ours are ever so nice, better than Winifred's and Arthur's, even. What is mine, Dorothy?"

"Richard means 'rich-hearted' or 'generous.' Dorothy is 'gift of God.' Arthur means 'high' or 'noble.' Winifred is 'lover of peace.' George says that is why she always feels so sorry. If we quarrel."

"George's name is right, too," spoke up Richie. "It means a sort of farmer, and you know George wants to have a big ranch when he is a man. Do names mean just what the dictionary says, mother? Some of the meanings are so queer."

Mother smiled. "It is interesting to know what one's name is supposed to represent, and a fine-meaning name may help us to be the fine, kindly person that makes it true. But the meaning we ourselves give to our names is more important than what stands after them in the dictionary. According to the dictionary, Elmer is a name that means 'noble,' just as Arthur does. I have met several strong, true gentlemen who bore that name, but I still have a dislike for it because the first Elmer I knew was a mean, cowardly, untruthful, bullying boy."

"How did you come to choose our names?" asked Dorothy.

"The dictionary meaning helped us to decide on yours, because neither your papa nor I had known any Dorothy especially well, but you don't need to ask where Richie got his. Uncle Richard has made that one of the most beautiful names in the world to everybody that knows him. Most people received the names we have because some other George or Tom or Alice or Katherine or Dorothy was so good and kind that our parents hoped their sweet new baby would grow to be like that boy or girl or man or woman. One's name is a very special treasure, you see."

"I should say it is!" exclaimed Richie. "I hope I'll never spoil Uncle Richard's name for anybody. I'd like to make some mamma want to give her little boy the same name because I've helped to make it sound pleasant to her."—Mary S. Stover, in Child's Gem.

On the 11th day of August, 1921, at his home near Holly Springs, Miss., the spirit of J. R. B. COOPER quietly passed away. For months he had waited with courage and patience for this event, and was ready. His body was laid away in the family cemetery near his home, in the community where he was born and where he had spent his entire life. The large company of friends who attended the funeral services, conducted by Rev. W. W. Bruner and Rev. W. R. Lott, attested the esteem in which he was universally held in his own and adjoining communities.

Converted in early life, Brother Cooper united with the Methodist Church, was called to the office of steward at eighteen years of age, and for forty-two years he served faithfully and efficiently in this important position, having missed in the entire time only three quarterly conferences. While taking a responsible part in all affairs of interest in his community and county, he was best known as a church man and Christian. His relationship to everything was determined by his relationship to God. His personal life was in keeping with this principle. He loved God and he loved his fellow-men.

While positive in his convictions, and aggressive in maintaining right principles, he was never harsh or intolerant. He possessed to a striking degree the virtues of modesty and gentleness without being weak and negative. Never seeking position or preferment, he did not shirk or shrink from responsibility. With an attractive and pleasing personality, willing and efficient in service, uncompromising in principle, consistent in character, it is not strange that he was called upon to bear burdens and execute trusts. These responsibilities he accepted as honors, and carried with fidelity and pleasure to himself and others. His wife and children looked to him for strength and guidance, and were not disappointed. To them he was the model husband and father. The wife feels utterly bereft without him. The sons and daughters all, while deprived of his personal presence and spoken counsel, are patterning their lives after his. His church and community miss his gracious influence and helpful service. All of his acquaintances have lost a friend. Nevertheless his life and influence will live through the years.

Truly has it been said, "A good man is the ripe fruit our earth holds up to God."

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of respect passed by the Missionary Society, Methodist Church, Grenada, Miss.:

There entered into rest September 24, 1921, one of our dear ones, LUCY KENDALL, wife of Dr. J. M. Williams. This elect lady, whose earthly life almost spanned a century, gave her heart to God when she was seventeen years old and her life for eighty years was a precious and active influence for good in her church and community. A woman of great faith and deep piety, she was daily concerned about her Master's work, the spiritual uplift of the world and the salvation of souls, to the end of her simple, trustful, beautiful life. To such, "There is no death. What seems so is transition."

Mrs. Williams united with the Missionary Society soon after its organization in 1885. Though a "shut-in" for years, she gave to the work loving sympathy and material aid.

Therefore be it resolved, That the church, the Missionary Society and her children have lost in her one whose name stood for faith, hope, love.

Resolved, That we cherish the memory of our ascended sister and strive to emulate her example as a beacon light.

Resolved, That we extend to the family sympathy, rejoicing with them in the example and training of a godly mother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Missionary Society, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed by: Mrs. Ed Payne, Mrs. W. W. Woollard, Mrs. R. A. Tucker, Committee.

THE MUCH NEEDED CHANGE.

Dear Doctor: There have been many suggestions made as to changes in our great church. I am mighty well pleased with it myself. I think it the very best church in the world to-day. We don't need many changes. We need peace and brotherly love. Our doctrines are Biblical. Our polity is workable and makes for efficiency.

There is one change that ought to be made, and that is in the BLANKS for the Reports of Pastors to the Annual Conference. These should be changed so as to include the name of each individual church and the statistics for each church in a pastoral charge. This would help our rural work very much:

1. It would appeal to the pride of the individual church. When Ebenezer, Bethel and Shiloh all paid in full, Palestine would be ashamed not to come up in full.

2. It would fix the responsibility where it belongs, and there would be no chance for a church to hide when it failed.

3. Then it would make for accuracy in our reports, especially in the reports of our membership.

4. It will provide for our new work of Centenary and Christian Education by individual churches. It will stimulate payments on these.

5. It will be a great help to the presiding elders, pastors, and others in studying new fields to which they may be assigned, or in which they may be interested.

6. Other denominations report by individual churches.

These and other reasons might be given to show the need.

The only objection that I know that could be offered against it is that it would cost more and make our Conference Journal too large and bulky.

It would not make as much difference as might be imagined in either.

It would be well worth the extra cost, and it would be of interest to every member of our great church. Let our delegates to the General Conference take notice.

Yours sincerely,
J. B. RANDOLPH.

FROM LUCEDALE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Our first year at Lucedale is drawing to a close and I will send in a few words concerning the work.

Our people seem interested, and the spiritual condition of the church is improving. We have had a number of conversions and have taken about forty into the church this year.

Our Sunday school, Woman's Missionary Society, and Epworth League are fairly well organized and are doing very good work.

Rev. J. L. Miller, assisted by C. R. Loney, conducted our revival. They did most excellent work and were a blessing to the entire town and surrounding country.

Brother Landrum conducted our meeting at Shipman, and his work was very much appreciated and it is bearing fruit in the Sunday school and in other ways.

Dr. Cooper was with us on last Sunday and gave us three inspiring messages. He is a man who wins both young and old of all denominations.

Our church building has been improved both in appearance and accommodation. It has had an addition of fourteen Sunday school rooms and a Sunday school auditorium. Both it and the parsonage are wearing a dress of new paint.

We expect a good report at Conference.

SOME PROBLEMS OF PASTORS.

Dear Brother Carley: Very often during our experiences as pastors we are made to wonder what is the idea of loyalty and their duty to their pastor that some people have. They seem to have absolutely no idea of what loyalty to their church and their duty to their pastor is. They seem to have the idea that the pastor does not deserve any consideration whatever.

I have known of churches who have employed some one from outside of the bounds of their work and also outside of their church to come and hold services in their church without the knowledge and consent of the pastor. They would pay this outside man for this service and grumble at the same time and say that the church had assessed them too much. I have known of their boasting of the fact that they had paid these outside men almost as much as they did the pastor. Then I have known of these churches to ask for less time in order that they might reduce their assessment for ministerial support while they were having some man to come 25 or 30 miles to hold services for them on the days they did not have service. Is it natural to suppose that these men will go to the expense and trouble of making such trips from once to twice a month for accommodation? I think not.

If we could get our people to read our Discipline and find that no one has a right to enter our churches and hold service without the knowledge or consent of the pastor, it would relieve the situation. However, this does not seem to be possible, as it is a very rare thing to find a Discipline in the home of one of our members. They do not seem to think it is worth while to go to this expense and trouble.

The trouble with these fellows is the fact that they are not members of our church and know nothing about the law and polity of our church and care less. This makes it impossible for the pastor to get the redress he could get if they were members of our church. He cannot invoke the law of our church, for they are not amenable to our law. The question naturally arises, what is the remedy for such a case? I think it is for the presiding elder to be open to approach by his preachers with the assurance that they can rest assured of his co-operation and sympathy and that he will help them to solve their problems. Then when people begin to make such requests of the P. E., he should go into the matter thoroughly and find out why they are making it and if he finds something of this kind behind the request, absolutely refuse to grant it.

I am aware of the fact that our church has always been noted for its broad-mindedness and liberality. Is there not danger of our being too liberal and broad-minded? I think that we have suffered more from this than anything else. People seem to think that a Methodist church is free to any one that comes along. A few years ago while pastor in a certain town a man that was a member of one of the denominations that had churches in town, came and asked for the use of my church. I asked why he did not go to his own church; he said they said they could not let him have their church. I turned him down flat and he did not like it. The next day an officer of this church wanted to know why I did not let him hold service in my church. I asked, "Why did you not let him hold service in your church?" He said they had a rule in their local church not to let any one they knew nothing about hold service in their church, but it has always been the practice of our church to let any one hold forth in it. I answered, "Well, as long as I am pastor of the Methodist Church in this town, this will not be the case."

Situations sometimes arise where the pastor cannot handle the matter without hurt to himself, but the P. E. could handle them and do no damage. If the pastor takes hold, some will side with the outside man and against the pastor, as they will invariably cry "persecution."

AN ITINERANT.

FROM FAYETTE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Our Fourth Quarterly Conference was held on October 24. Our presiding elder, J. R. Jones, was present and in his usual happy frame of mind dispatched business in a religious way: this is as it should be. The written reports which were furnished by each and every department were very encouraging. This church to date has raised $4296 on all claims.

We are yet a little behind, but we are assured of a full report. An old debt of long standing on the parsonage has been paid. This is due largely to the W. M. Society, led and inspired by the pastor. Now let's stand and sing "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." Our pastor, C. P. Jones, has eaten no idle bread. He has been instant in season and out of season. He has been in great demand in other sections for revival and evangelistic services, for which he has natural gifts. We are beginning to feel just a little uneasy for fear some presiding elder or bishop will want to swap for him. But let this be as it may, whoever gets him will be fortunate; and whoever gets this charge (Fayette), will be fortunate. He will find a well organized work and good people to serve—no church or parsonage debts to handicap him. He can give his full time to preaching, and other ministerial duties.

W. W. CAMMACK.

FROM BOYLE, MISS.

Dear Advocate: Boyle, Miss., is in Bolivar County, the richest county in the State. It makes more cotton than any other county in the United States, and has more big-hearted people to the square inch than any other county in the world. Boyle charge is located in the heart of Bolivar County. We have a nice little brick church and one of the nicest parsonages in the Conference.

The word "fail" is a word that this people know nothing about. They took care of their Centenary quota with about $2500 to spare. Then the cotton market went to the bad last year with the education drive on, but they provided for their quota. Then came our revival meeting. The preaching was done by Rev. W. C. Swope, one of our general evangelists. We had a great meeting. People were converted from five years old to 65. One person joined the Methodist Church 65 years old. We have had 75 conversions this year and 90 accessions to the church. As an appreciation of the service of Brother Swope and his loving daughter who led the music, we gave him a check for $415. I am now ready for Conference, and will say, "Everything in full, Bishop." C. A. NORTHINGTON, P. C.

For the Future of the Church

The future of Methodism depends upon the future of Christian Education in the Church.

From the days of Wesley until now—in every Nation under the sun—it has achieved its triumphs and advances only as it maintained institutions of learning. Its whole genius and history attests that the Church must Educate or die

Otherwise its leadership will fail. There will be no workers for pulpit or for mission field. The world's thought will be dominated by ideals that are not Christian. Ours will be a "hard shell" Church—relegated to the rear—consigned to the ranks of every sect on earth which has not educated.

We Face a Crisis Now

Today our colleges are in danger. Crowded to the utmost limit of capacity, turning away students from their doors, pressed by soaring prices—nearly all of them now make a life or death appeal to the Church.

In a wonderful way the Methodists have rallied—pledging many millions to insure that Christian Education shall not perish from the earth. And when these pledges are materialized it will be a new era for the Church.

Have you paid the Christian Education Pledge? The first installment on nearly all the subscriptions is now due. Make the payment to your Church collector now. Or send a check at once to your Conference Educational Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

On the fifth Sunday there were three Circuit Institutes held. At the Homewood, Rev. B. F. Lewis represented the Board. At the Harrisville, Mr. O. C. Hull represented the Board, and at the Scotland. At the time of writing, I have not received the Homewood Institute. I am sure their meeting was in keeping with the other meetings of this charge.

Mr. Hull reported a very fine meeting for the Harrisville circuit. All the schools did not reach the goals set at the last session of the institute.

Unimpeachable—If you were to see the unequalled volume of unimpeachable testimony in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla, you would upbraid yourself for so long delaying to take this effective medicine for that blood disease from which you are suffering.—Adv.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots. Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion. Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

they assumed the old goals again, and set some new ones. I think, perhaps, this was the best of the four on the Harrisville charge. The Scotland Institute was well attended. The reports showed progress, and the goals adopted, if carried out, will mean much to the life of the church on that charge. They pledged themselves to put on a campaign for Tithing, Sabbath Observance, Daily Bible Reading, and Family Prayer.

I spent four days with the Rexford people, giving two lectures a day on Sunday school work, and preached twice a day. I feel that this school will do better work. The school was re-organized, a cradle roll put in operation, Beginners' graded literature ordered, a Primary Class organized and agreement for better records and for better equipment and arrangement of the church.

I am anxious that every charge in the Conference do something in teacher training. The Sunday School Board stands ready to help, and furnish teachers, whenever application is made for them. I hope each pastor will put this in his plan for next year. Nothing will take the place of trained workers. Willingness goes a long way, but willingness without training is apt to bring disaster.

May we pray earnestly over this important matter of training our workers for the work? Sunday School Day has not panned out as well, so far, as we had hoped. Will you help us out, by at least taking an offering, and sending it in before the session of the Annual Conference?

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Lynda Ramey, Conf. Elementary Supt.

Dr. Betts in his most valuable book, "How to Teach Religion," reminds us of the three types of teachers. Which are we making and why? "One to be forgiven after years of antagonisms and resentments; the other to be thought of with honor and gratitude, as long as memory lasts. Between these two is a third and larger group; those who are forgotten because they failed to stamp a lasting impression on their pupils."

To which group can we belong?

There is open to all of us a training course that we may be better prepared for the task that comes our way, and better work in accord with the "laws of growth." What advantage do trained teachers have? What advantage does any person with training have? There is no one of us, no matter where, but has the possibility of growth, as an individual or as a group.

The Tula Sunday school, sixteen miles inland, has built four new Sunday school rooms. They are making plans for a Teacher Training class. Our rural children can be given their rightful heritage.

The Potts Camp, sub-district of the Corinth District, has a key woman in every Sunday school except one, and very likely one there by now.

Reports of the appointing of key women are coming in from all the districts, also the reports from the one-room churches. Do you know how those one-room churches predominate in our Conference? Are we giving enough thought to the children that are with us now?

These glorious autumnal days are registering their calls with many Sunday school classes and departments, giving opportunity for the social provision of the Sunday school. There have been many nuttings, hikes and camp fires for the Juniors and Young People.

There is at Clarksdale this week a Teacher Training class in "Learning and Teaching," the second book usually taken in the Standard Training course.

Four certificates in Teacher Training have been recently sent out to the Toccopola Sunday school.

The Houston Teacher Training class were said, by the Department of Teacher Training, to have made an exceptionally good showing of work and were rewarded accordingly. According to recent hearings they are putting into practice some of the gleanings and also planning to go on with the course.

Every Sunday school will have been reached and asked for some kind of report before the meeting of General Conference. Will the report for next year be nearer the goal of higher standard?

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE NOTES.

Remember, the pastor's report on Sunday schools furnishes the church and world with its statistics; therefore, I request of you that you get every figure correct and leave no space blank.

If during the year you have enrolled with the Teacher Department a class in your church which was studying one of the regular courses, please report it. Until we have a better system of making reports of our training classes we can do no better.

The enrollment of your school should be the total number of pupils who were on your roll since your last annual report to Conference. To report those who are attending the last few Sundays only, fails to number many who were benefited by the schools. The annual enrollment of the public school is made in the same way.

A class of intermediates and those older are called a "Wesley Bible Class" when they have certificates from the Department at Nashville, and only such should be reported in that space.

The Teacher-training Class for the city of New Orleans, which is the product of the New Orleans District Sunday school organization, is doing the kind of work much needed. Miss Cora Perkins, of Louisiana Avenue Church, is District Superintendent of Teacher Training, and Dr. H. T. Carley is teacher of the class.

These are the last "notes" for this Conference year, and I must thank the presiding elders, pastors and Sunday school superintendents, the district officers, and all who have helped us in our work. May the blessings of God be upon you.

with the conventional one, "In God we trust." The introduction of the letter "I" raised such consternation that the issue had to be remelted and restamped. There are a few sticklers who believe that the cause of religion would break up into small fragments if we did not have the name of God on our coins, whereas in the present state of the world it is more of an insult to God to have the holy name there than it is an honor. We are glad to admit that some coins are used to honor God, but it is one coin in about twenty. A generous estimate that. The truth is, the man who was responsible for the typographical error on the gold coins in San Francisco was a great deal nearer the truth than the man who put the conventional inscription on them. As a nation, we are trusting in gold rather than God. We are spending our money for that which is not bread.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

WESLEY MEMORIAL CHARGE.

Wesley Memorial charge is, perhaps, more nearly missionary ground than any other charge in Mississippi. The charge has two church buildings (neither dedicated), two church organizations, two Sunday schools, and two prayer meetings.

Wesley Memorial Church is located on a lot at Wesley House—Beach, Cedar and First streets, Biloxi, Miss. The head deaconess, Miss Lois Tinsley, of Wesley House, superintends our Sunday school of over 100 pupils here. The church, the Wesley House, and the Sunday school are doing a great work among the foreigners—Austrians, French and Italians, and the oyster factory people, some of whom are native Americans. The Woman's Council has a fine plant, and it keeps a splendid corps of workers. Misses Tinsley and Chapman have each been here about three years, and I believe it would be difficult to find workers or women who could or would do a greater work than they are doing. The Council has exercised wisdom in their selection and retention. Misses Hoover and Martin have recently come, and it can be expected that they will also do a fine work.

venir Protestant church of Mississippi, being within 400 yards of the stone boulder that marks the landing place of d'Iberville and the starting place of the first white settlement of Mississippi.

As pastor, it seems that our progress has been marvelous. We began our Sunday school and preaching services in January, in a room 12x12, at the home of Brother and Sister T. E. Seal. We outgrew this at once, then outgrew a larger room; through the liberality of Dr. B. Z. Welch, we rented a dance hall on the race track road; then, through the liberality of hundreds of people all over the State, and especially of Dr. Welch (he giving the land), and Brother L. N. Dantzer (giving the lumber), we have built a nice little church with a seating capacity of 250.

We have recently organized a church, and now have 48 members. We have enrolled 65 in our Sunday school. We are using our church and using the lumber left over for seats. We also have organized a Woman's Missionary Society. We believe God will give us the money for the seats. The work has been done by putting our faith in God, and keeping our feet in the road. I have walked to my work, the charge not owning a home or a horse for the preacher. This field is interesting in historical facts. We place the corner-stone on Nov. 20.

WALDO W. MOORE, P. C.

FROM STARKVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We are in the midst of a wonderful revival in our church here. Dr. H. D. Knieker, pastor, our pastor at Wichita Falls, Texas, is doing the preaching, and his assistant, E. C. Huckabee, is leading the singing. The meeting started last Sunday, and in the very first service we had a number of conversions. The meeting has been running but five days, and we have already had between 170 and 180 conversions. The meeting will continue until the middle of next week, and we are working and praying for 500 conversions. We are holding the evening services in the A. and M. College auditorium, and scores of the college boys have already been converted. We are working and praying to the end that all of the 1500 boys in the college shall be Christians before the meeting closes. Pray for us.

Cordially and sincerely,

T. M. BROWNLEE.

FROM NOXAPATER, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I wish to give a report of my work for the year. Noxapater circuit is moving along very nicely. I had some very fine meetings on the work, with 71 additions to date, a good Sunday school at each appointment, and I have organized one Epworth League with 25 members, and it is moving off nicely. Our young people are taking hold of the work. We also have a Junior Missionary Society, doing fine, with two Woman's Missionary Societies on the charge.

We did fairly well with the Educational drive. We did not get our quota, but the subscription went beyond my expectation.

I held four meetings away from my charge, and had help in three of my meetings. I am now trying to get ready for Conference. I hope to meet you there. Yours very truly,

J. A. GOAD.

SUNDAY READING.

A minister who was supplying a pulpit not his own was entertained in the home of one of the prominent members of the church. The conditions of the home life impressed him deeply; and although he was careful not to disclose anything that could identify the family, he referred to the Sunday spent in their home as among the dearest and least profitable in his whole experience.

The family, straggling down to breakfast Sunday morning, brought with them the gossip acquired at various places on Saturday night. Two of them had been to the theater, one had been to a party, most of them had been out late. More than one of the household began the day with a headache.

On the breakfast table there were three Sunday newspapers. On these the different members of the family pounced, and were soon hidden behind them.

Only the father and the mother went to church; the young people were "too tired," and did not care to dress.

After the morning service the minister found the newspapers well shaken out and scattered. There was hardly a chair that did not contain one or more parts of one or another of them.

After the Sunday dinner the papers were seized again, and creased and creased in the weary quest for new sensations.

The home had a good library, but no member of the family opened a book that day. The library had the poems of Whittier, Lowell, Longfellow and Holmes, as well as those of Shakespeare and Tennyson, but no member of the family read one of them, much less any distinctively religious book.

The hymn book on the piano lay under a trashy song that came with one of the newspapers. The family Bible on the center table was buried deep beneath the so-called "comic supplements."

The whole atmosphere of the home all day was commonplace, worldly and depressing. There was nothing that lifted the thoughts of the members of the family above the wearisome round of the world and the things of the world. Business, politics, scandals and bargains were the themes of conversation. The three secular newspapers, each with its sixty-four pages, covered not only the seats, tables and carpets; they covered the spiritual life of the family as well.

Without questioning the morality of such a Sunday, what may we not say of the pity of it? Is the soul of man so mean, so sordid, that not one hour or one day in the week can be saved for an acquaintance with the better things of literature and of life, and for the higher ministrations of the spirit? ANNUAL REPORT OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY, FIRST CHURCH, COLUMBUS, MISS., TO THE FOURTH QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

In presenting this report I would call attention to the fact that it represents eleven months' work, since the Conference year is from December to December.

The Missionary Society is closing a successful and hence a busy and useful year. The routine work has been carried on with an interest on the part of many heretofore unknown. This is the ninth year that we have supported a Bible Woman in Brazil and we are encouraged by the quarterly reports that come to us regularly. For six years it cost us $60 per year to keep her, but since that time the amount has been doubled. Three years ago, we began clothing Neva Cade, a little fatherless and motherless girl in our orphanage at Jackson. Each spring and fall, we write to the matron to know Neva's needs, some of our women make the garments called for and we send her just such clothes as we would have our own little girls to wear. The value of boxes sent to the Orphanage and to Scarritt Bible and Training School during the spring and summer is $83.95. The fall box will be sent to Neva the last of this month. Also three years ago we agreed to support a leper and send annually $25.00 to be used in this way. In March we celebrated the fifth marriage anniversary of Brother and Sister Lipscomb by surprising them with a miscellaneous shower. This gave us great joy and called forth such expressions of pleasure and delight from them that it has been an inspiration ever since. Long may they stay with us to bless us and to guide us!

Our Mission Study Class under the guidance of our presiding elder's wife, Sister McIlwain, and our Bible Study Class with Mrs. J. T. Clark as its leader are in fine condition.

Our connectional work has been carried on splendidly and our reports go forward on time each quarter. Under Connectional work come Dues, Pledges, Bible Woman fund, Relief and Retirement Fund, Conference Expense Fund, etc. Our Local Work, including our Social Service activities, gratifies us and we believe will be of interest to the quarterly conference and is as follows: Cottage prayer-meetings attended by 81; Visits to sick and strangers, 1276; Trays sent to sick, 500; Flowers sent to sick and sorrowing, 643.

On the financial side of our Social Service and Local Work we have collected and disbursed as a society and as individuals, in cash and in value of garments, in good condition, given to the needy, etc., to the amount of $1461.26; Connectional collections, $542.30.

We have 110 members in the Adult society.

There are 21 members in the Young People's Society under the direction of Mrs. Battle Bell; their collections to date amount to $13.55.

Total number of members, 131; Total amount collected, $2017.11.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. TOM F. McBEATH.

Historical Sketch of The Scarritt Bible And Training School.

The Scarritt Bible and Training School for Missionaries and Other Christian Workers was founded by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the special training and testing of foreign missionary candidates.

The establishment of the institution was authorized by the General Conference held in 1890. In advance of General Conference action, Miss Belle H. Bennett, Richmond, Ky., under authority of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, appealed to the church for the necessary funds to build and equip such an institution. The Board in annual session held in St. Louis, Mo., in 1890, accepted an offer made by the Rev. Nathan Scarritt, Kansas City, Mo., of a building site and $25,000, conditioned on a like amount being raised by the women of the church. The school was named in honor of Dr. Scarritt, who died before the building was begun.

Miss Belle H. Bennett, Richmond, Ky., and Mrs. M. D. Wightman, Charleston, S. C., gave free service as financial agents for the school in its pioneer days—resulting in the collection for the building, furnishing and endowment of $111,000. The building was completed and opened in 1892.

The original plan suggested by Dr. Scarritt included a nurse training department and a small hospital. Scarritt Hospital set and maintained a high standard, and fifty-eight nurses who rank high in their profession were graduated during its existence. The growth of the school was augmented by the establishment of the Deaconess movement under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Home Missions in 1902, as that Board sent its deaconess candidates to the institution to be trained, and made financial provision for a Department of Sociology. In 1905 it was found necessary to close the hospital and discontinue the nurse training department, because the entire building was needed for the candidates for the home and foreign mission work.

The Scarritt Bible and Training School is a professional school for missionaries and other Christian workers. It does not compete with the secular school or college, for no literary courses are provided. The Institution recognizes three distinct aims:

First, To train candidates for foreign mission service, according to advanced standards in missionary preparation, developed by the board of missionary preparation, and approved by the Woman's Missionary Council of the M. E. Church, South. These courses are designed for graduate students.

Second, To train deaconess and home missionary candidates according to the standards approved by the Woman's Missionary Council. These courses are based on a high school diploma and two college years, or the equivalent.

Third, To train other professional and non-professional Christian workers so urgently needed in the new program of the church. Courses are offered which contribute directly to efficiency in the several departments of church activity. The practical work required in connection with these courses, gives practical training under skilled supervision in the activities that would naturally engage the attention of students in the fields for which they are making preparation.—Home Scarritt Year Book.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

A Correction.

Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, Conference Corresponding Secretary, wishes to make a correction in the report given for the third quarter in the last issue of the Advocate: French Mission—number of auxiliaries 3; number reporting, 3. Reporting was 100 per cent—the best record made.

FROM SHILOH CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: We have had several good meetings on this charge this year. I was assisted at Finkbine Camps by Rev. H. J. Moore; at Johns, by Dr. Rolfe Hunt; by Rev. W. N. Ware at Forest Hill; by Rev. James V. Bennett and Rev. J. M. Lewis at Shiloh Camp Meeting, and by Rev. R. T. Ware, of Louisiana, at Clear Creek.

The messages of each one of these brethren were plain, Scriptural and forceful. I feel that the charge has been greatly benefited by their messages. Thirty-five have been received into the church this year. At the close of the camp meeting at Shiloh, there were 17 family altars established and 96 promised to tithe.

The committee invited Brothers Bennett and Lewis to hold the camp meeting at Shiloh in 1922.

There are many people on the charge who love God and are loyal to the church. They are mindful of the pastor and his family needs. It is by the co-operation of the people of this choice charge that the pastor will have a good report at the Annual Conference. Your brother,

A. A. SIMMS.

FROM THE DECATUR AND HICKORY CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: While we are nearing the end of the Conference year and are striving to reach the goal, and time is precious to us, I thought I would crowd in a few lines to the Advocate.

This has been a very busy year for me, and yet one that I am very proud of. I feel that I have accomplished more for the church this year than I have in many years past. We have the new parsonage in Decatur finished and are occupying it. It is a beauty, and good enough for any of God's servants to live in. It is a seven-room bungalow, and is built near the center of the town.

We have the plans made for the new brick church at Hickory and something like $4000 of the money subscribed. I expect to have it ready for service in a few months. The people of Hickory have been planning and talking of building a new church for several years, but have never got as near to it as they are now. We have the thing well in hand and we are going to push it through. We are not going to be disappointed this time.

We are planning to remodel the church here at Decatur early next year; we want to make it up-to-date in every way. We have quite a bit of the money for this already promised and every dollar of it is good any day. We

FROM THE BONHOMMIE CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Sometime ago, if you will recall, there appeared an article in the Advocate about the organization of Bonhomie charge on the works of our much beloved and great layman, W. S. F. Tatum, who has done so much for our church and schools, such as giving $112,000 to Millsaps College, financing a great revival last spring at his sawmill and then again in his lumber camp, in which more than a hundred souls united with God's church, and then having me to follow up the work as best I can.

A short while ago I put on a drive to secure subscriptions for the Advocate. The workers are: Misses Gertha Dogget, Vermell Johnson, Mabel Stewart, Arbita Risher, Annie Lillian Odom, and Isaline Minus. A few days ago I sent seven subscriptions; to-day I am sending thirteen and we hope to send in more during the year.

As do most people who work in establishments of this kind, our people form colonies near the mill, and camp, which is about 22 miles from the mill. We have our own railroad system and, of course, feel that in a sense we are to ourselves. The mill being about 3 miles from Hattiesburg, some go to town for services and to do their shopping, while others do their shopping at the company stores. We have two schools, one at the mill and one at the camp, with two teachers each; also a small high school here at the mill just started this year. You might think, with two schools and one of the biggest lumber manufacturing plants, two stores, three trains, nearly a hundred miles of railroad, lots of fine timber, and the great Southern Apiary with more than 1000 hives of bees, and lots of good people, some having been here so long that they have reared families and the children married off, that we would be satisfied; but we are not. We must have church twice nearly every Sunday at both places, and two good Sunday schools, even though they are small. At our mid-week prayer meeting we have as many as 75, and almost half of them will lead in prayer and nearly all quote Scripture.

We look and see that everybody works. We have about 325 people living on the job, of most every Christian faith. We all work together and enjoy ourselves. Of course, the devil does all he can, but if we can get a nice little stream of Advocates coming our way, we will be in the land of Advocates and honey, and by the help of others and the Spirit of God, we hope to see many souls saved and God's kingdom built up. Pray for us.

Respectfully,
ANDREW J. BOYLES,
Co-preacher.

THE BEST ANSWER.

One day a young preacher in Mississippi College told Dr. Gambrell a woeful story of folks talking about him. Having finished he awaited a reply. Getting none, he persisted. "Brother Gambrell, what must I do?" "My young brother," was the laconic reply, "mud rubs off a heap better when it gets dry."—The Baptist.

A HOUSEWIFE

How They Have Been Endured and How Overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Experience of a Providence Woman

Providence, R. I.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a female trouble and backache. It began just after my baby was born, and I did the best I could about getting my work done, but I had awful bearing-down pains so I could not stand any more. I read in the papers about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the good it was doing other women, and I have got dandy results from it and will always recommend it. You can use these facts as a testimonial if you wish."—Mrs. HERBERT L. CASSEN, 13 Meni Court, Providence, R. I.

Ohio woman for 30 years could hardly keep about and do her housework, she was so ill. Made well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound:

Fayette, O.—"For about three years I was very nervous and had backache, sideache, dragging-down pains, could not sleep at night, and had no appetite. At times I could hardly do my housework. I got medicine from the doctor but it did not help me. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in a newspaper and took it with good results; and am now able to do my housework. I recommend your medicine to my friends and you may publish my testimonial."—Mrs. CHESTER A. BALL, 15, Fayette, Ohio.

An Illinois woman relates her experience:

Bloomington, Ill.—"I was never very strong and female trouble kept me so weak I had no interest in my housework. I had such a backache I could not cook a meal or sweep a room without raging with pain. Rubbing my back with alcohol sometimes eased the pain for a few hours, but did not stop it. I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and six bottles of it have made me as strong and healthy as any woman; and I give my thanks to it for my health."—Mrs. J. A. McQUITTY, 610 W. Walnut St., Bloomington, Ill.

The conditions described by Mrs. Cassen, Mrs. Ball, and Mrs. McQuitty will appeal to many women who struggle on with their daily tasks in just such conditions—in fact, it is said that the tragedy in the lives of some women is almost beyond belief. Day in and day out they slave in their homes for their families—and beside the daily routine of housework, often make clothes for themselves and for their children, or work in their gardens, all the while suffering from those awful bearing-down pains, backache, headaches, nervousness, the blues, and troubles which sap the very foundation of life until there comes a time when nature gives out and an operation seems inevitable. If such women would only profit by the experience of these three women, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the natural restorative for such conditions it may save them years of suffering and unhappiness.

There is hardly a neighborhood in any town or hamlet in the United States wherein some woman does not reside who has been restored to health by this famous medicine. Therefore ask your neighbor, and you will find in a great many cases that at some time or other she, too, has been benefited by taking it, and will recommend it to you. For more than forty years this old-fashioned root and herb medicine has been restoring suffering women to health and strength.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent to you free upon request. Write to The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

FOURTH QUARTERLY CONFERENCE, GOLDEN CHARGE.

Rev. J. B. Randolph, the presiding elder, preached two splendid sermons. The choir rendered beautiful and appropriate music. At the noon hour a bountiful dinner was served, to which everybody did justice.

The business session of the conference was held in the afternoon. The reports were all good. The ladies have done a good work in providing a pulpit chair and carpet for the aisles.

The people of Golden and Belmont are blessed in having such an energetic, consecrated, and spiritually-minded man as Brother J. R. James as pastor. There are now four Sunday schools on the charge; the parsonage has been repaired and new furnishings have been supplied, and all the work has prospered. There have been fifty-four additions to the church and eight dismissals, making a net gain of forty-six. Sixteen infants have been baptized. Brother James has won the love of the little folks within the bounds of his charge.

A MEMBER.

A NOTE FROM REV. WM. H. COLEMAN.

Dear Dr. Carley: I am closing the greatest year of my ministry to the present time. We have paid a church debt on our building; raised our Education quota; all departments of our church have been working like a beehive all the year; Sunday school attendance has been 50 per cent above last year; 302 have been received into the church, and 33 splendid young people have dedicated themselves to "life service."

The pastor did the preaching in our revival.

We have fourteen hundred members, who are ready to cheerfully respond to any request of their pastor, and who constantly co-operate with him in all departments of the work.

I have never had the pleasure of working with such a body of young people. They get great joy out of the real religious life and we keep them so busy in many good things that the godless, sinful things of the world seem to have no attraction for them.

There is never a week but that we have from one to half a dozen social gatherings under the direction of some one of the following organizations: Woman's Missionary Society, Bible Classes, Glee Club, Young People's Association, Junior, Senior or Intermediate League, Boy Scouts, Central Methodist Young Men's Brotherhood, or some other organization that I do not now think of.

No pastor ever had a greater people or a people who showed greater appreciation of his work. And it is needless to say that the pastor is desperately in love with them, and radiantly happy in the work. I would recommend to any church to try love and co-operation on its pastor and see if it will not make him happy, more efficient, and cause the work to go better.

I often think of my many friends in Louisiana, and hold sacredly enshrined in my memory the blessed associations I had with them in other days. May our Father's richest blessings continue with them. It will be a great day when we all meet in the Eternal City of our God, where there will be none to hinder our efforts in His service or to mar our joy in His worship.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,
Fraternally yours,
WM. H. COLEMAN.

THE HIGHEST EPITAPH.

God's revelations call for response. As Dr. Henry Burton says: It does not matter in what language Heaven speaks to us, or what special portent it gives to us—indeed there may be no portent at all, it may be in ways so simple, so perfectly natural—but everything depends upon our attitude toward the voice or vision. May our attitude be that of Professor Harry Lyman Koopman, who utters this great prayer:

When I am dead,
May this with truth be said,
On the rude stone that marks my lowly head,
That, spite of doubt and indecision,
In spite of weakness, lameness, blindness,
Heart's treachery and fate's unkindness,
Neglect of friends and scorn of foes,
Stark poverty and all its woes,
The body's ills that cloud the mind
And the bold spirit bind,

Still through my earthly course I went,
Not disobedient
Unto the Heavenly Vision.

THE ASCENSION.

In the ascension Jesus stands on the firm shore, who when on earth had made the restless sea firm to his feet. He bids us estimate life from that standpoint. It will be the same Jesus whom we have known here. O, the joy to recognize him, and to know that all the while that we were doubtful he was there!—David Jenks.

Vol. 63—No. 16.

Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South

Whole No. 3380.

HENRY T. CARLEY, Editor.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1921.

CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

The seventy-sixth session of the Louisiana Annual Conference met in the First Methodist Church, Alexandria, La., at 9 o'clock on Wednesday, November 9, Bishop W. F. McMurry in the chair. The opening exercises were conducted by the Bishop and consisted of the singing of the hymn, "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" prayer by the Bishop, a song by the Wisdom Sisters, the reading of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians and remarks thereon by the Bishop, the singing of the hymn, "A Charge To Keep I Have," prayer by Dr. F. N. Parker, and another song by the Wisdom Sisters.

The roll call showed that there was a good attendance of both clerical and lay delegates for the opening session. R. H. Harper was elected secretary. He nominated as his assistants Jno. F. Foster and W. D. Kleinschmidt, and as statistical secretary R. W. Vaughan, who were elected. The statistical secretary nominated R. F. Harrell, J. M. Boykin, and Allen Bennett as assistants, and they were elected.

The report of the committee on nominations was read by Dr. R. H. Wynn, and was adopted as follows:

Committee on Public Worship—W. L. Doss, Jr., S. H. Werlein, T. W. Holloman.

Committee on Admissions—W. W. Drake, H. N. Brown, I. T. Reames, J. O. Bennett, R. F. Walton, J. A. Alford, W. H. Jordan.

Committee on Conference Relations—J. B. Williams, S. D. Howard, W. E. Akin, J. G. Sloane, C. C. Miller, B. H. Sheppard, C. C. Wier.

Committee on District Conference Records—A. M. Mayo, S. M. Abel, J. R. Abels, R. O. Randle, K. I. Bean, B. E. Reid, J. W. Dean.

Committee on Sabbath Observance—A. A. Bernard, B. D. Boddie, J. R. Roy, E. L. Cargill, F. J. McCoy, J. A. Alford, L. N. Hoffpauir.

Committee on Memoirs—F. N. Parker for J. M. Henry, H. T. Young for Mrs. R. V. Fulton.

Committee on General Conference Memorials—Briscoe Carter, H. T. Carley, R. O. Randle.

Substitutions on committees of examination were made as follows: First Year—C. C. Miller in place of W. L. Doss, Jr.; Second Year—L. I. McCain in place of J. W. Lee; Fourth Year—W. O. Wagoner in place of I. G. Foote.

The hour of meeting was fixed at 9 o'clock a.m., and the hour of adjournment at 12 o'clock, noon. The limits of the main auditorium of the church were made the bar of the Conference. Various communications were received and referred to the appropriate boards and committees.

Question 17 was called, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" The names of the presiding elders were called, their characters were passed, and they submitted written reports of the work of their respective districts. These reports are summarized as follows:

Alexandria District, W. L. Doss, Jr., P. E.—In spite of the financial stress, pastors' salaries have held up well. Repairs or improvements have been made on three church buildings, and the church at Winnfield has been completed. Some work has been done on parsonages. About fifty revival meetings have been held during the year, and it is estimated that between 700 and 800 members have been received. The Sunday school, the Epworth League, and the Woman's Missionary Society are doing good work. Bunkie station has been able, through assistance from the Conference and General Boards of Missions, to inaugurate a plan of bringing the people to church and Sunday school by trucks operating over the good roads radiating from the town. This work has been very successful. Three new churches have been organized during the year. The quota was not reached in the Christian Education Movement, but faithful work was done by many of the pastors. The Centenary pledges are being paid in an encouraging way. There is much mission territory in the district which ought to be occupied.

Baton Rouge District, J. W. Lee, P. E.—Material progress has been slow on account of the financial depression. Several plans for new churches and parsonages are waiting for more favorable conditions to be carried out. There have been some improvements, repairs, and additions, however. The old parsonage of First Church, Baton Rouge, has been sold and a new one has been bought. The district parsonage is a splendid home. There have been forty-seven revival meetings, with 280 accessions by baptism and vows, and 252 by certificate. There are many hopeful signs of larger development throughout the district.

French Mission District, Martin Hebert, P. E.—Ground has been broken for the new church at Houma, to cost about $15,000. Several other new churches are about ready to be built or old ones to be remodeled. A considerable amount of money has been spent in the improvement of four parsonages. Seventeen revival meetings have been held, the results of which have been very gratifying. The spiritual condition of the district is much better than at the beginning of the year. There have been about 150 accessions on profession of faith. One man has been licensed to preach, one to exhort, one has been recommended for admission on trial, and one for re-admission. There has been a considerable increase in amount raised for support of the ministry, in spite of the worst financial condition in the history of that section. The district lacked only a little of raising its educational quota in full.

Lake Charles District, C. A. Battle, P. E.—The first five months of the Conference year were spent largely in promoting the Christian Education Movement. Lake Charles, Lafayette, Opelousas, and Hornbeck and Peason raised their quotas in full, and many other places did remarkably well under the severe financial strain. About $80,000 was subscribed on a quota of $150,000. Thirty revival meetings have been held, resulting in 511 accessions on profession of faith and 61 by certificate. Remarkable meetings were held at Opelousas, DeRidder, Indian Bayou, Merryville, and Lake Arthur. During the year about 675 have been received by vows and 395 by certificate. The church at Leesville has been completed and is free of debt. A bible class room has been built at Rayne. A new church is enterprised for Lafayette. The church at Crowley was dedicated during the year. There are 23 parsonages in the district, including two district parsonages, the one at Lafayette being for sale. There are 47 church buildings in the district. Pastors' salaries show substantial increase. The spiritual condition of the district is good.

Monroe-Ruston District, K. W. Dodson, P. E.—Five new churches have been built, one of them a brick structure with all Sunday school conveniences. Two parsonages have been remodeled. Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues are doing fine work. Revival meetings have been held in almost every church and about 800 members have been received. Two young men have been licensed to preach. The educational quota was not reached, due to disturbed business conditions. Centenary collections are fairly good.

New Orleans District, J. G. Spelling, P. E.—There are 30 preaching places in the district, besides some afternoon appointments. Twelve of these are stations and five are circuits. In the Educational campaign, more than $100,000 was pledged. The church at Covington has been completed, the one at Algiers will be completed in January, and bids have been asked on the new church at Bogalusa. A parsonage has been purchased at Second Church, and Carrollton Avenue is collecting funds for a Sunday school building. The Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, and Woman's Missionary Societies are doing splendid work.

Shreveport District, R. H. Wynn, P. E.—There are 35 charges in the district, with 93 organized churches, 1 of these having been organized during the present year. Four new churches have been built this year. Only four charges are without parsonages. Sixty-eight revival meetings have been held. There have been approximately 1700 accessions, about 900 of them on profession of faith. Three men have been licensed to preach and two recommended for admission on trial. There has been substantial increase in amounts assessed for ministerial support. The Christian Education Movement was carried forward under the difficulties of financial depression. On the regular quota of the district, $157,000 was pledged. In addition, a civic campaign in Shreveport for Centenary college resulted in raising approximately $550,000, to which must be added $250,000 from the Board of Education in New York, making a total of about $900,000. The oil fields constitute a problem that has not yet been solved.

Rev. J. L. Neill, Superintendent of Missionary Education, Dr. R. L. Russell, Home Mission Secretary, Professor C. M. Woodward, of Southern Methodist University, Mr. H. H. Abrams, Secretary Secular Press Bureau of the church, Rev. W. L. Duren, Rev. W. O. Wagoner, and Rev. L. W. Cain were presented to the Conference.

Question 6 was called, "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences?" Bishop McMurry announced the transfer, after the session of the Conference last year, of M. N. Hildebrand, an elder, from the Louisville Conference.

Question 10 was called, "Who are transferred to other Conferences?" and the Bishop announced the following: A. I. Townsley, to the West Texas Conference; F. R. Power to the Little Rock Conference; W. E. Thomas to the St. Louis Conference; C. E. Fike to the Northwest Texas Conference; M. N. Hildebrand to the Pacific Conference.

Question 17 was called and the names of R. A. Davis, Robert Randle, J. M. Brown, R. S. Isbell, F. G. Hocutt, J. E. Patterson, W. E. Henderson, J. H. Brown, F. N. Severy, S. S. Holladay, J. T. Sawyer, and H. B. Vadenburg were called, their characters passed, and they were referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuate relation. The name of Geo. S. Sexton was called and his character passed. Dr. Sexton submitted his report as president of Centenary College, and addressed the Conference concerning the work being done at Centenary. The report was most encouraging, showing that there has been a large increase in the number of students attending the institution, there being enrolled on November 1, 190 in the college and 101 in the training school.

The name of F. S. Parker was called and his character passed. Dr. Parker will not be at this session of the Conference, being in the Orient on the business of the church.

The name of J. M. Henry was called. The announcement was made that he had died on October 11, and his name was referred to the Committee on Memoirs.

When the name of A. J. Gearheard was called, his presiding elder stated that an investigating committee had been appointed in connection with certain charges against him, and that the committee had reported a trial necessary. The Bishop appointed the trial committee according to the provisions of the Discipline.

The name of S. A. Steel was called, his character was passed, and his name referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuate relation.

Question 8 was called, "Who are located this

THE INVENTIVENESS OF LOVE.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

In the thirteenth chapter of Paul's first letter to the Corinthians the great Apostle to the Gentiles shows the superiority of Christian love above all gifts, even the highest.

He does not depreciate spiritual gifts. On the contrary he urges his readers to "covet earnestly the best gifts;" but he adds, "yet show I unto you a more excellent way." (1 Corinthians xii:31.)

He exalts above gifts of tongues, gifts of prophecy, gifts of knowledge, and all other gifts, the love "that never faileth."

The love about which he speaks is no shallow sentimentality or weak amiability. It is that master passion of holy souls, the love of God begetting love to all mankind and springing from heavenly life in a soul which has been "born from above."

In the New Testament life and love of this sort are synonymous terms. St. John declares, "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." (1 John iii:14.) Most truly a loveless soul is a lifeless soul.

This deep lesson of love present-day Christianity needs to re-learn. There is much activity prevalent in the churches. Perhaps too much unless it were of a nobler quality.

We have a surplus of programmes and a superfluity of plans and organizations. Men and women delight in being officials with titles and functions.

But we have more machinery than motive power with which to run it; and if our complicated machinery moves at all, it moves slowly and with much creaking and squeaking. And so many excited men raise the cry, "What is the matter with the church?" And when the question is raised, a multitude of ecclesiastical mechanics rush forth offering to remedy the trouble with some bolt and tap, or some patent pulley guaranteed to lift the weight of the world, if only duly installed with proper adjustment. But when tried their patents do not work.

It is not tinkering with machinery, but the introduction of the old power of love divine which our age requires.

Such love is wiser than the wisdom of men, and it goes to its objects with wonderful ingenuity and marvelous inventiveness. It is sorely needed now in this cold and stupid era.

The great religious leaders of the past such as Luther, Knox, and Wesley exhibited great originality in both their thought and work; but their originality was not of that cheap sort of pseudo-originality which expends itself on notions and novelties. It was of the nobler type which restores the freshness of love and the richness of life. They appeared in the firmament of history not as wandering stars and eccentric meteors, but they rose like the old reliable sun, gilding the mountain tops with joyous beams and setting the valleys all aglow with dewdrops reflecting as diamonds heaven's sweet light.

Of such divine originality the present generation is painfully and conspicuously destitute. We have abundance of fads and faddists, but they avail nothing. There is nothing creative and quickening in them.

We need a new baptism of inventive love. We need a richer, fuller life with all its never-failing ingenuity.

Truly speaking nothing is more inventive than love. A woman who loved much because she had been forgiven much first thought of anointing the Savior with the precious ointment of her alabaster box. The evangelist describes her with those sadly suggestive words, "a woman of the city." But the Lord had restored her soul to its pristine bloom and beauty, and it immediately brought forth fruit after its kind.

Subsequently Mary of Bethany repeated at the feast in her home the beautiful act of the nameless woman who previously, in the house of Simon the Pharisee, had washed the feet of her Savior with her tears and wiped them with the hairs of her head. Mary could repeat with grace the act of anointing because she shared the same love for the Lord, and when she heard the story of the incident in Simon's house it kindled her affection afresh.

Upon it all the calculating Judas looked with critical eyes and condemned it with cold and selfish censure. A soul as loveless as was his could not comprehend, much less approve, the ardent deeds of ingenious love. He was pre-eminently the apostle of what is now called "practical religion." Two anointings by two women, who seemed to him as if they had "lost their heads," were too much for his "practical religion." He was discreditably familiar with the current prices in the oil market, and, by implication at least, claimed equal knowledge of the needs of the poor for whom he professed superior concern.

But Mary's anointing of our Lord has by its inspiring and quickening power fed and clothed more needy people than all the cold and calculating Judases of all the ages have ever helped.

Cold hearts have none of the foresight or the insight of love. Selfish souls—congealed by pride and policy—can work systems, but they are incapable of devising the miraculous devices where-with warm love serves both God and man.

What wonders a mother's love works, when a widow in poverty and sorrow sets her hand to clothing her fatherless children so that they may not be humiliated in association with other children! Bits of ribbon brought out of forgotten drawers in old dressers, fabrics of other days, and all manner of deft work make for her darlings amazing creations beyond the dreams of one who loves them not.

And bow unwearied are all the tender ministries of mothers! Love is tireless as well as inventive.

And how brave is love! It casts out fear because it casts out selfishness. Every cowardly fear which infests human souls when pulled up by the roots shows it has sprung from a seed of selfishness.

Too much of our present-day Christianity is timid and hesitating. It has not enough daring to conceive or to execute great plans for the glory of God and the blessing of men. It erects a tiny place of worship when it ought to have courage to erect a spacious and tasteful temple. It has to be driven with "drives," or touched with "tags," before it yields even an adequate response to the manifest calls of duty.

In our day of urgent calls and awful responsibilities we need the enabling power of a mighty love. Great deeds call for great hearts.

We are too easily depressed by adverse conditions. The pitiful losses of one year, after a period of abounding prosperity, paralyze our zeal and overwhelm our energies. The faith of some is so feeble it can not bear so much as the weight of a boll-weevil. The devotion of others dies when it can no longer enjoy the gains of godless profiteering which flowed upon them in a flood of money during the World War.

Men need to return to the "normalcy" of love—to its normal inventiveness, its normal generosity, and its natural courage.

"Love is strong as death, many waters can not quench it, neither can the floods drown it."

(Solomon's Song vii:6-8.) If our dead hearts could know again the life of love, all the burdens upon us would seem light and all our duties appear easy to discharge. Many were the years during which Jacob served for Rachel, "and they seemed unto him but a few days for the love he had to her." (Genesis xxix:20.) Love in even this lower form never fails. And if this earthly affection be so strong, how powerful must be that love which springs from the redemption which is in Christ our Savior? It can pass undismayed through Gethsemanes, dare the tortures of Calvary, and endure the pains of crucifixion to achieve the heavenly ends of its divine life.

All the Methodist bodies in the world sent delegates to the "Ecumenical Conference" held in London, September 6-16, and when the Conference adjourned it issued a pastoral address to its constituent bodies that contains a passage to which all good people of every name and order may well give heed. It is as follows:

"We are met together in tempestuous days, in times of unrest and uncertainty. We stand between two worlds—one dead; the other, without Christ, powerless to be born. The world sighs for a great leader; we have found ours in Jesus. He accuses and condemns us, but forgives and inspires us. We have sinned and come short of the glory of God. Assembled together in this Conference we have heard the call to repentance and faith. The days in which we live are crowded with perils, but they are also ringing with hope and calls to new adventures. When Wesley entered a city of England more sinful than he had seen elsewhere, he said, 'Surely the time is ripe for Him who came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.'

"It is thus that we must approach the tasks of difficult days. For the times are indeed ripe for Christ. We need more verve, audacity, inventiveness, and to keep all our wits about it. There is a wondrous lilt in our gospel. It is no dirge, but a love-song. We challenge our age with our song, but we can only do this by loving the men and women in it. We summon you to an aggressive and militant Christianity. Let us strive to love men as Jesus loved them; to be as he was, a Friend of all the Father's children. Let us love tenderly, inventively, unstintingly."

We have had "movements," "drives," "alliances," and agitations enough. Let us now seek the revival of love in our souls.

A JOURNEY TO THE ORIENT—KARUIAZAWA, NIKKO.

By Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker.

IV.

Karuiazawa is a resort in the mountains of central Japan to which missionaries wisely resort during the heat of the summer for rest and recuperation. It would be difficult to find a place in Japan better adapted to the purpose. The altitude is about that of Asheville, N. C., and the situation is in the midst of wonderful mountains, but there the points of resemblance cease. The town is in a plane of about twenty-five square miles area, the crater of an extinct volcano, and the rim of ancient mountains marks the boundaries from which the smoke, scoriae and lava once poured. Now all within is a smiling scene of beauty and luxuriant green, with a little river rushing through to find an exit by a gap in the mountain wall. Over the tops of the crater mountains pile in receding neutral tints remoter and higher mountains. One of these is an active volcano, Asama, from which several times I saw from my gallery columns of smoke rising like those pictured in the school geographies. I did not feel uneasy, for I am sure that even the lava streams from Vesuvius that overwhelmed Herculaneum and Pompeii would have broken harmless against the bulwark of surrounding mountains. In the midst of the little valley is a bubble of disintegrating rock that perhaps marks the last eruption of the volcano that once blazed where this peaceful village now sits. Of streets in our use of the term there are few, but lovely lanes meander through the valley, bordered by eucalyptus, poplar, acacia, cedar, pine and spruce trees and other genera that I was unable to identify. Low walls of earth on which grow hedges of privet or closely trimmed fir trees enclose the yards in which the houses are situated, and at each entrance through the hedge are a number and the names of all persons living within. The numbers are not consecutive and as the lanes have neither names nor continuous direction, in order to find the house you want recourse must be had to a map upon which the lane is platted and the numbers are given. A directory identifies the habitant and the habitation by name and number. The principal long street is strictly Japanese, narrow and meandering, with shops and houses abutting, not on the sidewalk, for there is none, but upon the roadway, and at one point penetrated by a gateway through which one enters upon a scene of beauty, the garden of the Karuizawa Hotel, all concealed from the street.

Many of the foreign residences and some owned by wealthy Japanese are built upon the rising sides of the mountains and afford entrancing views and salubrious air. The foreign population numbers about thirteen hundred, chiefly missionaries, who are residents only in the summer. I should think the Japanese population was slightly larger, but Orientals live in so crowded a manner that it is difficult to judge. The stores bear the marks of adaptation to foreign trade. The Methodist Episcopal Church has a book depository, so has the Japan Tract Society. There is a drug store stocked with American goods and conducted after the approved American fashion of soft drink counter and ice cream tables. An auditorium of American architecture capable of seating five hundred has been erected and is used for the union congregation and various intellectual and social functions. Flanking the auditorium are admirable tennis courts, six of them; and somewhat aside are a baseball diamond and a grandstand. Body, mind and spirit are cared for by the missionaries and their children and other foreigners who make this their summer home. It is certainly a boon to the missionaries that for a few weeks of the year they are able to enjoy a community life similar to that they have been accustomed to; especially that they are able to give their children this taste of a social life for which their natures must hunger, and which is denied them by their ordinary environment. Most visiting foreigners come to Karuizawa for at least a few days, and all the distinguished ministers and educators who happen to be in the Empire during the summer are invited to deliver lectures and sermons there. To men like the missionaries, who must be ever giving forth of their own vitality with little opportunity to replenish, this is a boon like water to the thirsty. If the missionaries did not do it for themselves, to keep up Karuizawa would be a worth-while enterprise for the Boards operating in Japan as serving both the efficiency and health of the missionaries. One of the fearful wastes of our missionary operations has been the breaking down of men and women of consecration and intellectual power through strain of work and privation of the spiritual and mental stimuli that they needed to maintain the poise and strength of life. And to make it impossible for the missionaries' families to enjoy congenial social life like that of their earlier environment is a needless hardship. When a missionary has been on the field five years he represents an investment of ten thousand dollars; looking at the matter from a cold business point of view, it is not economy to kill him by overwork or prematurely to retire him broken in health just when experience, language and intellectual maturity have brought him to his highest usefulness.

It was a great joy to find the Rev. W. E. Towson, a veteran missionary of our church, Mrs. Towson and Miss Manie, the last under appointment of the Board, General Work, at Karuizawa; but a source of grief that Hatton Dunnica Towson was not here—a choice young man, who was about to receive appointment to Japan when, as the result of wounds received in the war, he died, his life work all before him. The Epworth Leagues of South Georgia have determined to raise to his memory a monument in the form of a fund to be expended in missionary work in Japan. The venerable J. C. Calhoun Newton, for many years President of the Kwansai Gaquin, the most largely attended of the educational institutions of Southern Methodism, and now raised to the rank of a university, honored me with a call and many hospitable attentions, and so did the others of our missionaries. It will be equally impossible to repay and to forget the beautiful and cordial hospitality of the brethren in a far-off land.

As these lines are written the heart of the Orient is stricken with grief on account of the death of Bishop Lambuth, which occurred after a severe surgical operation in Yokohama, on Tuesday, September 27. It was not long after my arrival at Karuizawa that the Japan Mission assembled there under his presidency for the Annual Meeting. The Bishop was evidently not as vigorous as usual and he was often in great pain, but nothing could conquer his cheerfulness and care in every detail of administration. With the shadow of the fearful operation over him, there was never an evidence of anxiety for himself, but if possible his beautiful thoughtfulness for every one else was more than ever in evidence. He left the meeting on Friday afternoon for Yokohama, compelled to seek relief, but the day before he gave a dinner to the Japanese brethren who were in attendance and was the most genial host and the merriest story-teller. I had reached Korea before the operation was performed. There we breathed more easily when the bulletins came from Mr. Towson, who was with him throughout, and who closed his eyes at the end as he had those of the Bishop's father thirty years before. When the news of the end came the missionaries could all say, and even more the native ministers, as Ellsha said when his master was taken up, "My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof!"

The chronology of my narrative was interrupted by the event that had so changed the face of things since the time of the incidents of which I was speaking; but the burden of life and work must be courageously taken up when those who joyously lived and courageously worked with us have laid the burden down.

During my stay in Karuizawa I had two important conferences with the missionaries concerning two of the objects of my visit: first, the Epworth League in the Japan mission; and, second, the preparation of missionaries as seen from the standpoint of the field. Concerning the former the opportunity of discussion with Mr. Tanaka, the Secretary of the Wesley Endeavor Society of the Japan Church, which corresponds except in name with the Epworth League in America, was also welcomed. The young people's society in Japan is vigorous and popular, but has need of a field secretary and better equipment in the form of literature. A sum was raised in the Centenary by the Japan Church for the Wesley Society, and it is being wisely expended in developing the organization, but help from the mother churches is needed and will be given. I have not yet had the opportunity of seeing the League in action in Japan, but later shall enjoy it.

Let no one imagine that the demand for missionaries in Japan has become less insistent because there is a Japanese Methodist Church and because the Empire has reached such a degree of intellectual development as to be independent of Western aid. The old faiths may be losing their hold upon the people, but they are undergoing modifications with a view to their adaptation to the new thought. The Buddhists have over seventeen hundred Sunday schools with nearly three hundred thousand scholars. It matters not that these are largely on paper as yet; this ancient religion has awakened and will resist the advance of the faith of Jesus. The music of Christian hymns is sung in Buddhist temples to adaptations of the poetry of the hymns, and sermons are preached that give as little toleration to idolatry as does Christian teaching. Shinto may be losing its hold upon the intelligence of the educated, but at its heart is a veneration for the Emperor that resembles the cultus of the Caesars in the days of the Roman Empire. In Seoul, where I am writing, there is being erected on a height overlooking the city a shrine to the late Emperor Meiji, that is to be one of the wonders of the city. Whether people actually worship the spirit of the Emperor or not, I cannot say, but the forms of the cultus resemble worship and its power of holding the Empire in a political and sentimental unity is not questioned.

The numerical achievements of Christianity during the sixty or more years since its second introduction is of about two hundred thousand members; the pupils in its educational institutions number about fifty-two thousand and its investments in the same aggregate ten millions of dollars. The Christian body is vigorous and hopeful and all religions are tolerated in the Empire; but the fight against false religion is yet to be a hard one. The fight against worldliness and growing immorality is also one of increasing strenuousness. With the present economic prosperity of Japan, greater perhaps than of any other country as the result of the war, there is a wave of luxury and pleasure sweeping over the land that is not obstructed by the ancient religions and the older morality. They have lost the former, and it is more than ever incumbent upon the Christian church to come with all her power to the aid of the scant forces of righteousness that are battling against fearful odds in this great Empire.

All this is in line with my duties in the Candidates Committee of our Board. The Japan Mission shows a very high average of educational preparation, and such is necessary in this land; but especially in order that we may teach. Evangelism is the crying need of Japan. It is by the preaching of the gospel with the power of the Holy Spirit that we can change ideals and awaken conscience and transform the characters of individuals. Against the overwhelming odds of worldliness and religious formality Wesley raised a standard that saved Europe and America; it is the same standard that alone can save Japan and the continent of Asia. It is incumbent upon every educated young man and woman in America of real Christian experience to show cause why he or she should not come to Japan or elsewhere in the world field to make Christ known. Whatever the need at home, it is less than it is here.

At Karuizawa there were two events of considerable importance during my stay, beside the meeting of our Mission. The Conference on the Spiritual Life, which is one of the annual features, was held, several missionaries taking part; but the preaching was done chiefly by the Rev. R. S. Stewart, of our Mission. Mr. Stewart is clear in his teaching of the need of special empowering by the Holy Spirit and of a second work of grace by which the heart of the Christian is purified by faith. There is great interest in these subjects on the field and one observes the same phenomena and the same mental types as at home. These brethren seem never to be in the majority and their literalism in Bible exegesis forbids the assent of many earnest Christians; but they fertilize the church by their prayers, their consecration and their spiritual unction.

The other event of special interest was the mission of healing conducted in the church of the Church Missionary Society (Church of England) by Mr. James M. Hixon, whose visit to America is still fresh in memory. I was interested in the service that preceded his first address. It was simple and sincere, the canticles and Psalms being chanted by the congregation instead of by a choir, and the congregational singing was hearty and varied. It is very different in the S. P. G. churches, which belong to the High wing of Anglicanism. Mr. Hixon disclaims the name of healer and teaches that Jesus Christ is the Healer; that when he ascended he had committed his three-fold ministry of preaching, teaching and healing to his church; that the church is no more at liberty to neglect the third than the first; that had the church the faith of the apostles, she would now witness healings as in the apostolic age. Nothing could have been more impressive than the sight afforded by this earnest man laying his hands upon the sufferers from divers sicknesses and infirmities and simply praying that the great Healer might touch them to wholeness. Do we believe in it? I do not see how we can do less without denying our Lord in glory the power he had in the days of his humiliation.

The Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of Union

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

year?" The name of W. G. Evans was called, his presiding elder stated that he had refused to go to his appointment last year, and moved his location. He was located.

Dr. R. L. Russell, on behalf of the presiding elder and preachers of the French Mission District, presented to Bishop McMurry a gavel made of wood taken from the Evangeline Oak, at St. Martinville, La. Dr. Russell then addressed the Conference in connection with his work.

S. L. Riggs presented to the Bishop a gavel made from a sill under the pulpit of the old church in Opelousas, La., in which the Louisiana Conference was organized, January 6, 1847, also a picture of the house in which Bishop Joshua Soule, who presided at the first session of the Louisiana Conference, was entertained. Bishop McMurry made appropriate response to the presentation of these gavels. In the course of his remarks he stated that he had secured the custody of paintings of Bishop Soule, Bishop Kavanaugh, and Bishop Bascom from Vanderbilt University and had placed them in the Board of Church Extension Building in Louisville, Ky.

Announcements were made, and the session adjourned with the benediction by J. D. Harper.

SECOND DAY.

The second day's session was called to order by Bishop McMurry promptly at 9 o'clock. The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. W. C. Childress, who read II Peter, first chapter, commented thereon, and led in prayer. The Wisdom Sisters sang a song. The minutes of the previous day's session were read and approved. The roll of absentees from yesterday's session was called, and several delegates answered to their names.

The following were elected to fill vacancies as indicated: Epworth Board, Leland Clegg; Legal Conference, C. C. Wier; Board of Education, F. N. Parker, A. A. Bernard, W. L. Duren. The following were added to the Committee on Memoirs, to prepare memoirs of deceased wives of preachers: D. C. Barr for Mrs. E. W. Yancey; A. J. Guburn for Mrs. P. M. Goodwyn; P. O. Lowrey for Mrs. J. M. Franklin.

Various communications were received and referred to appropriate Boards and Committees.

A resolution was offered by John A. Rice and W. Winans Drake setting apart the hour from 11 to 12 to-morrow for a service commemorative of the Armistice and instructing the Committee on Public Worship to provide a suitable program. The resolution was adopted.

On motion of John A. Rice, the Board of Temperance and Social Service was directed to prepare a statement to be sent to the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments at Washington.

Under the call of Question 17, the name of J. S. Greenway was called; he reported his work, his character was passed, and he was continued in the Class of the First Year. The names of B. D. Watson and Frank Collins were called, their characters were passed, and they were continued in the Class of the Second Year.

When the name of Drew J. Wilson was called, his presiding elder stated that he had deserted his work soon after the Conference of last year, and moved his discontinuance. The motion prevailed.

Porter M. Caraway was elected to deacon's orders and advanced to the Class of the Third Year, and was recommended by the Committee on Admissions for admission into full connection.

The names of W. H. Giles, J. E. Selfe, and A. J. Martin were called, their characters passed, and they were advanced to the Class of the Fourth Year. The name of S. J. McLean was called, his character was passed, and he was continued in the Class of the Third Year.

Under the call of Question 1, "Who are admitted on trial?" Henry LeRoy Johns, Eunice Valentine Duplantis, Ollie Lee Tucker, Dan Frank Anders, and Henry Bascom Hines, having met all disciplinary requirements, were admitted on trial.

The name of Sidney A. Seegers was called, his character was passed, and he was graduated in the course of study; but having served only one year as a deacon he was ineligible to elder's orders. The name of Leland Clegg was called, his character passed, and he was continued in the Class of the Fourth Year. The name of J. M. Boykin was called, his character passed, and he was elected to elder's orders. The name of D. C. Bennett was called, his character passed, and he was continued in the Class of the Second Year.

Charles W. Lahey, a local preacher recommended by the district conference of the French Mission District, was elected to deacon's orders.

Jno. F. Foster, for nine years editor of the Conference Minutes, submitted his report and tendered his resignation. The whole matter was, on motion, referred to the Commission on Finance for a recommendation concerning the publication of the Minutes.

The Committee of Trial, appointed yesterday in the case of A. J. Gearheard, reported that it had found the accused guilty as charged and assessed as a penalty a public reprimand by the Bishop.

Following the report of the Committee, the Bishop administered the reprimand.

Dr. C. M. Woodward, professor in the Southern Methodist University, addressed the Conference in the interest of that institution.

Question 17 was resumed. The names of J. D. Harper, S. J. Davies, D. C. Barr, H. J. Boltz, J. O. Bennett, F. N. Parker, J. I. Hoffpauir and H. S. Johns were called, they reported their work, and their characters were passed.

W. H. Hatfield, a local preacher, surrendered his credentials to the Conference, and the Secretary was instructed to issue to him a certificate of membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The statement was made that Brother Hatfield was surrendering his credentials simply because he no longer felt called to the ministry and believed that he could serve the church as a layman.

The Bishop then called Question 10, and announced the transfer of E. K. Means to the Mississippi Conference, and of John A. Rice to the East Oklahoma Conference.

In answer to Question 6, the Bishop announced the transfer to the Louisiana Conference of Chas. W. Crisler, from the Mississippi Conference, O. W. Bradley, from the North Mississippi Conference, and W. A. Wadill, from the Northwest Texas Conference.

A JOURNEY TO THE ORIENT—KARUIAZAWA, NIKKO.

Theological Seminary, was also among the noted visitors at Karuizawa. His sermons and addresses were inspiring and mentally stimulating. His great theme is the reality of the Christian life as an experience and its adequacy for the needs of the spirit in man. His books on Prayer and Faith have been translated into Japanese.

I have left myself no space to describe a delightful visit to Nikko, in many respects the most remarkable place in Japan. Its numerous temples are typical of the best Japanese adaptations of the architecture of China; it is still the summer seat of the Emperor, who was in the palace at the time of my visit. About nine miles further up in the wonderful mountains is Lake Chuzenji, out of which leaps a waterfall down a precipice of two hundred and fifty feet. The tragic notoriety of this cataract is that into the short stream above over five hundred students have thrown themselves, despairing of any satisfactory interpretation of life and the world, and have found death in the pool beneath. If art and beauty and intellect and patriotism were sufficient, there had been no such tragic despair; for in Japan they do not lack these. Christ only is sufficient.

THE WITCHES' CALDRON.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

We are being served a strange mixture these days. Unification is dead—LONG LIVE UNIFICATION! Unification will save us, it will also damn us. Proper legislation will save us; here is found the "Balm in Gilead"—we have too much legislation already. Look to the Board of Missions, brethren, there is found the source of all wisdom. The Board of Missions has usurped authority beyond safety. It is using the assets of the church to create painful and unwarranted liabilities. (Read Modernism in Our China Mission; Rankin.) Our bishops will lead us into the Promised Land if we will but give them free reign. Pooh! Our bishops should have all authority taken from them. THEY have generated most of our troubles. Right now some of them are "breeding malaria and mosquitoes." The presiding elders are our natural leaders. Let them mould the thinking and lead in the work of the church. Presiding elders, forsooth! The little pigmies! Away with them. They are carbuncles on the neck of the church.

Back to the days of great revivals. Seek the old-time power. Call men to hearty repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Give the Spirit right of way. THE DAY OF GREAT REVIVALS is past.

The church can't live on perfervid emotionalism. We are restating our faith. We must have tearless revivals, dry births, bottled babies, and well trained, properly collared poodle dogs. Money, money, money—here is the panacea for all our ills. We are just learning to put on great drives and foster great world enterprises. Make surveys, send more men to "spy out the land and make reports." Is there seeming lack of spiritual life? TAKE A COLLECTION. Is there a ministerial shortage? Appoint a few more secretaries. Already we have collections "piled on" until pastors and churches are groaning under the burden. "For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders." We are fast becoming a bunch of secretaries, tithe-gatherers, and lovers of the "chief seats in the synagogues." GIVE US THE MOVIES. Instead of empty pews we will "turn 'em away for lack of room." Yes, and those who are turned away will be fortunate. IF YOU CAN'T PREACH, QUIT!

Social uplift, community service, BIG SINGS, heep-big-noise. SERVE HOMEOPATHIC SOUP. "Ephraim feedeth on the wind, and followeth after the east wind: he daily increaseth lies and desolation; and they do make a covenant with the Assyrians." Whitewash may be good for fences and old buildings—it will never make a man right inside.

Higher Criticism, "that's the dope." It has the flavor of great learning. None but super-men enter here. Make a nice, fashionable summer resort of hell, people heaven with ethical culturists and aesthetic dancers. Let Adam be a myth, Moses a dream, Isaiah a dope-fiend, Jeremiah a fool for his tears, Jonah a bit of wind on the stomach of a great fish, the book of Revelation a nightmare shot through with sweetened wind, and Jesus Christ a deluded carpenter, but a mighty nice fellow—considering his low birth. Let the Bible as a whole be an interesting set of documents, even instructive, a kind of combination playing for the young neophyte who has been to "Hell-western-and-crooked University" a few hours to whet his elongated teeth on, while he imitates the higher up imitators. Resurrect Darwin. Put a tail on humanity long enough to switch flies," and strong enough for two-legged animals to swing from prehistoric limbs and eat Rice without being troubled with "chopsticks."

"Round about the caldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw.
Toad, that under cold stone,
Days and nights hast thirty-one
Sweltered venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first! 't the charmed pot!
Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the caldron boll and bake;
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adders fork, and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble;
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble."

Yes, we are being served a strange mixture.

Let none but profound thinkers, mental experts, interpret the signs of the times, unravel the mysteries of YESTERDAY. They can speak with FINALITY. Who said so? THEY DID. They are as cock-sure as Voliva of Zion City. And some of them are nearly as reliable.

"When good manners shall lie in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too, 'tis a foul thing."—"But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned"—"No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you"—"They have rejected the word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in them?"

"The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God."

If foolishness causes God to laugh, He must spend a good part of His time laughing these days.

Common Ground.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION. Sure. It sounds good. IT IS GOOD. We are all for it. We are proposing to put our money into it. WE ARE PUTTING IT THERE, THANK GOD. Recently I was served oyster gumbo in a well known cafe. The "gumbo" was unmistakable. I sought diligently for the "oyster," and "mourned because I found it not." I have a right to complain if I fail to get what I pay for. A young man, comparatively fresh from one of our NEW UNIVERSITIES, wrote me recently: "I see nothing to be gained by following after our Bible Critics, and I know that the harm they are capable of doing thousands of our simple souls is immeasurable. Higher Criticism gave orthodox Methodism a solar plexus jolt at Nashville, and it is 'high and lifted up' at — school of —. Personally, I am not afraid of it, my rhinoceros hide having resisted it fairly successfully at — for two years, but I see nothing to be gained by it; it never gets a fellow anywhere, and to many it is dangerously disturbing." Another from a neighboring Conference, a man filling our best pulpits, giving evidence of splendid mentality, writes: "All this Historical Criticism is infidelity in a new form. It seems to me a protest ought to be made against the use of our universities and church papers circulating such propaganda against the Bible." And a layman, more than three-score and ten years of age, a life-long supporter of the church: "I think there are too many learned men trying to make history out of the Bible for themselves." And so it goes. I could multiply all but indefinitely from letters on my desk, oral statements, and quotations from published articles on all sides and no side.

"But cruel are the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know ourselves; where we hold rumour

From what we fear; yet know not what we fear;
But float upon a wild and violent sea,
Each way, and move."

It sure is a "witches' caldron," but what kind of broth are we getting therefrom? Is it hell-broth? Is it milk for the weak and meat for the strong? We are evolving and revolving, BUT ARE WE SOLVING? Our "think-tanks" are filled to overflowing with theories that are not unlike inflated paper that took the place of better assets in our banks recently. These paper assets were disastrous to some banks, dangerous to the life of all. "Million heirs" were made paupers in a night. Watered stock is usually a liability. Experience is far better than theory. Reason dies when faith departs, just as faith falters when reason fails to appear. The Holy Rollers and the Higher Rollers are of a kind—just extreme swings of the same pendulum. Between the two truth is usually found. God is not a local entity to be dissected by successive generations of theorists, nor is He a cultus image subject to "all variations in the time-spirit." "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and forever."

Mr. Editor, regardless of theories, fancies, vagaries, cure-alls, criticism high and criticism low, I am persuaded that one Paul made a center shot, the hit of them all, when he said: "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified"—"And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

So — While leaders, imaginary leaders, would-be leaders, and hope-to-be leaders are playing Katy-did and Katy-didn't, with at least one higher-up using his hind legs vigorously, making thereby his contribution to the jangle, and more than one jessa-kced presiding over the caldron—men are preaching the gospel, building churches, enlarging their possessions in the name of the Lord, AND MANY ARE BEING SAVED.

Therefore, while watching the witches' caldron with constant interest, often with solicitude, I thank God for the ordinary, intelligent, consecrated, Methodist preacher and pastor; I give thanks for the average, big-hearted God-fearing, steady-going, dependable layman. Universities come and go; Higher Criticism dies and revives again (as a new discovery); holy rollers wax and wane, itches for the limelight, and those who ache to become little martyrs, serve their little day and pass on; Unification bobs up like a cork—and bobs down again; hell-fire makes another exchange with fox-fire; some cheap imitator of Darwin shakes his prehistoric tail in our faces, struts a few, goes away as pleased with himself as a few ignorant immersionists I have known, men who glory in their ignorance; the doleful pessimist groans like a follower of Baal, and spills himself all over his part of creation; the ultra optimist grins like a devotee of Babonvism—AND THE OLD BOOK REMAINS THE WORD OF GOD, and Jesus Christ saves the penitent believer, and the Holy Ghost bears witness to the really saved man, AND THE LEAVEN KEEPS WORKING. With all my heart, HERE'S TO THE PREACHER, TEACHER, WRITER, LAYMAN WHO KNOWS JESUS CHRIST, REVELS IN HIS SERVICE, LOSES HIS LIFE IN CHRIST ONLY TO FIND IT AGAIN, DIES IN THE FAITH, AND LEAVES THE WELL-FOUNDED HOPE THAT HE HAS GONE TO HEAVEN.

THE GLOW.

By J. G. A. Carter.

The sun went down on his westward march
In a wonderful golden glow
Of light that o'erspread the heaven's high arch
And burnished the land in its flow;
The river ran gold; the meadow shone
With gold-bloom entrancing the sight;
The young moon smiled from a golden throne
As she vanished into the night.

The clouds that had gathered for sunset play
Dissolved in the amber air;
The winds that had shaken the leaves all day
Sped away—to frolic elsewhere;
The song-thrush flew through a golden haze
To the quiet of wooded dell;
The clamor of life was hushed to praise
As the beautiful twilight fell.

A wonderful scene! Our "Sorrowful Star"
Was glorified one rapt hour,
Then the night shades fell; yet light reigns afar
Undimmed in its plenteous power,
Its beams ever glowing in heavenly place
Whose splendor no gloom can defile,
For its sun is the light of the Father's face,
Its beauty—the glow of His smile.

DICKEY'S BRIGHT IDEA.

"I know a perfect dandy plan," cried Dick early one Saturday morning.

"Whatever is it?" asked Nancy, looking up quickly from the book she was reading.

"Listen! Let's both of us be awful good and help mother lots—mind the baby, run errands, pull weeds, and O, do any old thing she wants us to do. And let's smile too, all the time just as if we really liked it."

"Well, Mr. Dickydoodles, if that's what you call a perfectly dandy plan, I don't. On a hot day like this, too! What's the matter with you? Does your head hurt, or what?"

"Wait a minute, Miss Jumping-Jack; and when we've been so very good and done all those things, won't mother be thankful to us though?"

"Course she will; she ought to," put in Nancy eagerly.

"And she'll be feeling so glad about it she'll give us 'most everything we ask for. Won't she?"

"Maybe," Nancy replied in a rather doubtful tone.

She will if we go about it right," Dick explained. "This is the way we'll do it: As soon as dinner is over to-night I'll just say: 'Mother, we've been good all day! haven't we?' And she'll say: 'You've been the very best children a mother ever had. What can I ever do to repay you? Then, Nancy, you can say: 'We'd like to go to the movies and have an ice cream cone or two. Could we each have only just a quarter?' And she'll say: 'You dear children, of course you can. Bring me my purse!'"

By the time Dick finished talking Nancy was very much excited. It sounded wonderfully sure and altogether delightful. So she agreed immediately. And all through that long, hot day the two children were very good and helped every minute. Indeed they were regular little angels.

As soon as dinner was finished that night Nancy looked eagerly at Dick, and Dick started right in: "Mother, we've been good all day, haven't we?"

"You certainly have," was the prompt answer. "I'm proud of you both. You've helped me so very much that I've had time to do a great many things to-day. For one thing I made a cherry pie for to-morrow's dinner, because you children are so fond of it. Then at last I managed to make the button holes in your summer suit, Dick; it'll be much cooler for you to wear this hot weather. And, Nancy, your yellow dress is done; too; I sewed the lace on the last ruffle."

Nancy looked questionably at Dick. Should she ask for the quarters? Somehow she didn't want to a bit.

But Dick wasn't looking at Nancy. He was admiring the new suit his mother was showing him.

Nancy's mouth opened. "Please, mother," she began timidly, "we'd like—"

"No, we wouldn't!" exclaimed Dick, getting extremely red and frowning very hard at Nancy.

"What would you like?" invited their mother, glancing in surprise at the children.

"Nothing!" Dick answered quickly, "We've had—had more'n we deserve already."

"Well, I haven't," exclaimed the mother, looking in a puzzled way at Dick. "I think I deserve a treat for being so very good this hot day. Let's all walk down to the village and have some ice cream."

And that's exactly what they did, the whole family of them—baby and all.—The Continent.

"THE SAME OLD THING."

"It's the same old thing, day in and day out," growled Jerry. "I know Monday afternoon just what I'll be doing Saturday morning. Deadly monotonous, I call it."

Uncle Gerald did not reply. Indeed he seemed rather absorbed in a paragraph in the newspaper, a fact Jerry resented. But Uncle Gerald had heard the boy's complaint and in spite of his absorbed manner, was considering it.

"Jerry!" He laid the paper down and looked his nephew in the eye. "I want to fill a position in one of our Brazilian offices. The town is about one hundred miles north of Rio and decidedly quaint. Now listen while I explain the work you would have to do."

He began his explanations while Jerry listened absently. But the light went out of the boy's face as the man talked on. And when Uncle Gerald paused to hear what Jerry had to say, there was nothing enthusiastic in Jerry's tone.

"Why, you see, Uncle Gerald, I don't know anything about that sort of work."

"It would be a real chance for you," quoth Uncle Gerald briskly.

"And—what do they talk down there—Spanish?"

"Portuguese. All our office force are Brazilians. You'd hardly hear a word of English."

"But I shouldn't like that, Uncle Gerald," Jerry's voice showed dismay. "I why, I'd have a fearful time, with everybody gabbling Portuguese and me not knowing a word. And you said the town was quaint."

"You never saw anything like it." Uncle Gerald plunged into a description of the small, typically Brazilian town, and when he had finished, Jerry's eyes had refused the offer before his lips spoke.

"Uncle Gerald, I—I'm very much obliged to you, but I—I don't think I'd fill that bill. And I'm afraid I shouldn't like it. Everything would be so strange, you see. I don't want you to think I'm a baby, but I'm afraid I should be homesick."

"I'm afraid you would, Jerry." Uncle Gerald smiled frankly at the puzzled youth. "Don't you know, my boy, that most of our usefulness and our happiness depends on what you call 'the same old thing'?"

"Why, I don't know as I'd thought of it."

"You objected that the work down there would be new to you, and that showed your good sense. If we started out with new work every day, we should accomplish very little. Skill depends on doing a thing over and over. No one amounts to much in any line till his work has become monotonous."

"I guess you're right, uncle."

"And it's as true of our happiness as of our efficiency. I asked a friend of mine who had been around the world what he enjoyed most of all he had seen on his travels, and he said the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor. You may feast your eyes on St. Peter's and the Taj Mahal, but after all, there's nothing like the white two-story cottage with green blinds that you call home. And in a strange land, there's no music like your mother tongue. We grumble about monotony, when our peace and joy depends on it."

"I—I guess you're right, uncle," said Jerry. It was the last time that Uncle Gerald was to hear him grumble about doing the same old thing, day in and day out.—Harold S. Shumway, in Young People's Weekly.

Of times the hindrances that lie in the path of duty may be compared to the tollgates upon our turnpike roads: they keep shut till we are just upon them and then fly open, as it were, of themselves, and that is time enough. If they had been open a week beforehand, we could but have gone through them.—John Newton.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

The presidency of Bishop McMurphy gave great satisfaction to the Conference. The Bishop has remarkable gifts as a presiding officer and he always has the business of the Conference thoroughly in hand. His sallies of wit keep the brethren in good humor, and his brotherliness of spirit wins their affection.

The meeting of the Historical Commission on Tuesday evening preceding the opening day of the Conference was largely attended. The paper read by Rev. J. D. Harper on Richmond Nolly made a real contribution to the history of Methodism in Louisiana, and the Conference showed its appreciation of it by ordering it printed in the Journal and requesting its publication in the Advocate. We hope to be able to give it to our readers at an early date.

Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker was absent from the sessions of the Conference for the first time since he was admitted to its membership, his absence being occasioned by a trip to the Orient on official business for the church. A resolution expressive of the high esteem in which he is held by the Conference was unanimously passed.

A Committee on Memorials to the General Conference was appointed on the first day of the Conference, but it had nothing to do—not a single memorial being presented until the closing session, when the Superannuate Endowment Fund Campaign was under discussion. The memorial in that interest was unanimously adopted without reference to the Committee.

The connectional visitors were Dr. R. L. Russell, representing the Board of Missions; Rev. J. L. Neill, representing the Sunday School Board; Dr. J. H. Reynolds, representing the Christian Education Movement; Dr. Luther E. Todd, representing the Board of Finance. All these brethren gave splendid addresses in behalf of the causes represented by them. The Board of Missions celebrated its anniversary on Wednesday evening, the Sunday School Board on Thursday evening, the Board of Education on Friday evening, and the Epworth League on Saturday evening.

In the appointment of Rev. C. D. Atkinson as Sunday School Field Secretary, the Conference is assured of the services of one of the most indefatigable workers in its membership. Brother Atkinson has long been distinguished for his interest in Sunday school work and his devotion to the interests of the young people. He will make his headquarters in Alexandria.

Under the direction of Rev. Alonzo Early, the Sunday school interests of the Conference have been capably looked after. Brother Early asked to be relieved as Sunday School Field Secretary in order that he might re-enter the pastorate. He was assigned to Mansfield, one of the leading pastoral charges of the Conference.

The preaching on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons was done by Rev. L. I. McCain, Rev. J. B. Williams, and Rev. Harry W. Rickey. These preaching services were largely attended, and they added largely to the spiritual value of the Conference.

After the transfer of Dr. John A. Rice to the East Oklahoma Conference was announced, Dr. Rice stated that it was understood that he would be appointed to the pastorate of our church at Okmulgee, Okla., one of the leading churches of that Conference.

After one of the sessions, when Bishop McMurphy looked for his "old" hat where he had carefully placed it out of harm's way, he was unable to find it. In its place, however, he found a brand-new "Stetson," a present from some of his friends. We feel that it is only proper to add that this act contained no suggestion, either expressed or implied, that the Bishop's head had swelled beyond the proportions of his old hat.

Dr. F. N. Parker is one of the most greatly beloved members of the Conference. He is always in his place in the Conference room, he is thoroughly informed concerning the law, polity, and doctrines of the church, and it is no wonder the president of the Conference leans heavily upon him in the administration of affairs. His brethren believe that he is one of the best qualified men in the church for the episcopal office.

There was a large attendance of the lay delegates at the Conference, and their interest in all its proceedings was marked. The report of the Committee on Lay Activities was a ringing declaration on the part of the laymen of their interest in all that pertains to the work of the church. Mr. T. Wynn Holloman, of Alexandria, was elected Conference Lay Leader, and Mr. Stephen S. Thomas was elected as Assistant Lay Leader.

The singing of the Wisdom Slsters was a very delightful feature of the Conference sessions. A motion was passed asking their return next year, and many of the preachers made arrangements with them to assist in revival services next summer. They sing the old songs—full of melody and of religion.

The hospitality of the citizens of Alexandria was unbounded, and their interest in the sessions of the Conference was great. The audiences at the evening services taxed the capacity of the auditorium.

Many people were unable to get inside the church to hear the great sermon by Bishop McMurphy on Sunday morning.

The Conference was blessed by the presence of its superannuate members. It is an inspiration to the younger men to look upon the faces of these veterans who stood in the ranks when forces were small, and it is a benediction to them to hear their testimonials of triumphant faith.

Mr. J. M. Way, of the Laymen's Movement, was in attendance upon the Conference and rendered great service to the laymen in connection with their work. He "knows his job," and is busily engaged at it.

The report of the Statistical Secretary showed that the net gain in membership during the year amounts to 2,198. The total number of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Louisiana is 45,820. There has been an increase of 3,742 in the enrollment of the Sunday schools, and of 1,051 in the membership of the Epworth League. There are 4,733 members of the Woman's Missionary Society, an increase of 350. The grand total of amounts contributed for all purposes during the year is $1,096,705, an increase of $278,341. During the year 1803 adults have been baptized, an increase of 220, and 1,158 infants have been baptized, an increase of 155.

THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A Short History.

By Rev. John W. Boswell, D.D.

The North Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was authorized by the General Conference of 1870. It was composed of parts of the Memphis, Mississippi, and Mobile Conferences. The first session met and organized in Water Valley, Miss., November 30, 1870. The body was called to order at 9 o'clock a.m. by Bishop David S. Doggett, who presided throughout the session. The Conference embraced a full week, closing Tuesday night, the 6th of December.

The Conference was composed of 124 preachers, including fourteen applicants for admission on trial, and thirty-one laymen. The roll-call showed ninety-five preachers and thirty-one laymen present the first day. Others came in later.

Organization was effected and the Conference proceeded to work as if it were an old body. No extra preliminaries were observed. There is no intimation that members from three Conferences had come together to form a new body. The former Conference connection of the preachers is not mentioned. To identify them, however, is made easy by references to Conference minutes. Of the 124 preachers, seventeen came from the Mobile Conference, nineteen from the Mississippi, and eighty-eight from the Memphis. Of the lay delegates present, twenty were from the Memphis Conference, four from the Mississippi, and seven from the Mobile.

The Conference prepared for the transaction of business by the election of John Barcroft as Secretary, Ransom J. Jones, Assistant Secretary, and S. A. Brown, Statistical Secretary. Naturally, as the elements of three Conferences had come together, there was more than ordinary interest in the Secretaryship. A long time was consumed before an election was reached. Three select men were put forward. Besides John Barcroft, there were Dr. L. C. Garland, professor in Mississippi University, and afterwards Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, and Ransom J. Jones, an elegant and popular preacher from the Mississippi Conference. The contest was exciting, but as far as I know no hard feelings were generated. With three men in the ring, it was not an easy matter to secure a majority of the whole. Barcroft, after five or six ballots, was elected. He generously nominated R. J. Jones as his assistant, and the work moved along smoothly. Barcroft was a fine English scholar, an excellent penman, and though this was his first secretarial work, he acquitted himself with honor, developed into a first-class Secretary, and held the place for twenty consecutive sessions, including the first.

The Conference began its career with 21,757 white members, 58 colored members, and 190 local preachers. There were 200 Sunday schools, 1112 teachers, and 8072 scholars. For Conference claimants $1757.25 were collected, with $1486.05 for missions. These figures, with the number of baptisms reported, make up all the statistics available, the statistical report having been lost. To-day, according to the Minutes of 1920, we have 179 traveling preachers, 70 local preachers and 62,547 members; 558 houses of worship, and 166 parsonages. We have 499 Sunday schools with an enrollment of 38,923 members. And, besides the amount raised and expended for church and parsonage building and repairing, and other local improvements, the Conference raised for salaries and benevolences the sum of $326,988. This amount does not include what was paid on Centenary pledges.

These figures indicate wonderful progress—such progress as the majority of men now on the field are unable to realize. But we, who were here, and know the state of the country immediately following the war between the States, and shared the hardships and sufferings of the time, can see clearly the difference between now and then. We know, too, what it all cost, and rejoice with our sons and daughters in their rich inheritance.

It will be noticed that the Conference handled a very small amount of money. It fell to my lot, in connection with Captain E. S. Walton, to take charge of the mission funds. It gave us an immense amount of trouble. Nearly all the preachers seemed to think that it was their religious duty to turn over to the Conference the very money received from the people. They had not learned to avail themselves of bank checks. And as "shin-plasters" were still current, a large per cent of our money was in little paper bills, ranging from five to fifty cents in size. We had something like a peck of it. How many hundreds of dollars it counted up I have forgotten. But I have not forgotten that we had to count the shin-plasters about a half-dozen times before we could make our accounts balance. Even then, we did not certify that the count was correct. I do not remember whether we paid the missionaries in shin-plasters or not.

Among the charter members of the Conference were a few men of education. A few others, though lacking in polish, were men of great force. The majority were men of average intelligence and education, consecrated to the service, diligent in their work, and brought things to pass. The church grew in numbers and wealth, developed its resources and soon put the North Mississippi Conference among the foremost in the Connection. Some of our best men preferred to remain in their old Conferences and were transferred accordingly. Among these were E. V. Levert, Wm. Murrah, and C. B. Galloway. It was not many years until the product of our soil began to be in demand in other sections. J. M. Boon, one of our brightest young men, was among the first to be called for. He went to Missouri. After a while others followed. Then it became so common as to attract attention and call forth protest. Too many of our best and strongest men were being transferred. Our brother, possibly fearing that he might be the next to be drafted, put the Conference on notice by saying: "If this keeps on, the first thing you know some of our best men will be taken from us. It must be stopped," or "words to that effect."

Joking aside, it is a fact that the North Mississippi Conference has reared fine men and given not a few of them to other sections, and other departments of the work. Some have gone to the finest pastorates in the church, and upon two has been thrust the highest honors their brethren could bestow. I refer to Bishop C. B. Galloway, a charter member of our body, and to Bishop W. B. Murrah, who lives and in the strength of his manhood blesses the whole church.

One very unpleasant thing occurred at this session, but there was no public disturbance, nor was any mention ever made of it in the public prints. Bishop Doggett was assigned to what was supposed to be one of the elegant homes of Water Valley. He was received at the home and treated with apparent civility. The first morning after his arrival he was called to breakfast without any mention being made of prayer. The Bishop said nothing. It happened the same way the second morning. The Bishop quietly and in the most gentlemanly way inquired: "Why are we called to breakfast without prayer?" The landlord replied: "My wife is an Episcopalian, and I am a free-thinker." This was equivalent to saying, "We care nothing for the prayers of a Methodist." Bishop Doggett promptly demanded of the preacher that he be assigned another home. He returned no more to the free-thinker's house. Sunday morning following, he preached. His text was, "But the word of God is not bound." On all occasions the Bishop was a great preacher—profound, scholarly, used the most elegant and fitting language—an impressive orator, and delivered his message with telling effect. I doubt if he ever exceeded the effort of that occasion. Never have I heard such a scathing denunciation of skepticism. Knowing what had occurred, it seemed to me that from almost the beginning to the end of the sermon he had that infidel lawyer in his presence and was giving him the law from heaven. The lawyer was not there to receive it, but hundreds of others were, and they gladly heard the Word.

In closing this bit of history it will not be out of place to say that, as far as I am informed, only ten preachers present at the first session of the North Mississippi Conference are now living, and only two lay delegates, viz.: Preachers—Thos. Cameron, T. F. Brewer, F. W. Dyer, S. W. Miller, D. L. Gogdell, Jos. J. Brooks, C. L. Bates, J. M. Boon, A. W. Langley, and J. W. Boswell. The laymen are F. A. Howell and J. B. Streater.

ON THE EVE OF A GREAT OPPORTUNITY FOR THE CHURCH.

By Samuel McCrea Cavert,
Secretary, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Without exaggeration it may be truly said that on the Washington Conference may hang the course of human history for a hundred years to come. It is a plain and sober fact that civilization itself is in the balance. Unless the next war can be averted now, the ruin which we only barely escaped in the last conflict will stare the world full in the face.

In the midst of our high hopes there is a growing anxiety lest the outcome of the Conference prove disappointing. Disquieting remarks are heard concerning the impracticability of any far-reaching results. The culmination of this tendency to dampen popular expectations finds expression in one of our great newspapers, which even deprecates the earnest efforts being made to arouse an intelligent public opinion on the momentous issue. In effect it seems to say, "Run along, childish idealists, and do not embarrass the practical men whom the governments have appointed to attend to the matter."

For the church, at least, this will never do! Detailed solutions, indeed, must be left to statesmen, but insist we must, with all the power at our command, that some genuine solution of the problems of international life must now be reached, some Christian substitute found for the method of competitive armament and fratricidal war. To do otherwise would be to fall in bearing witness to the Gospel of our Lord and its meaning for our contemporary life.

Practical considerations also lead us in the same direction, for the one hope of constructive results from the Conference lies in public sentiment. Certainly no great action is likely to be taken except as the result of an unmistakable demand from the masses of the people.

If it be objected that we ought shrewdly to conceal our earnest enthusiasm lest we create an impression on foreign governments that reduction of armaments will come in America, whether they take similar action or not, the answer is clear: no such scheming and calculating spirit can furnish an atmosphere in which unselfish and disinterested decisions can possibly be reached. Even if it should result in reduction of armament, through fear of what the United States might otherwise do, it could never result in peace, for we would have been playing upon the notes of suspicion and distrust which have always produced war in the past and always will. The best diplomacy for the United States to-day is no "diplomacy" at all. Only a great tide of Christian idealism, calling out similar idealism in other peoples, can give the upward turn for which the whole world longs. If that idealism be not found in our own nation, which planned the Conference, which is its host, which is furthest removed from the dead hand of the past, where can we expect it to be found at all?

And how shall it be found here if it is not found, full and strong and at its height, in the Christian Church? The oft-quoted words of General Tasker H. Bliss call us to our knees in penitence and prayer. "The responsibility is entirely on the professing Christians of the United States. If another war like the last one should come, they will be responsible." Severe as the words sound, they will be true unless we bend our utmost energy, now and during months to come, to mobilize a mighty tide of Christian public opinion throughout the land.

For the task of securing a rational and pacific method of settling international disputes, in place of the mailed fist, is not one that can be accomplished by machinery. It is a great spiritual enterprise. The trouble is, at bottom, a spiritual trouble: the attitude of fear, of suspicion, of selfishness, which pervades our international life. So the remedy must be a spiritual one—the acceptance of an attitude toward life not yet generally accepted in our economic, industrial and international affairs. This goes to the very foundation of men's thinking, requiring of us that we regard our own nation not as the final end-in-itself but as a member of a brotherhood of nations meant to live in mutual helpfulness under a common Father.

More, then, than anything else the world to-day needs faith—faith in the workableness of the way of brotherhood revealed to us in Jesus Christ, faith in the vast possibilities of this Conference for securing a thorough-going reduction of armament and a constructive plan for co-operation among the nations of the earth. To call men to such faith surely is the task of the Christian church.

And let us not think for a moment that when November 11 is past our task is done. It will only be begun. For weeks, months, we must ceaselessly insist that a great Christian principle is at stake. For weeks, months, we must be studying international questions in the light of the Christian Gospel. For weeks, months, we must be in earnest prayer for Divine Guidance. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit will be saying to the churches."

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—IMPORTANT!

All those who wish their Advocates sent to a new address should notify us at once of the change desired, giving the old post office as well as the new. We can make no changes without this authority. This notice is especially important to the preachers of the three Conferences.

JOHN ARTHUR BRISBANE was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, March 15, 1854, and died October 7, 1921, in McComb Hospital, where he had undergone a serious operation. In his infancy his parents came South and made their home in Tangipahoa Parish, Louisiana, where he grew up to manhood, later moving to New Orleans. In 1882 he gave his heart and life to Christ and joined the Methodist Church, in which he found most helpful environment in the development of unusual spiritual growth. In 1883 Brother Brisbane was happily married to Miss Hattie Lavigne, to which union were born three children—one daughter, Mrs. Grace Vaughan, and two sons, Robt. A. and Jno. W., who, together with their mother, survive. Brother Brisbane is also survived by five sisters, viz.: Mrs. W. M. Walker, of Magnolia, Miss.; Mrs. J. G. Bugbee, Mrs. Lottie Ulmer, Mrs. Bell Tankersley, and Mrs. Doc. Morgan, of New Orleans.

I have never known a truer man. His faithfulness was marked. The church with him was first every day of the week. His children and all the neighbors "call him blessed." When the summons came it found him ready and waiting, with no hurried preparations to make. As steward and Sunday school superintendent, he served faithfully and efficiently for a number of years and at the time of his death was the worthy lay leader.

We miss him every day and especially at the house of worship. Men and women like John Arthur Brisbane and his faithful wife are verily "the salt of the earth." We laid him away in the beautiful cemetery at Magnolia, Miss., after services were held in the church which he loved, October 8, 1921, to await the resurrection of the just. We expect to see him again in the Land of Glory.

Mrs. JANIE ANN DAY-BUTLER was born July 12, 1850, and was married to Mr. Rowland W. Butler, October 9, 1872. She joined the Methodist Church in the early summer of 1873, and died September 14, 1921. She was the mother of eight children, two of whom died in infancy; the other six, together with her faithful husband, survive her. The children are Dr. R. M. Butler, of Hourlyde, H. I.; Mrs. R. W. Brown, Mrs. C. D. Turnipseed, of Brookhaven; R. W. Butler, Jr., of Natchez, Miss.; Mrs. W. H. Carroll, of Silver City, Miss., and Carl Butler, of Gulfport, Miss.

Sister Butler was one of the most self-sacrificing women I ever knew. Her family and her church had first place in her affections and her plans. Her home was always open to the preacher, where he was made to feel welcome and at ease. She and her Christian husband always thought of asking the preacher to hold prayer service whenever he made a visit in their home. The poor and forgotten were beneficiaries of her charitable heart and hand. I do not think a greater thing can be said of any one than can be said of this good woman—that she remembered God's poor. She has left a heritage to her children in the way of a stainless, spotless, consecrated life far better than the richer of earth.

Sister Butler was, for many months before her death, an invalid and suffered, but in a most uncomplaining way. On October 15, surrounded by a large concourse of loved ones and friends, kind hands tenderly bore her body from the church in Liberty, Miss., where services had been conducted by the writer, to the cemetery, where we laid her in the tomb. From this land of grief we confidently look for the dawn of endless day, when we expect to see her again. Amen!

Mrs. RUBY LEE DOUGHTY Mc DANIELS was born near Greensburg, La., July 26, 1889, and died at Andrew, La., November 3, 1921. While teaching school at the place of her death she was married to Frank James Mc Daniels, an employee of the Hunter Canal Company, and here spent the remaining days of her life in happy wedlock, the queen of her home. From her home church, Pine Hill, on the Greensburg charge, she transferred her membership to Indian Bayou, and was a devout servant of Christ, and a loyal member of the Methodist Church. Having taught the school at Andrew for two and a half years, she became a great friend of the children of the community, practically all of whom are French, and their devoted love for her was shown by their deep sorrow as in a body they attended her funeral and wept past her open coffin. She was carried by loved ones back to her own family burying place at the Pine Hill church in St. Helena Parish to "sleep the sleep that knows no waking" until the resurrection morning.

"As the years, an endless host
Come pressing swiftly on;
The brightest names that earth can boast
Just glisten, and are gone."

P. O. LOWREY.

On September 12, 1921, the death angel entered the home of JAMES MONROE STAFFORD at Handsboro, Miss., and called him to the home eternal. His age was 62 years, 8 months, and 6 days. He was a good man, useful citizen, and industrious worker of the church. All his life the writer has known Brother Stafford, and will say unhesitatingly that he was a genuine Christian and gentleman. Converted, he joined the Methodist Church 22 years ago. Since then he has been faithful as Sunday school superintendent, at prayer meeting ready to lead when needed, and to do anything that would promote the cause of Christ. He was confined to his bed for several weeks. One Sunday morning the bell did not ring for Sunday school. When he knew the cause, he said: "Go, ring the bell loud and long—its melodies will not disturb me." He wanted all his obligations settled before he died. He leaves a Christian wife and ten children, six boys and four girls, nearly all members of the church. The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. G. W. McLain, and the writer. To all, say: "Trust in Jesus to be happy."

CHARLES J. WOOD was born in Pontotoc County, Mississippi, August 12, 1854, and on September 28, 1921, he died at his home near Oxford, Miss. When he was eight years of age his father and family moved to Lafayette County and in this County his life was spent. On January 3, 1889, he was married to Miss Alice Douglas, of near Oxford. He was converted at the Oxford Camp Ground in 1904, joined the Methodist Church at Mt. Zion, and was a faithful member of this church until the end. Mr. Wood was one of

SO WEAK SO NERVOUS

How Miserable This Woman Was Until She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Toomsboro, Ga.—"I suffered terribly with backache and headache all the time, was so weak and nervous I didn't know what to do, and could not do my work. My trouble was deficient and irregular periods. I read in the papers what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others and decided to give it a trial. I got good results from its use so that I am now able to do my work. I recommend your Vegetable Compound to my friends who have troubles similar to mine and you may use these facts as a testimonial."—Mrs. C. F. PHILLIPS, Toomsboro, Ga.

Weak, nervous women make unhappy homes, their condition irritates both husband and children. It has been said that nine-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous despondency, "the blues," irritability and backache arise from some displacement or derangement of a woman's system. Mrs. Phillips' letter clearly shows that no other remedy is so successful in overcoming this condition as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

and two brothers, only one of whom, Mrs. Ella Davis, of Chance, Ala., is living. He joined the church of his choice (M. E. Church, South), when 18 years old and served it with his life and substance to the best of his ability to the time of his passing away, as steward from the age of 21 years, both in Alabama and Louisiana, and sometimes as superintendent of Sunday school. From Alabama he came to Louisiana, settling at Vernon, Jackson Parish, in 1891, later moving to Wyatt, where he fell asleep September 27, 1921. It goes without saying that one who was faithful to home interests, to family, to country, and to his church as was Brother Pine was ready for the crossing; but in addition, calling his family to him just before dying, he gave his testimony that he was ready. I was his pastor for a period of years and found him conservative both in politics and religion. J. H. BROWN, Jonesboro, La.

DANIEL H. COWART died the latter part of October, 1921. He was born August 7, 1844, during turbulent times; joined the church while living on the Big Black, became an active member, and remained one in Nugent, where he moved and lived till death. Family prayer was a blessing that he did not deprive his home of. At night, reading the Bible, singing hymns, praying, all this furnished spiritual food which was to tell in after days. His home was an open door to preachers and strangers—a refreshing that is so rare in this rich and rushing age. His generosity extended to the needy and others; he would lend and not ask in return, thereby losing money and goods. Best of all, he revered the name of the Lord. He hated cursing, did not use by-words, and, according to Sister Cruthirds, his daughter, who married a preacher, he was never known to utter an oath. The writer was not acquainted with him for a very long time; but he can testify to his suffering and expressions of praises of religion during his last, long and great sickness. He "fell on sleep;" he is to await the last quickening of the "quick and the dead." His funeral services were conducted by Brother D. W. Ulmer, of Saucier, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas it has pleased the Divine Master to remove from our midst our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. E. A. BARRETT; and,

Whereas her death has brought sorrow upon our community, our churches and our class;

Therefore, be it resolved, That the members of the T. E. L. Class of Elizabeth, Louisiana, record our gratitude to the Giver of all good for a member so useful, so worthy and so earnest in our cause.

Resolved, That while we deplore her departure, we are cheered in the thought that she is with the just made perfect, and that the memory of her glorious Christian life will yield an influence that is never-dying.

Resolved, That we spread upon the minutes of this class a copy of these resolutions, and that a copy be sent to members of the family, also a copy to the Christian Advocate and the Baptist Message.

This holy woman who wrought as a wife, as a mother, and as a servant of Jesus Christ, has gone to reap a rich reward on high.

Signed by: Mrs. Wiley Williams, Mrs. A. J. Osterland, Mrs. R. L. Thompson.

BUT HALF BEGUN

By Garfield Evans.

It was with keen interest that we read the call for five thousand recruits for life service. We wondered if really that many could be recruited. It never had been done before. Would they really understand and get the vision? Now we rejoice in the realization of the objectives of our leaders. The five thousand volunteers sought have responded.

Again we rejoice in the fact that the Foreign Department of the Board of Missions tells us last year we sent out our full quota of missionaries. Bishop Moore had eagerly said that he must have increased forces. This summer he said he had all that he could now use. Korea had been sorely straitened because of a small force; but Bishop Lambuth on his last journey said they could not use any more men now. Africa with its pristine interest and romance had been short of men, the money had been waiting for several years. But Africa now has its full quota.

These are reasons for great rejoicing, yet they are not sufficient to think that the task is finished. Many of those who have gone out have gone in pioneering tasks. They must be followed by men who will need to be prepared in a more technical way. The missionary's task is not a temporary one. With its sentimental interest and halo we often forget that his work must be constructive and the elements of the heroic in his life only blossom in the homeland. The heroic story in the homeland is often a matter of prosaic drudgery when performed on the field.

The task of recruiting and training the recruits is only half begun. The record of names and correspondence give evidence that many have declared themselves volunteers without understanding fully what was involved. Every society in the church should become active in seeing that proper information is given the volunteers. Let there be public and private prayer for the volunteers. The leaders of the church should see that there is a life service band formed in every church where there are two or more volunteers. This is not an organization, but the meeting of the volunteers for instruction and fellowship at stated intervals.

In many churches the volunteers will be found to be lacking in the necessary funds to continue their preparation. No impression for Christian service is sufficient without the eager desire to fulfill that purpose with the most adequate preparation. There are many very worthy volunteers who are being delayed, and others who will become discouraged because of the delay, from a lack of financial assistance. It is necessary this year at least that all of these needs be met by local and district organizations since the Student Fund cannot be available until the funds are collected.

No passive interest is sufficient for determining the choice of a life career. Every positive influence of the home, school, and church is needed. To talk about life service and not to seek opportunities in helping young people realize their convictions is a denial of our faith. Let us finish the task.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Saturday and Sunday and Monday were spent with Rev. J. L. Snellgrove, on the Moscow charge. We visited four of his churches and had large and attentive crowds. He has the work well in hand and is closing out in good shape, comparatively. He is improving one of his churches and trying to make it lead out in organized church work. If they will do this, it will mean the furtherance of the kingdom of God in that whole territory. I found a disposition on the part of the folks to desire better things and this was indeed gratifying. Two of the schools will use graded literature for their Beginners, and all of them will get more helps.

I will have a stereopticon and slides for a while yet and any one who wishes to have them shown can do so by making request for same. The machine has a gas tank and can be used anywhere.

A matter of considerable concern to the whole Conference is the reports of the Sunday schools made by the pastors to the Annual Conference. The reports last year showed a net loss of Sunday schools reported to the Annual Conference of 33. It showed also a loss of officers and teachers, but a net gain of over 2000 in enrollment.

A Sunday school should be reported if it is not running at the time the Conference meets.

It is regrettable that a school should not run all the time, but if one has been running during the year, it should be reported. Many times a school will have to be reorganized many times, but at least the time will come when it will perpetuate itself.

Try and help us get accurate reports.

Any school or circuit that desires a Teacher Training Class taught, select any book you wish and notify us and we will get you a teacher. All the expense it will be to you will be the entertainment of the teacher and the purchasing of the books.

Pray for the work and workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Let us thank God for what has been done in his name during the year, draw closer to him, press forward, and let him use us to the limit of our consecration and his strength.

We have made gratifying progress in the work of religious education during the year. The enrollment in the Sunday schools has increased, several new schools have been organized, the quality of the work done in teaching has been improved, the offerings to the Centenary have been creditable. We shall make further progress when our pastors and superintendents study the books in our training courses so they may know how to administer the affairs of the Sunday school, and we must have buildings to care for those who attend. Trained leaders and more room are the two items we must have if we are to teach all the people and train them in worship and service.

During the year a Wesley Bible Class Federation has been organized, one Conference and two District Standard Training Schools have been held. Twenty classes have been taught by the field and volunteer workers of the Conference. We have enrolled 683 teachers and officers for training and 470 credits have been issued.

The schools of the Conference have paid in, up to November 1, $6,984.10 on the Centenary, and for the Orphanage and other objects a still larger sum. Less has been paid by the schools for strengthening and extending the schools than for any other purpose. This defect must be corrected if we make further progress.

So far, 64 pastors have sent in their reports for the year. For the information of the readers of the Advocate, we give a few of the reports: Greenville—31 officers and teachers; 48 on the cradle roll; 25 in the home department; 500 in all departments; two training classes for teachers; 8 Wesley Bible classes; 48 received into the church from the school; $240 raised for Missions, $26 for Sunday School Day, $1500 for supplies, $1723 for other objects.

Columbus, First Church—43 officers and teachers, 38 on cradle roll, 22 in home department, total enrollment 738, 6 Wesley Bible classes, 13 received into the church, $240 paid on Centenary, $31 for Sunday School Day, $300 for supplies, $650 for other objects.

Aherdeen—26 officers and teachers, 25 on cradle roll, 12 in home department, 370 total enrollment, 1 training class, 2 Wesley Bible classes, 33 received into the church, $14 Sunday School Day offering, $25 for Missions, $468 for supplies, $204 for other objects.

Holly Springs—39 officers and teachers, 51 on cradle roll, 37 in home department, 390 total enrollment, two training classes, 10 Wesley Bible classes, 38 received into the church, $200 raised for missions, $29.40 for Sunday School Day, $200 for supplies.

Pontotoc—22 officers and teachers, 39 on cradle roll, 24 in home department, total 275, 1 training class, 2 Wesley Bible classes, 4 received into the church, $246 for missions, $7.50 for Sunday School Day, $192 for supplies, $200 for other objects.

Byhalia—3 schools, 24 officers and teachers, 22 on cradle roll, 4 in home department, total 350, one training class, 2 Wesley Bible classes, 45 received into the church, $35 for Sunday School Day, $60 for missions, $175 for literature, $320 for other objects.

Kosciusko—2 schools, 30 officers and teachers, 35 on cradle roll, 8 in home department, total 325, one training class, 4 Wesley Bible classes, 31 received into the church, $66 for missions, $8 for Sunday School Day, $218 for supplies.

Itta Bena leads the Conference for Sunday School Day offering so far as reported—$44.35.

GENERAL ELEMENTARY COUNCIL

What It Is and What It Does.

The General Elementary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is composed of the General Elementary Superintendent and her assistants, the Conference Elementary Superintendents, ex-officio members, certain elected members and the Conference Field Secretaries, advisory members.

The purpose of the Council is to aid in formulating policies and in promoting programs of activity for the children of Southern Methodism.

Two very important meetings of the Council have been held this year—one at Nashville, Tenn., in March, and one at Junaluska, N. C., in July. Both of these meetings were well attended and did splendid work of a constructive character. At the Nashville session, part of the time was spent in revising the elementary standards. At the Junaluska session, many important matters were discussed, among them being the adaptation of standards to the one-room church, the adoption of a constitution and by-laws, the making of a Cradle Roll Standard in the ranks to correspond with those of the other Elementary departments, and the appointment of the following committees: Child Evangelism, Children's Week, Evaluation of Pictures, Stories and Books for Children and Teachers, Evaluation of Music for Children—Vocal and Instrumental—and The Home.

At the Junaluska session, the following were present: Mrs. L. G. Fant, Holly Springs, Miss.; Mrs. W. W. Adams, Memphis, Tenn.; Miss Caroline Hess, Alexandria, La.; Mrs. G. E. Cameron, Lexington, Ky.; Mrs. John A. Rice, Dallas, Texas; Miss Jean Crawford, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. L. P. Hanner, Spartanburg, S. C.; Miss Elizabeth Shields, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. C. J. Van Oppen, Greensboro, N. C.; Mrs. Bert Morehouse, Chicago; Miss Lynda Ramey, Oxford, Miss.; Miss Lola Lawler, Lakeland, Fla.; Miss Roherta Smith, Dublin, Ga.; Miss Georgia Keene, Durham, N. MISSIONARY EDUCATION CONFERENCE, 1922.

By R. B. Eleazer.

The annual Southern Conference of the Missionary Education Movement for 1922 has been set for June 23 to July 3 at Blue Ridge, N. C. At a recent meeting of the Conference Executive Committee held in the Methodist Mission Rooms in Nashville the Committee was reorganized, sub-committees were appointed and preparations begun for the conference, which will draw several hundred missionary leaders from a half dozen denominations in the South and East.

Dr. W. D. Weatherford, President of Southern College and executive of the Blue Ridge Association, was elected chairman to succeed Dr. H. F. Williams, resigned. Dr. C. L. Brown, of the Lutheran Board of Missions, Baltimore, was elected Vice-Chairman. The following were elected the committee on program: Dr. Weatherford, Rev. E. D. Grant, Mrs. Hume R. Steele, Dr. E. C. Cronk, Miss W. B. Lindley. This committee was instructed to lay out a full program of mission study, Bible study, normal training and inspirational addresses, and to take steps at once to secure the strongest leaders and speakers available.

The M. E. M. Conference has been held in the South for nineteen years consecutively and occupies a large place in the training of missionary leaders in this section. It is interdenominational, being conducted under the auspices of a number of missionary boards, including our own. Annual attendance runs to four or five hundred and is drawn from all the Protestant denominations.

A COATED TONGUE?

What It Means

A bad breath, coated tongue, bad taste in the mouth, languor and debility, are usually signs that the liver is out of order. At such times one should take a pleasant laxative. Such a one is made of Mayapple, leaves of aloe and put into ready-to-use form by Dr. Pierce, nearly fifty years ago, and sold for 25 cents by all druggists as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

From Hammond.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Hammond, La., held its regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. H. H. McCain, November 2. There was an attendance of twenty-four.

The regular business was first attended to, when the election of officers for the ensuing year followed. The Society showed their love and appreciation of the present officers by re-electing them without one dissenting voice: Mrs. J. W. Dunn, President; Mrs. Coake, Vice President; Mrs. C. B. Johnson, Recording Secretary; Mrs. H. H. McCain, Treasurer; Mrs. Steinbeck, Corresponding Secretary.

The Bible Study Class meets the third Tuesday in the month at the church. We are studying Revelations and have as helps the reference books by Milligan, Scott and Dean.

The meeting was dismissed by Mrs. Leon McCain in prayer, after which refreshments were served.

Union Meeting in New Orleans.

The Annual Union Meeting of the Missionary Societies of the Methodist churches in the city was held in Rayne-Memorial Sunday school chapel on Monday, November 7, at 2:30 p.m. Announcement cards had been sent out and the daily papers gave several notices of the meeting; therefore there was a splendid attendance, nine churches having representatives present. Mrs. John D. Rumph had arranged and presided over the meeting. The objects for prayer and giving for this, the week of Prayer throughout Southern Methodism, are Holding Institute and the Lambuth Memorial Training School.

The first day's program as outlined by the Woman's Council was carried out fully and several very interesting subjects were discussed. The program was as follows:

Hymn 495; Bible lesson, Mrs. W. L. Duren; Prayer, Miss Ellison, of St. Mark's Hall; Solo, Mrs. T. O. Adams.

The topic, Some Achievements through Prayer, was discussed under four headings, as follows:

1. A Mission Call through Prayer, Mrs. D. E. Strain, Felicity Church.

2. An Institution Established through Prayer, Mrs. Thompson, Carrollton Avenue.

3. A Great Leader Won through Prayer, Mrs. Alvis, Rayne Memorial.

4. Personal Service through Prayer, Mrs. Torian, Parker Memorial.

Mrs. C. F. Niebergall, President of the Louisiana Missionary Conference, was to have spoken for the Conference work, but was prevented from doing so on account of illness. Mrs. R. H. Harper prayed for her speedy recovery and for the success of the Conference work. A message of love and sympathy was sent to Mrs. Niebergall.

Mrs. S. A. Montgomery held quite an interesting quiz about the young women who have gone out from the Louisiana Conference, after which she gave us a brief history of their work and closed her remarks with a fervent prayer for each of the workers.

Our city work was told of in a most striking and entertaining manner by Mrs. J. B. Parker. She started from the very first Protestant meeting in New Orleans and came up to the present time, and closed her remarks with a description of our new St. Mark's Hall and impressed on each one present that the success of this new enterprise depended on the individual Methodist. Miss Stevens followed with a prayer for the new venture and the workers there.

Solo, Miss Kitty Levy; "Her Gift," an original Missionary story, was told in a most impressive manner by the author, Mrs. George S. Brown; Duet, "Whispering Hope," Mrs. T. O. Adams and Miss Kitty Levy.

MRS. J. M. WYATT HONORED.

The spacious, elegant home of Mrs. J. P. Shelby was the scene on November 2 of a large reception given Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, who for the past four years has served as president of our missionary society and who is soon to leave for other fields of labor.

Mrs. Wyatt and the executive officers stood in the receiving line and were greeted by almost every woman in Shelby, as each person regardless of denomination or creed, feels a special interest in Mrs. Wyatt.

Delicious punch was served throughout the afternoon, and the cut flowers, together with a profusion of autumn leaves, made a lovely picture under the soft lights.

Mrs. Wyatt was presented a valuable watch as our parting gift. This society has grown by leaps and bounds in all departments under her leadership, and every one went away feeling that it has been worth much to have known and been associated with such a strong character as Mrs. Wyatt, and wishing for her many years of useful service in the Master's vineyard.

Mrs. J. L. WILKINSON.

IN MEMORY OF REV. JAMES MATTHEW HENRY, D.D.,

Pastor Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Ruston, La., Died October 11, 1921.

Whereas, God, in his infinite wisdom, has deemed fit and proper to remove from his earthly sphere of action our beloved brother and pastor and called him to a higher realm of activity and usefulness;

And, whereas, Trinity Methodist Church, Ruston, Louisiana, in the death of its said beloved pastor, has received the most decided shock and signal bereavement it has ever sustained, since its organization, a bereavement that has been sorely felt by every member of said charge, and shared by every lover of truth, virtue and righteousness of this community;

And, whereas, it is meet and proper that the Board of Stewards of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Ruston, La., should voice its grief and lamentation and give expression to its profound sorrow and bereavement in fitting memorial, in attestation of its loving trust, its explicit faith, and its willing and cheerful loyalty to its said beloved, honored and revered leader;

Therefore, be it resolved by the Board of Stewards of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Ruston, La., that in the death of our said beloved pastor, brother and friend, our great church has suffered an irreparable loss, Christian citizenship has experienced a vital depletion in the ranks of its leaders, and the body politic of our State has lost one of its ablest promoters of clean, honest and wholesome government and defenders of the rights of the weak and helpless of the citizenry of the State.

Resolved, further, that the example, life and ministry of this noble, great and godly man was an inspiration and an uplift to every one with whom he came in contact, whether as a citizen of the community or as a minister and servant of the church of God. He was the embodiment of all that was ethical and ideal in the varied and many-sided relations he sustained to public life and people, outside as well as inside his own church family; tolerant at all times of the views and vagaries of others on all questions, though himself strong-minded, intellectual, and broad-gauged in his knowledge and information of things in general; and kind, and gentle and loving in his dealings, ministrations and intercourse with his fellowman in his every relation to him.

Resolved, further, that while the lofty pedestal of character built by this good man for himself, and occupied by him during the whole of his life, may be seemingly impossible, or difficult of attainment, by us, we hold it up as eminently worthy of our emulation. We do not know, nor is it proper that we should know, why an all-wise, merciful and loving Heavenly Father should have removed our lamented brother from his earthly sphere of usefulness and service in our midst, at the period of his life when the mental and physical man in him was at its prime, and the well-ripened fruit of his godly life was yielding its richest returns; when his ripe experience, his wise counsel, and his mature judgment was so much needed in the councils of his church, both locally and at large, and meant so much to the cause of righteousness generally: when such profoundly great and vital questions as world-disarmament, world-peace, and world-Christianization, so intimately and inseparably connected as they are, are clamoring for solution by war-cursed peoples of the world. It suffices that such is God's inscrutable way; and that whatever He does is best. And while we bow in humble submission to His will, and receive the blow with Christian resignation, as doth become us, we breathe the silent, reverent prayer of the contrite heart, that a merciful, tender, loving Heavenly Father will comfort, shield and protect the bereaved and heart-broken wife and helpless little children of our lamented brother and minister in their every want, leading them gently along life's rugged pathway, and keeping aglow upon the altars of their hearts the live coals of faith and trust in the God of their departed loved one.

Respectfully,

FROM DENHAM SPRINGS, LA.

Dear Brother Carley. We held our last service on the charge yesterday; had a great one, with six additions to the church, all of them adults, four strong men—one the professor of the high school here, one, manager of a sawmill plant, one, a station foreman, and the other a progressive farmer. I feel sure they will mean a great deal to this church.

I trust we will meet at Conference.

Faternally,

J. S. RUTLEDGE.

FROM GREENVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I just wanted to tell you that we had 249 men present to-day in the Big Brother Class, and a total attendance in all departments of 525. What do you think of that? The Big Brothers were racing with Greenwood on the matter of attendance. They had 136 men present as against our 249.

We have had 116 additions to the church this year, 50 of them on profession of faith. I have received 448 since coming here four years ago. We raised more than $11,000 for Centenary purposes and over $17,000 for Education. All goes well with us.

Yours,

E. S. LEWIS.

AT HOME.

This has been a strenuous year for me, but one of the best. I have held fifteen meetings. We closed a splendid revival at Camden, Miss., last week. We did not have many additions. Dan Kelly was there a year ago, and nearly every one who was not a member, joined. On the last Sunday night the house was packed and there was only one person of any age that was not a member. I went there that the young converts might receive a "second benefit." The church was wonderfully blessed. We held the meeting in the new Methodist church. Brother C. H. Ellis has done a great work in Camden. He has built a most beautiful church. It is a splendid monument to his great energy and ability. Brother Ellis is a most consecrated man, and capable of doing big things. Bishop McMurry had just visited Camden and dedicated the new church and we followed with a glorious revival. We helped raise nearly $200, a big part of the balance due the pastor from that church. I was at Camden twenty-four years ago and held one of the most wonderful meetings in the history of that town. Some of our best people there were converted in that revival.

I am now at home for a rest. However, it is hard to find time to stop and recuperate. I am a steward as well as a general evangelist, and I am giving a few days here to assist our faithful pastor. Brother Carter, put everything over the top—and we are going over.

Doctor, you are giving us a splendid paper and the readers of the Advocate appreciate the great work that you are doing. Yours fraternally,

W. M. McINTOSH.

Home-made Remedy Stops Coughs Quickly

The best cough medicine you ever used. A family supply easily and quickly made. Saves about $2.

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough, is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is pure and good.

Pour 2½ ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply—but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membranes that line the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for healing the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

"BUT AS WISE."

The apostle Paul was concerned not only to save men's souls but also to conserve their wits and quicken their intelligence. While he condemned a false philosophy, or a pseudo-science, which sought to rule the Divine Being out of the universe He has created, he appreciated at its full worth a reverent scholarship and a consecrated genius. (Had not the Master Himself, who went by the name of rabbi, bidden men to love the Lord their God with all their mind?)

Writing to a group of the early converts, Paul cautioned them against contemporaneous heresies and vanities, enjoining them to live "not as fools, but as wise." Wisdom is, then, a perpetual duty of the Christian. If anybody on earth should be inquiring and knowing, it is a man who professes faith in the Christ of whom it was said, "Rabbi, thou art a teacher come from God."

The modern church needs to be constantly reminded of the fact that there is a virtue of intelligence. Socrates of old knew enough to proclaim, as a basic principle of his conceptual philosophy, that "virtue is knowledge." It is true that, while there is no danger lest the world become too intelligent, there is a menace of intellectualism from which the church can expect no good—a kind of cold rationalism which takes no real account of God, and to which faith is an affront, and love a neglected challenge. But so long as man thinks in terms of God he can never think too much, or too broadly. It is the clear duty of a Christian to cultivate mind as well as heart.

The churches need to put more wisdom into the conduct of their work. A noted painter, questioned as to the pigments he used, was asked with what he mixed his paints. "With brains, sir!" was his reply. Church work should increasingly be mixed with brains. We should not be ignorant of the devices of wickedness, but as wise, yet harmless, human intelligence should outwit shame with virtue, and evil with good.

It has been well said that while physical laziness is generally condemned, mental laziness is too often condoned, or accepted as the inevitable thing. Such mental torpor, or mediocrity, is no proper mark of a Christian. Strive, then, for new ideas, broader horizons, and larger social sympathies, for so shalt thou serve the Lord thy God with thy mind, as well as with heart and soul!—Zion's Herald.

What Of This For A Christmas Present?

A sparkling new volume by John Paul on God and Christ and Inspiration and Atonement. A constructive answer, in classical plainness, to new theology and evolutionary criticism, entitled,

Scores of expositors recommend it. The Indian Witness of Lucknow says: "Such a reply to the so-called new theology is much needed at this time, when all authority is questioned, even that of revealed religion."

FROM SHELBY, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: This brief note from the Shelby charge is punctuated by the quick, sharp blows of the packers' hammer, for the quadrennium is up; the itinerant wheel is about to revolve again, and drop this Methodist preacher and his wife in a new field of labor. The parsonage is dismantled; all the old, dilapidated itinerant trunks are falling into line, awaiting the order, "Move on!" Have you forgotten the scenes, and the feelings they aroused, during your term of service on the editorial tripod? I dare say not. What Methodist itinerant can?

We are finishing a pleasant, and we trust, not a wholly unsuccessful quadrennium as pastor of the Shelby Methodists. We have not realized all our dreams, nor accomplished all our hopes for the Master's Kingdom here. And yet, as we review the four years which we have spent among these fine, big-hearted people, we feel like exclaiming, "What hath God wrought," in and through the membership of our church here! For the work is His: He has blessed the co-operation of pastor and people and made its accomplishment possible.

We found the membership here numbering 122; we are leaving 260, on the church register. We have had good revival meetings every year. The current year has seen the addition of fifty-five new members.

Every department of the church is well organized and actively at work. The men constitute a big Christian brotherhood lined up for service in a Business Men's Bible class. This was organized four years ago with five members. Its objective was to place on its roll every adult male member of our church. Having reached that goal early this year, it has enlisted a number of outsiders who had no church affiliations in Shelby. This class is a tower of strength to the pastor, and an influential moral force in the community.

The women are equally well organized in a wide-awake Missionary Society. It carries on its rolls, in active membership, practically all the women of the church. They have just completed their year's work, winning the Harvest Day gold star, for the fourth year in succession. These women are a power for good in every department of church work.

The young life of our church is organized into a live Junior church, with their own stewards who attend and make reports to the quarterly conference. Two services are held for them every Sunday. That at 7 o'clock in the evening is carried out by the Juniors themselves, under the wise leadership of some of our godly women, and is about the liveliest thing in Shelby.

Our Sunday school is doing good work under the superintendency of Brother F. W. Bullock. So, on the whole, the Shelby charge will furnish a rich and pleasant field of Christian activity for our successor. We congratulate him on the privilege of serving so choice a people; and bid him God-speed in all his labors to advance the cause of our blessed Master in this charge. We shall pray Heaven's richest blessings upon pastor and people alike as they move forward to greater conquests for the Kingdom.

EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN IN NATCHEZ.

My Dear Dr. Carley: To-morrow, the 13th inst., an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of the Men's Federated Bible Class of the Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches of the city of Natchez will begin. The preacher that will do the preaching and give general direction to these meetings is Rev. Dr. H. W. Stough, of Illinois. He comes recommended by such men as the late Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Dr. Torrey and others of equal ability, and the city of Natchez is expecting a great revival that will move the church life and lift the churches of the city to a higher level than they have had for many years, and bring many into the kingdom.

The three pastors, Dr. Borum, Dr. Thompson, and the writer, will stand by the Bible Class and Dr. Stough, and do all in their power to make the meeting a great success.

The campaign is expected to run at least three weeks, and maybe longer, and by this time the Mississippi Conference will have met and my relation with the pastoral charge of the Methodist church here will have closed, as the time limit will make it necessary for me to go. It is expected that services will be held each Sunday morning in the churches, so that the pastors may have the chance to receive into the church those who may have committed themselves to membership, and organize the good accomplished as the meeting progresses. It will be the pleasure of the Jefferson Street congregation to hear a sermon by Rev. C. N. Guice, of Conway, Ark., who was born in this church, and grew up under the ministry of the men who have been the leaders of the kingdom, men like T. B. Holloman, Bryant Lewis, W. C. Black and C. G. Andrews, and others too numerous to mention in a short note like this. He will preach at the 11 o'clock hour in the morning, the 13th inst. This will be a very great pleasure to the parents of Brother Guice, as they have been members of this church for many years, and the other members of the family, and we all rejoice at the growing usefulness of this young man who has won his way to the top, and is regarded as one of the most successful evangelists in the church. He is remembered with pleasure by his friends of the Mississippi Conference, of which he was a member for several years, and we all watch with growing interest his success in the work of the Master.

W. H. SAUNDERS.

FROM FAYETTE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Will you please let a report for our year's work from Fayette find space in the Advocate? This is the close of my second year here, and I feel that it has been one of progress in the work of the Kingdom. The good people of the church and town have been very kind to the preacher and his family, remembering us with many nice things all during the year.

We have had our fourth quarterly conference, and were able to report on the finances for the year, $1296, with much more to come later. The preacher and presiding elder have been paid in full for year, with the Conference collections coming up. We will report, "Everything in full, Bishop."

THE BEST YET.

Our Sunday school is a live, working school. Under the leadership of the Sunday school superintendent and her faithful corps of teachers, we have five organized Wesley Bible classes—with fine attendance and good record of work done for each. Our school has Cradle Roll, Primary or Beginners' department, under fine leaders. All told, we have a fine school.

The missionary work of the church is in the hands of fine ladies, who love God and do all they can for the advancement of the great cause of missions in the church. We have a W. M. S.-Adult, Young People, and Junior. These societies have raised something over $600 this year.

We had our revival in August, with Rev. J. Lambuth Evans, of the Louisiana Conference, doing the preaching, assisted by Mrs. Alma G. Spaulding, soloist, and Miss Evelyn Hammett, pianist, both of our local congregation.

We had a good season for the Lord—large congregations throughout the two weeks, many hearts were touched, and a number pledged their lives unto God and his Christ.

This was a fine team. Brother Evans is a good preacher, and works faithfully for the consecration of life, "body, mind and soul," unto Christ and his church, for service unto God. His assistants were faithful in ministering in the gospel of song, and no finer soloist could have been secured than the one we had, our own choir directress.

I feel that the spiritual life of the church is on a high plane, and many are rejoicing in the "love of the Lord."

We have a fine official board, men of courage, and men who love the church. We have two young men with the board for the new year who are jewels, and fortunate will be the preacher who can have these young men, together with the others, to work with.

Thanking and praising God for what has been accomplished, and trusting to see you at Conference, I am,

PROCEEDINGS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

AMORY, MISS., NOV. 16-21, 1921.

Reported by Rev. H. P. Lewis.

As early as Sunday some of the preachers had made their way to the seat of the Conference, and all day Monday and Tuesday every train brought delegates, so that at roll call very few failed to answer to their names.

Many standing committees met Tuesday and prepared their reports for the Conference. On Tuesday evening the members of the Conference and the local congregation at Amory were delighted with a semi-centennial sermon delivered by Brother Jno. Ritchey, who during this session will celebrate his 81st birthday.

The Conference session proper opened at 9 a.m. Wednesday. The Bishop, W. F. McMurry announced and the Conference sang hymn 560. The Bishop led in prayer and following this the Conference partook of the Lord's Supper, the Bishop being assisted by Brothers W. M. Young, R. O. Brown, L. A. McKeown and J. M. Wyatt.

The roll was called by J. R. Countiss, the secretary of the last Conference, who was elected as secretary for this Conference. On the nomination of the secretary, J. E. Stephens was chosen as assistant secretary and the following as statistical secretaries: W. R. Lott, R. G. Lord, S. H. Caffey, C. T. Floyd, N. G. Golden, S. C. Yates.

The hours for the daily sessions and the bar were fixed and the Bishop was swamped with gavels. R. M. Weaver presented him a gavel made from part of the material in old Bethel church, located on the old Shiloh battle grounds. Rev. T. H. Dorsey presented him one made from a black walnut tree planted at Aberdeen 60 years ago by Bishop Paine. Rev. E. H. Cunningham presented the Bishop one made from material taken from the home where Bishop Galloway was born.

A most beautiful scene that followed was the presentation of a beautiful bouquet of chrysanthemums by Mrs. Maida Stanley to the Conference in behalf of the good women of the church.

The Bishop met every speech of presentation with witty and appropriate remarks.

The following committees were chosen to look after the several interests of the Conference:

Third Year—Melville Johnson, in place of O. W. Bradley, transferred.

Memoirs—J. J. Garner, in place of O. W. Bradley.

The visiting brethren and those representing the connectional interests of the church were introduced to the Conference, and some of them made announcements about the interests they represent.

Appropriate greetings were sent to the Annual Convention of the Christian Church at Aberdeen, the Synod of the Presbyterian Church at Pontotoc, and the Baptist Convention at Jackson.

The Bishop called Question 17 and the presiding elders made their reports in writing, from which we cull the following facts of progress: "There have been good revivals on most all the charges and an ingathering of between 5000 and 6000 members. Eight young men come up for admission, the largest class in several years. Eleven have been given license to preach. Real progress has been made in every district in church buildings and improvement of property. The Greenville District took the lead in the Christian Education Movement, getting nearly all its quota subscribed.

The following resolution, submitted by R. P. Neblett, was adopted:

"Whereas our minds are turning daily towards the Conference in Washington, where the representatives of the several nations are deliberating over the matter of disarmament; and,

"Whereas this is the chief concern to millions of earth and the welfare of generations to come, therefore be it resolved,

"That we, the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in North Mississippi, in Conference session do hereby register our hearty approval of this undertaking, and pledge earnest prayer for these servants of humanity and wish them success.

"Be it further resolved, that this Conference be called to special prayer for these servants of humanity at such time as the Bishop shall deem advisable, and that a message be sent the American representatives in this meeting regarding the action taken here."

Signed by: J. H. Holder, W. R. Lott, R. P. Neblett, J. M. Wyatt.

The Bishop selected the first hour of the second day's session as the time for special prayer.

Upon calling the names of the superannuates, it was reported that two of them, R. P. Goar and J. C. McElroy had answered to the "last roll-call." One more of the brethren, D. C. Foust, has laid down his armor to take up his crown.

T. J. Halfacre and O. P. Armour withdrew from the ministry and membership of the Methodist Church and united with the Presbyterian U. S. A. J. A. Coleman located at his own request.

J. A. George requested that a committee of investigation be appointed to sift charges against him. J. W. Ward, J. E. Cunningham and C. P. Moss were named as the committee of investigation.

O. L. Savage's name was referred to the committee on Conference Relations. The condition of his needs was stated, and the brethren of the Conference made an offering for him.

At this juncture T. M. Brownlee stated to the Conference that a club of 50 laymen had been organized at Starkville to pay $2 apiece to every preacher who is superannuated, and that Brother Savage would receive a check for $100 from this club. Brother Brownlee said further that he expected to have a membership of 500 laymen in the club shortly.

Announcements were made and the first day's session of the Conference came to a close.

Dr. Luther E. Todd addressed the members of the Conference at 3 p.m.

Dr. S. H. C. Bargin, Secretary of the Church Extension Board, spoke at the evening hour.

SECOND DAY'S SESSION.

Conference was called to order by Bishop McMurry at 9 a.m. Hymn 702, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," was sung, and in accordance with the resolution adopted on the first day, the hour was devoted to prayer and consideration of the disarmament conference in session at Washington. Dr. C. J. A. Randolph, chaplain in the U. S. Army, read Is. 2:1-5; W. W. Woollard led the Conference in prayer; hymn 382, "Soldiers of Christ Arise," was sung, and the Bishop introduced two laymen of the church to make appropriate addresses on the occasion. They were Judge Percy Bell, of Greenville, and Hon. A. H. Stephens, of New Albany. Hymn 416, "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," was sung, and the Conference was led in prayer by Brother D. W. Dabb.

After reading of the minutes of yesterday's session and calling the roll of absentees, the Bishop called Question 1, "Who are admitted on trial?" T. B. Thrower, G. E. Williams, G. W. Roberson, C. W. Avery, G. C. Gregory, and H. H. Wallace were admitted.

The Class of the Second Year was called, and L. H. Floyd, N. D. Guerry, W. O. Hunt and R. G. A. Carlisle had their characters passed and remained in the Class of the Second Year. W. R. Lining, J. S. Maxey, Seamon Rhea and S. C. Yates were advanced to the Class of the Third Year.

The Class of the First Year was called, and G. D. Burt, W. T. Phillips, and J. W. York were advanced to the Class of the Second Year. J. R. Murff was retained in the Class of the First Year.

The following local preachers, recommended for deacon's orders by the Corinth District, were elected to the same: J. A. C. Nelson, R. C. Nunnery, George B. Love.

The committee of investigation appointed to examine into the charges against J. A. George, reported a trial not necessary. The Conference received the news with loud applause.

L. P. Wasson read the report of the Board of Education, and pending the adoption of the same J. H. Holder, Secretary of the Education Movement of the Conference, made his report, and following him, Dr. Stonewall Anderson, Secretary of the General Board, addressed the Conference. The report was adopted.

J. R. Countiss read the following resolutions:

A WISE PRAYER.

Not more of light, O God,
But eyes to see what is.
Not sweeter songs, but ears to hear
The present melodies.
Not more of strength, but how to use
The power that I possess.
Not more of love, but skill to turn
A frown to a caress.
Not more of joy, but how to feel
Its kindly presence near.
To give to others all I have
Of courage and of cheer;
No other gifts, O God, I ask
But only sense to see
How best those precious gifts to use
Thou hast bestowed on me.

PAUL'S VINDICATION OF CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

I place at the head of this article the above caption because some people of a meddling disposition, who would have individual consciences to conform to their way of thinking, have miserably perverted the argument of St. Paul contained in the fourteenth chapter of Romans and the eighth chapter of First Corinthians, and have written above each of those chapters the title: "The Limitations of Christian Liberty," whereas, the truth is, his whole argument is a stronger vindication of Christian liberty than its limitations.

The defense of liberty of conscience in the practice of things which have nothing to do with morals and Christian conduct was never, since the heroic apostle to the Gentiles laid down his life for soul freedom, more urgent than now when from all directions is coming the demand from fanatical men and women that we regulate our living by their consciences, thereby dethroning the divinely given authority of our own consciences. When such people begin the manufacture of virtues and vices, there is no limit to their product till they arrive at the titling of mint, anise, and cummin, and at last demand that others do likewise. Those who refuse to comply with their requirements are designated publicans and sinners. They seem to forget that when the Judaizing believers made "a point of conscience" in the matter of circumcising the Gentile converts, Paul, refusing to accede to their demands, appealed the question to the Council at Jerusalem, which issued the decree that circumcision should be relegated to the rites and ceremonies of the past where it properly belonged. The Council at Jerusalem also had some vigorous things to say about a yoke which "neither they nor their fathers were able to bear." Likewise, there are some now who would lay a heavy yoke upon the individual conscience in non-essentials of Christian practice. The Pharisees are not all dead even in this twentieth century of Christian liberty, but they are still going up to "Jerusalem" annually, introducing and attempting to pass "resolutions" to bind the consciences of their brethren. Unfortunately for the church, they are sometimes more successful than were their prototypes who contended with St. Paul.

The favorite Scriptural quotation of these disturbers of Israel are the words of Paul in his letter to the Corinthians: "If eating meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth; lest I make my brother to offend." This tolerant statement of the apostle has for generations been used by those who were righteous over-much to hammer the heads of honest men as if it meant only, "What I do not approve you must not do," because what I do not approve is sin." This is the interpretation of fanaticism and bigotry, and the approximation of the conceited egotism of Pharisaism. For the sake of their own complacency, I would suggest that those who so misinterpret the apostle's words do not venture to read Mark 7:1-23 lest their eyes be blinded with the lightnings of God's truth as Jesus flashed it that day around the heads of the Pharisees who asked, "Why do thy disciples eat bread with unwashen hands?" and he replied, "Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me."

The most charitable construction to put upon the attitude of those who read into the apostle's words a limitation of Christian liberty is that they have not attentively regarded the thought which he intended to convey, and have not consulted a dictionary for the definition of words. If the context in the eighth chapter of First Corinthians signifies anything, the apostle had in his mind no thought of what gives offense to another man, but he was thinking of what leads or causes that man "to offend"—that is, to sin. The verb is not passive, but active. There is no allusion here, then, to the mere act of eating meats, or drinking coffee, or doing a score or more things indifferent—neither good nor evil in moral quality. Yet, St. Paul's text has been misinterpreted through the ages. It has been used as a hobby by the narrow-minded who wanted to muzzle the consciences of better men than they. Bishop Haygood relates that when he was a young preacher a misguided brother reproved him for wearing a beard—it being regarded in those days by certain belated brethren a sin to wear beard. The Bishop replied: "It is unscriptural to shave. Moses said: 'Thou shalt not mar the corners of thy beard.' This reproveth the man, but did not cause him 'to offend'—that is, to sin. The careful reader will note the difference and compare it with the apostle's use of the word.

The words of the apostle have been used by ignorance and intolerance to hurl at the heads of good and honest men who smoke cob pipes, at women who wear finger rings or a pretty flower on the hat, and a thousand other indifferent things done by sincere and good men and women who believe that the apostle meant what he said: "Let every man be persuaded in his own mind." These busy-bodies in other people's affairs and meddlers with the consciences of other men seem to think that Paul meant: "Be persuaded in my mind." The story is told in the early history of Methodism that Dr. Lovick Pierce was "complained" of because he wore suspenders. In his own vindication he said: "It was a great relief to me when suspenders came about; for I was always as round as a tree, and to keep my breeches on I had to draw them so tight that they hurt me." The same man voted against giving license to preach to Bishop George F. Pierce because he combed his hair back from his forehead—"roached it," as the complainer put it. This complainer thought Dr. Lovick Pierce "worldly-minded" because he wore "gallusses." According to the narrow-minded, both were cases of "eating meat offered to idols." And if the hobbyist's interpretation of the apostle's determination not to eat meat is correct, Dr. Pierce should not have worn "gallusses," thereby causing his "weak" brother offense, neither should Bishop Haygood have worn beard for the same reason. But where would all this lead us? We should soon find ourselves wandering in the interminable wilderness of casuistry.

The cases which Paul discusses in I Cor. 8 and in Rom. 14 are different. The first had its source in confused ideas concerning meats offered to idols; the latter was a dispute among diet cranks. The case in Rome was composed of intolerant people who had weak heads; that in Corinth of those who were superstitious. Both were religious nuisances. Paul had a very poor opinion of the vegetarians: "One believeth that he may eat all things; another, who is weak, eateth herbs." The apostle does not tell the meat eaters that, for the sake of the vegetarians, they must quit eating pork chops and fried chicken, but he does give both some good advice. First, the meat-eating Christians must be patient with their "weak" herb-eating brethren; second, the eaters and non-eaters are forbidden to despise one another; third, that it is sinful to continue in unnecessary things if, by so doing, we may destroy souls for whom Christ died. But it is a serious mistake to conclude that he intended to teach that Christian men are to allow the whims, fancies, and hobbies of others to regulate their consciences; fourth, he advises those who eat not—that is, the "weak" herb-eaters—that they have no right to sit in judgment upon the consciences of other men: "Let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth. Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. But why dost thou judge thy brother? or set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." It must be remembered here that the "stumbling block" doctrine is intended by him to be applied to both parties in both churches. Therefore, the man possessed with his own idea of the morality of things not forbidden in the Bible, who tries to impose his notions of such things upon the consciences of other men, is more surely laying a "stumbling block" in the path than one who indulges in things indifferent. To say the least of it, the teaching of Paul is that no man has a right to sit in judgment upon another man's conscience in such matters. In his letter to the Colossians, he says: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of holydays, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."

The essence of what Paul says to the churches in Rome and Corinth about meats and herbs and other things immaterial, and therefore left to individual judgment, may be indicated as follows: 1. Charity toward all; 2. The sin of judging one another; 3. The sacred right of personal liberty of conscience; 4. The heresy of denying personal liberty of conscience to those who do not think as we do about things not condemned in the Bible.

It is sometimes true that the supposed weak conscience is nothing more nor less than a pitiful self-conceit that fixes a false importance on trifling things and tries to impose its notions as a law on others. To supinely submit to its dictates would only gratify this self-conceit and increase its dictatorial inclinations. Under such circumstances, it becomes the Christian duty of Christian men to stand courageously for the defense of their Christian liberty, because the whims of self-conceit tend to make themselves a part of Christianity and thereby cease to be personal matters. Paul defended the principle of Christian liberty when he refused to allow Titus to be circumcised, because he did not intend that circumcision should become a part of Christianity. Likewise it is the duty of every Christian man, not for his own sake, but for the sake of our Christianity, to defend his Christian liberty against the conceits of ignorance and intolerance. The apostle in his letter to Timothy warns him of those who "shall depart from the faith, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth." In fact, the apostle everywhere throws all the energies of his consecrated powers into the fight to maintain Christian liberty, and at the cost of his own life laid deep the foundations of modern religious liberty. So far, then, from teaching in his letters to the Romans and Corinthians that godly men and women are to submit to the impositions of silly and foolish people, he plainly tells these "weak" brethren that they have no right to judge their brethren in matters of conscience. God never intended that the opinions of one man should dominate the conscience of another man in things about which the Bible is silent, and this is the very heart of the teaching of St. Paul in the epistles under discussion. There can be no true religion without freedom of conscience, and the man who so misconstrues the words of the apostle in his letters to the Romans and Corinthians as to justify his desire to regulate the consciences of other men by his own opinions assumes the age-long attitude of Romanism. It was that sort of spirit that, in the early history of our country, made witches famous.

BISHOP LAMBUTH.

By Dr. Henry Beach Carré.

When one brings to mind the life, the character, and the personality of Bishop Lambuth, he finds that he is dealing with one of those rare men to whom it is proper to ascribe the word, great. In the case of some men it is not hard to tell where in their greatness consists. One or two pronounced characteristics mark them off from their fellows; an outstanding feature here or there stamps them as exceptional men.

In the case of other men, however, one must take into account, not one or two qualities, but a considerable number of them before he can say wherein they differ from the multitude, and stand out as mountain peaks above the plain.

Bishop Lambuth belonged to this latter class. His many-sided nature, his numerous excellences, make one pause in an attempt to explain his greatness, whether that greatness be measured by the number and variety of his achievements, by the place he occupied in the esteem of men in all parts of the world, both in high station and in low, or by his recognized leadership in his own church.

In the study of such a character as that of Bishop Lambuth one is reminded of the party of explorers which is endeavoring at this time to reach the summit of Mount Everest. For a long time the members of this party did not attempt the ascent at all. They found it advisable before doing so to camp upon the slopes of the mountain in order that they might study carefully its various approaches with a view to selecting the best of them.

One is conscious of a like uncertainty as to the best approach to an appreciation of the man whose going away is mourned to-day by men and women in five continents, in all of which he labored. We might speak of his faith, his prayer-life, his dependence on God, his consciousness of the presence of the Holy Spirit, his zeal, his self-denial, his consecration, his gentleness, his humility, his consideration of others, his far-reaching plans for the Kingdom of God, his forward-looking, progressive policies, his pioneer spirit, his practical common sense view, coupled with a marked mysticism, his sense of humor, his fondness for a good story, his power to make and hold friends. Certainly one would have to include all these qualities in any adequate study of the man and of his work. Omit one of them and the study is incomplete, and even when they are all included, the study is still incomplete.

Somehow I imagine that, when the qualities of the man and the record of his achievements are summed up, we shall feel that we have not accounted for Bishop Lambuth. The real Bishop Lambuth cannot be transferred to paper, because so much of him was hidden away in what Wordsworth calls "That best portion of a good man's life—his little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love."

When the news of his death came over the wires, my mind reverted to one of those little acts of kindness and of love, which perhaps after all constitute the best approach to an understanding of him.

The incident occurred when he was engaged in war-work in Paris. He and I were going to our hotel, not long before midnight. The street lamps, dimmed by blue shades for the protection of the city from the aeroplane bombing squadrons of the Germans, gave little suggestion of the safety which one is wont to associate with the French capital, and there were few people on the streets.

As we made our way along the colonnades of the Rue de Rivoli, we saw the form of a woman in black, moving slowly and keeping close to the walls of the buildings. She was bent nearly double, and reminded one of the woman whom Jesus released from her infirmity after she had suffered eighteen years.

At once Bishop Lambuth said to me: "I wonder who this woman is. I have noticed her here a number of times, about this hour." We approached her, and spoke to her, but she did little more than turn her head so as to see us from her stooping position, as though she would assure herself that we intended to do her no harm. At the same time she muttered to herself, indicating that she wished to be let alone.

At that moment, a smartly dressed young woman approached, and, seeing our interest in the poor creature, halted a moment to see what the matter was. We asked her who this pitiable one might be, and expressed our fears for her safety in view of the darkness of the streets and the swiftly moving taxicabs. But this newcomer did not share our solicitude. She seemed to sense the situation instantly, and whether correctly or otherwise, made up her mind that the object of our concern was some habitue of those parts, following her well-beaten path, and fully capable of taking care of herself—possibly a beggar, perhaps a vendor of newspapers or fruit, but in any case only one of that great multitude of Les Misérables about whom her own Victor Hugo wrote, those unfortunates that are thrown up as drift-wood by the turbulent currents of our great cities.

There seemed to be nothing we could do to help this woman who had so stirred our sympathies. So we moved on, the smartly dressed one assuring us that there was nothing exceptional in the case and nothing to give us concern.

Now, it was in that instinctive response to suffering and need, exhibited by him in this case, that we discover one of the primary qualities of Bishop Lambuth. The pedestrians of Paris might become callous as they passed one after another of the broken bodies and crushed spirits that one finds on their streets, but Bishop Lambuth was never so engrossed in official tasks or so absorbed in his own personal affairs that he lost the human touch. It is said that when the body of his own son, his namesake, was lying in the family home awaiting the funeral hour, Dr. Lambuth, as he was then, found time to separate himself from loved ones and comforting friends, in order to pay a visit to the bedside of a sick one in a hospital.

"He that shall be great among you shall be your servant and he that shall be foremost among you shall be the bond-slave of all." It was that principle of the Master, the gospel of service which he proclaimed more potently through example than by preached word. It was the appeal of human need that constituted the gleam which he followed in his endless journeyings. It was human need that made him a pioneer in medical missions, and the founder of a hospital in Soochow. It was human need that turned his thought to educational missions and made him the founder of one of the great institutions of learning in Japan. It was human need in its most elemental and appealing forms that lured him into the heart of the Congo. It was the world's need that constituted the burden of his heart, that made him a thorough-going cosmopolitan, a genuine world-citizen, the friend of every one.

According to Professor Spalding of Yale, "Only two and a half per cent of the boys and girls of our country are now in reach of a really good high school education."

TRAVEL LETTERS FROM DR. AND MRS. I. W. COOPER.

S. S. Empress of India,
Sept. 21, 1921.

Dear Dr. Carley: In the closing paragraph of our last letter to the Advocate, we tried to tell you something of the impressiveness of the approach to Jerusalem, for, after the heat and the barren wastes through which we had passed, it seemed, in the distance, almost an enchanted city. Nearer view, however, was rather disappointing. And yet it is, by far, the greatest and the best looking city in Western Asia. Besides its churches and mosques, it contains a number of fine buildings, both for public use and administration and for private dwellings. Moreover, there are some whole streets which are rather up-to-date, from our American point of view. The vast majority of the streets, however, particularly those which lie within the confines of the original city, "within the walls," are narrow, crooked, dirty, ill-smelling—filled with ragged, ill-kempt people, donkeys, camels, goats, sheep and flies. Many of the streets are "bazaars," such as we saw in Damascus.

Jerusalem is, of course, very cosmopolitan in its population. We are safe in saying that in the course of a two hours' walk through the streets of Jerusalem, one would meet with some representative of nearly every nation under the sun. Most of these foreign people would, however, belong to the fluctuating rather than to the stable population of the city, for Jerusalem is largely Mohammedan—that is, Turkish, Syrian, Egyptian, Arab, with a small per cent of Jews and Christians. Each has his own quarter of the city, but all live together in comparative peace—each believing that the city is most sacred to his religion and that his own people will, in time, be in full possession of it. At present, the English govern it and have already done much toward improving its cleanliness and orderliness. English is the official language, and we were glad to find most of the hotel and shop service were English. But English rule is not yet popular in Jerusalem. The Arabs fear that the English will be too partial to the Jews and that these people will press them out of the business world.

Here, as everywhere in the East, we found age much more venerated in buildings and streets than cleanliness and beauty. Our first sight-seeing trip in the city took us through some of the oldest streets and by the gate of "King David." It is remarkable how much of the massive masonry of walls and gates is still standing. It seemed to us that the mere weight of real history and age and the greater burden of superstition—or fictitious history—which rest upon them would have borne them to earth long ago.

Our first visit in Jerusalem was to the church of the Holy Sepulchre. We have already spoken of the Eastern custom of building a church, a temple, or a mosque, over every sacred place which is to be found. This is for the double purpose of preserving the spot and providing a place for worship. It may, or may not, be a good idea, but here, at least, we have the thought "run to seed." These Catholic Christians in their zeal for worship have far overstepped the bounds of geography and reason and the dictates of good taste which forbid the artist to overcrowd his canvas. Here they have located, within the walls of one church, the following sacred places: the grave of Adam, the tomb of our Savior, and, at a little distance from it, the tomb in which Joseph of Arimathea and several members of his family were buried—the spot, on Calvary, where the Lord was crucified and the place where He was scourged. The incongruity of it is no more astonishing than the superstitious veneration is pathetic. The church itself is large, as it must be to contain so many holy places and have them even a few feet apart. Its size is, however, not its only impressive feature. In spite of Protestant views and dislike of many Roman Catholic forms, we could not fail to be impressed with the spirit of reverence and devotion which pervades the place. To be free to face with a spot so sacred as any one of these, every fact bearing upon the history and customs of ancient peoples, we believe that none of these things affect in the slightest degree the integrity and veracity of the Bible as the Book of books.

Third—That while we accord to every man liberty of thought, research and investigation to the uttermost limit of his ability and opportunity, we believe that every obligation of ethics and morals demands that those who accept the honors, offices and emoluments of the church shall be true to its doctrines and loyal to its standards as set forth in its confession of faith.

Fourth—That we protest against the use of pulpit, press or classroom as a means of opposing the doctrines, polity, or authorized enterprises of our beloved Methodism, and we call upon those to whom we have given charge of our interests and institutions to use all possible care and diligence to see that sound doctrine is preserved and the welfare of our people, especially of our young people, is safeguarded to the uttermost.

Signed: J. R. COUNTISS,
R. A. TUCKER,
T. M. BROWNLEE.

A total of 1258 was pledged. Dr. Carley spoke a few words of interest to the Conference. The report as amended was adopted.

Curtis read Report No. 3 of the Committee on Memorials on the memorial to the General Conference so to change the law of our church as to make a two-thirds majority of the body necessary to the election of a bishop instead of a mere majority, as is now the law. Very few pastors in the connection have reported better results in gains in membership than have these local preachers serving as supplies.

The Committee appointed to make an equitable adjustment of a basis for apportioning the Conference assessments to the districts at the next Conference consists of J. D. Turley, J. E. Cunningham, T. M. Brownlee, D. H. Hall, Judge Percy Bell, A. M. Marshall and L. M. Lipscomb.

There being no further business, the session adjourned to meet in memorial session at 3 p.m., Sunday, November 20, and the evening service was turned over to the Epworth League Board, which held its anniversary, having as the principle speaker for the evening Rev. J. T. Bagby of the Memphis Conference.

SUNDAY—Morning Service.

Sunday was a great day in the sessions of the Conference. The Love Feast was held at 9:15 to 10:45 a.m., presided over by Rev. W. D. Babb, who, as a real saint of God, with his mellow spirit, it was able to give spiritual tone to the service from the very beginning. Old songs were sung with fervor and unction. Rev. John Ritchey led the opening prayer, and Psalms 121 and 122 were read. Revs. E. S. Lewis, J. A. Randolph, V. C. Curtis, J. M. Wyatt, John Ritchey, L. A. McKeown, R. P. Neblett and R. H. B. Gladney served the bread and water.

The brethren spoke out of the hearts of their experiences in Christ Jesus. Twenty-seven had a hearing, and the whole congregation, who, because of lack for time, could not speak, stood as witnesses to their love for God.

Before the hour for closing the love feast had arrived the church was overflowing with people, many of whom had come from afar to hear the Bishop and take in part of the Conference proceedings. Your writer saw laymen that had come from as far as Yazoo City, Columbus, New Albany, Tupelo, Pontotoc, and other towns. The Bishop preached from Rom. 1:16 a sermon that all who heard, felt and knew were words of truth and power. Laymen said, "There is POWER in that kind of preaching."

Following the sermon, the Bishop, assisted by some of the elders, ordained the classes for deacons and elder's orders. There were seven ordained deacons and eight ordained elders.

Memorial Session.

The Conference met in Memorial Session at 3 p.m. After preliminary exercises, Question 11 was called, "What preachers have died during the year?" The memoir of D. C. Foust was read by L. M. Lipscomb. The memoir of J. C. McElroy was read by J. W. Dorman. The memoir of R. P. Goar will be prepared and inserted in the Minutes.

Many of the brethren paid tribute in loving, tender tones to the life, character and ministry of these brethren who have "fallen on sleep." After this, the report of the Committee on Memoirs was adopted and the Conference adjourned to meet in final session at the close of the evening service.

Evening.

Dr. J. R. Countiss delivered the sermon for the evening, after which the Conference was called to order and the remaining business dispatched. The Bishop certified to the ordination of deacons and elders at the morning service. Olin Ray read the report of the Commission on Finance. Resolutions of appreciation of Bishop McMurtry and his happy administration, and of the royal entertainment furnished by the people of Amory, were adopted by a rising vote. The Conference sang "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." J. M. Wyatt led in prayer, the Minutes were read and approved, and, after suitable preliminary remarks, the Bishop read the list of appointments of the preachers for the ensuing year. With the doxology and benediction this session of the North Mississippi Conference was brought to a close and the preachers began wending their way back to their homes, some to resume work on the same charge for another year, some to move to better places and new fields, and some to take up work in the harder fields of the Conference. May the Lord make the coming year the best in the ministerial life of every preacher!

TRAVEL LETTERS FROM DR. AND MRS. I. W. COOPER.

which was so connected with our Lord's suffering, was enough to make us feel that we were not even in the atmosphere of this world. For reason to tell us that this was probably not the spot—that neither Calvary nor the Holy Sepulchre was so close to the center of Jerusalem—this was not enough to keep us from feeling the reverence of the situation. Here thousands of devout hearts have, for years, sent up prayers and adorations. To this spot many a dying saint has turned his last thoughts. The Sepulchre itself is so venerated that three branches of the church—Coptic, Greek and Roman Catholic—each claims a portion of the tomb and each has a shrine here. For this place, many financial sacrifices have been made, and here are collected many gifts of silver, gold and precious stones. Indeed, the riches of the church are as oppressive as its over-decoration is tawdry and displeasing to the Protestant—and to our Western taste.

Quite in contrast to this ornateness is the beauty, the simplicity—the elegance of the church of the Redeemer, which stands near by. It was built some ten or twelve years ago with funds donated by the German Emperor. At that time he expected, doubtless, to worship there some day, as ruler of all Palestine. But whatever his purpose, the resulting structure is a thing of beauty. To step into it after being in the church of the Holy Sepulchre is somewhat like going from a dark though beautiful cavern, to the glory of a mountain top—which is another way of saying it is the difference between a Catholic and a Protestant worship.

Another great "house of worship" is the Mosque of Omar, built, we were told, over the site of Solomon's temple. It is said to be the largest and finest mosque in the world. There are so many things of interest to write about this mosque and its superstitions that we will postpone a discussion of it till our next letter, which is to be on the subject of Mohammedanism, as we saw it on all our journey.

In Jerusalem, for the first time, we were introduced to what Eastern people call the hospice. There are several in the city, kept up by different nationalities. The only one that we visited was the Russian Hospice. It is partly religious, partly business and partly charitable in its nature. A portion of it is like a nice, modern "rooming hotel." Here Russian Christians who are visiting the Holy City may find entertainment. If they are able to pay, they are expected to pay well for their lodging and, in addition, to give liberally to the chapel which is connected with it and for the "up-keep" of the institution. If they are "financially embarrassed," they pay merely a nominal sum, or even nothing at all. The chapel in connection with it is brighter and newer than any other chapel we saw on our journey, and it contains some very good works of art.

Even more interesting from a social view-point is the American Colony of Jerusalem. Here we find a community of people who are "trying out," again, the old communistic ideas of Brook Farm. And it looks as if the experiment would be successful this time for the colony has been in operation for more than twenty years and has, in its fold, over one hundred persons. They own and operate the American Colony Store, which is the principal source of their income. They hold all property and all work in common. The community family is very loosely bound together by a very few rules—principally the Golden Rule—and by almost no creed. They have their own "capel" and prayers, but attend no church. As far as we could make them out religiously, they are related both to the Unitarian and to the Quaker. We did not have time or opportunity to study them carefully, but we were impressed, by a casual acquaintance, with the idea that they were smart, erratic, liberal in their views, and charitable in their deeds. They have won the respect of their neighbors, and doubtless they will do missionary work, if it is possible for so large a number of human souls to keep together with such a loose organization. They were very pleasant to all members of our American party and invited the whole crowd out to tea with them.

Early one morning all the gentlemen of our party who were Masons visited the stone quarries of Solomon, which run for several miles under the city of Jerusalem. Here they were shown many places connected with the early history of Masonry.

Our first day in Jerusalem was Sunday. Some of our party went to service at two of the largest Episcopal churches of the city, for, since this is the Established Church of England, the English garrison worshiped in these churches and the singing was very fine. But several of us wished to hear, on this our only Sunday in the Holy City, a service of our own "communion," so we went to a little mission church, where we heard a very good sermon preached by a young Methodist minister.

In the afternoon, we drove about five miles, over very fine roads, to Bethlehem. The church in Bethlehem which marks the spot where the Savior once rested in a manger is called the Church of the Nativity. Even though it was the Sabbath, the streets of this village were crowded with people in the market places, buying and selling, so that the Sabbath peace and quiet and the reverence and satisfaction which should have filled our hearts at the thought of being in this place was more or less spoiled by the sordid scene and we recalled again the Master's words about the Temple, for this place which should have been sacred to prayer, at least on this day, had now become if not a "den of thieves" at least a place suggestive of them.

More satisfactory from many points of view was our drive, the following Tuesday, to the Jordan, the Dead Sea and Jericho. The Dead Sea is not far from Jerusalem if we could go as the bird does, in a straight line, but on account of the mountains the road winds about for a distance of thirty-five miles and takes one down into a very barren basin—a place which is usually intensely hot, even for the natives. The day we visited it we were fortunate enough to have "very endurable" weather, for there was a little breeze all day. The approach to the Dead Sea is very dreary. There is no vegetation and little sign of life. A few people live in the neighborhood and work in what may be called, for the sake of courtesy, the "salt refineries"—a very crude form of industry which consists of turning the waters of the Dead Sea into little pools, and, after the sun has evaporated the water, collecting and shipping the residue of salt. A drive of three or four miles through the barren valley of the Dead Sea brought us to that part of the Jordan where John is said to have baptized our Savior. Nearly every member of our party filled a bottle with water from this sacred spot to carry home for baptismal purposes. By the way, our Baptist friends would not have been pleased to find that here, as well as in all the pictures of the great artists, John is represented as standing in the edge of the river, with Jesus by his side, and lifting the water up and pouring it upon His head.

Some miles further on, we came to Jericho, a place not unlike many of the villages of Samaria and Galilee. Most of the inhabitants seem to live in the most abject squalor—if anything, worse than the conditions in any city previously seen. Near Jericho, however, there were some signs of comfort in a few places which had been irrigated. Indeed, we even saw a few orange trees growing there.

On our trip down we had passed the inn which was made famous by our Lord's parable of the Good Samaritan. On our return, we passed near the Mountain of Temptation, where Jesus met and conquered every type of temptation which can come to man. Further on, we saw Elijah's pool which, though small in his day, is now quite a bold spring for Palestine.

One of the afternoons that we were in Jerusalem, we took automobiles and went a short distance out of the city to see the Mount of Olives, Bethany and the Garden of Gethsemane. The Mount of Olives is beautiful for situation, for it overlooks a vast territory of surrounding country, but it now has little about it to suggest its sacred association. At its foot, or near it, is the sad and impressive "God's acre" which is given up to those English soldiers who fell during the late war—most of them General Allenby's men. Further on, we came to some of the English barracks. But the summit of the mountain is marked chiefly by two great mosques. We climbed the minaret of one of these to get a view of the surrounding country. As we looked out over these hills and valleys and over Jerusalem, our hearts were filled with sorrow to think that so much of this land that is sacred to our religion should be stamped by the followers of Mohammed.

Bethany is not far from the city, but is so much of a ruin that it can hardly be called a village. And here we found some sacred spots unmarked by churches. The homes of Mary, Martha and Lazarus, and of Simon, were pointed out to us, but they were rather unsuggestive bits of stones. We were shown the tomb of Lazarus, which is not far from his house. To reach it, one must go down a flight of about twenty very slippery stone steps, to a little cave in the mountain's side.

In one place, the Garden of Gethsemane, we were not disappointed, though it was very different from what we had pictured it. It is surpassingly sweet in its suggestive beauty. A monk of the Franciscan order tends the garden with loving care and some of the beauty and divinity of the place has passed into the serene and charitable expression of this old man's face. He has planted the garden with many beautiful flowers and shrubs and pruned and cared for the three or four ancient olive trees which are all that remain of the olive grove which once covered this acre. One olive tree in particular is shown as the place where our Lord knelt in prayer the night of the arrest. We plucked some old-fashioned flowers and some rosemary from the garden. We wish we could send to all our friends a spray of this rosemary which Shakespeare says is "for remembrance," for we feel sure that we would all be the happier and the better could we constantly carry with us the thought of this Garden.

If these few words about the Garden of Gethsemane have succeeded in conveying to you any of our thoughts and feelings about this sacred spot we would like to leave them with you as our last word upon the subject, for surely this visit was the climax of our experience in the Holy City.

Sincerely your friends,

I. W. COOPER and Mrs. I. W. COOPER.

LADDERS.

The purpose of a ladder is to get up in the world, and the best way to climb a ladder is to look up while you plant your foot firmly on the lowest rung. The visions splendid that we catch in life's luminous hours are as the rounds of a ladder by which we rise to the higher sphere of service wherein we realize the ideals that have begun to glow in the sky of our souls.

We mortals are best developed by the visions that come to us from above, not from the men and things that are on a level with us. God urges us to "look unto the hills from whence cometh our help!" The wise men saw the star in the east before they saw the manger in the khan. Eventually we must meet with Barabbas, but it is best to walk and talk with Jesus ere we come into that experience.

Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see," and "they shall see God." The rich and broadening vision such as we long for does not come from greater knowledge or finer culture. The light of such vision flashes when the fountain of its life brims, but the light dims if the stream of life runs dry. And run dry it inevitably will unless it be continually fed from those everlasting springs that flow down from the eternal hills of God.—The Intelligencer.

The Home Circle

A BOY'S BEST RULE.

Be honest, lad, in word and deed,
In all you say and do;
Treat others in your walk of life
As you'd have them treat you!
Don't steal another's precious time,
Or blot a spotless name—
You may not think that stealing, 'tis
Dishonest just the same.

Be true—there's nothing half so grand
As character of truth;
Let never trace of falsehood stain
The glory of your youth.
Let every thought you harbor be
As clear and pure as day,
Sincerity of purpose gleam
In every word you say.

Be brave—don't be afraid to stand
Up boldly for the right,
And evil firmly to oppose
With all your fearless might;
For real courage only fears
What it is wrong to do—
To live a hero's life, my lad,
Be honest, brave, and true!

BRINGING IN THE BUCKET.

"O dear!" sighed Mary. "I really must write that letter to Mrs. Norton to-night. It's got to be done this week, or there'll be trouble."

"And this Saturday, it I'm not mistaken," said Uncle Jim, looking up from his newspaper. "In fact, Saturday afternoon. Why not postpone it till to-morrow, if I may ask?"

"Why, Uncle Jim!" cried Mary. "That from you! 'Why not wait till to-morrow!' I should have expected you to say, 'Why didn't you write it before?'"

Uncle Jim hid a quizzical smile behind his newspaper. "Well, since you suggest the question, why didn't you write it on Monday—or Tuesday—or Wednesday—or—"

"O, Uncle Jim—" Mary interrupted him. "Do stop! You make it sound so terrible! I've put it off because I haven't felt a bit well this week; and it's an awfully hard letter to write, and I dread it no end!"

"O, yes." Uncle Jim was politely sympathetic. "Well, I suppose it's a great deal easier to do to-night, of course."

"What in the world do you mean? It's harder, if anything."

"Oh-h? Harder? Well, at any rate, I suppose you don't dread it so much?"

"I dread it just as much!"

Mary's voice showed that she was becoming a little annoyed; but Uncle Jim apparently did not notice, and kept on with his questions.

"Then you're feeling pretty well again, are you?"

"I'm feeling tired to death! You know I said so at lunch. What do you mean by all these questions, Uncle Jim? Are you making fun of me?"

But every trace of the quizzical smile was gone from Uncle Jim's face.

"I was just trying to find out," he said, quietly. "Just why any sensible girl waits a week about doing something that grows harder the longer she waits, and that she dreads more and more. Besides, the delay makes her every day more and more tired. No, don't shake your head, Mary. You would have felt a great deal better physically as well as mentally if you had got that letter off your hands earlier in the week. Did you ever hear the story about the little boy who was sick with all the symptoms of overwork? The doctor asked how much work he had to do. And they said: 'To bring in a bucket of water every day.'"

"At any particular time?" inquired the doctor.

"Well, he is supposed to bring it early in the morning, but he usually puts it off till the last thing at night."

"And brings it in all day long!" said the wise old doctor. "You make him bring that water in before he has his breakfast, and he'll be all right."

"And he was!"

Mary laughed in spite of herself. "That's all very well for a small boy," she said, "but for a girl as old as I am it's different."

"How much older do you think you are than Mr. Howard Carpenter?" inquired Uncle Jim, with one of his surprising conversational changes.

"Older? Why, Mr. Howard Carpenter is as old as father! What do you mean?"

"Simply that he was the one who told me he used it for a watchword. I was asking him how he managed to get so much done without ever acting tired or showing strain as so many men do; and he said: 'I bring in my bucket of water the first thing in the morning.' Then he explained that for a good many years he had chosen the hardest thing in each day's work, or the thing he dreaded most to do, and had deliberately done that thing first of all—thereby losing neither time nor nervous energy in dreading it. I've determined to adopt the plan, Mary, and I respectively pass it on to you. And now, since the sermon's over, how about a nice little walk through the woods?"

"Thanks, kind sir," said Mary, with a smile. "but that's no bucket. I'm going now to draw mine; better late than never."—Youth's Companion.

A NEW CURE.

"Well now, Sue Matthews, I just want to know why you didn't flare up when Jennie Jackson called you a coward. I think it was downright mean of her right out before everybody at the League social."

The younger sister pulled out a half-dozen hairpins as she spoke. The two had eagerly anticipated this first night together after Sue's long absence at boarding school.

"'Cause she was right," confessed Susan gravely.

"But you used to get mad over everything!"

"I know, but one day Miss Mitchell—she's the teacher of whom I've written you so much—talked to us about it. She used to write a new quotation every day on the board in her room and we learned them. This time it was, 'Come, let us go and see if it be true.' She explained that Hannah Moore said it to people who came to her with gossip but that it wasn't a bad maxim when folks told hateful things about us."

"But Sue, you aren't a coward, you just don't like mice, and of course, when that big one ran most over your feet as you were playing the march, anybody would have screamed. I'd like to see Jennie Jackson herself!"

But the taller girl interrupted. "No, I was truly afraid of it. I hope I'm not so silly about everything."

"Indeed you're not. You're just the bravest!"—Floss's indignation vented itself on her anburn tresses and she brushed and brushed as her sister went on:

"It's a big help because you see there's most always some little bit of fact in everything they say—and how can you get mad when it's true?"—Selected.

"LET DOWN THE NET."

"Did you ever notice," said an old lady, smiling into the troubled face before her, "that when the Lord told the discouraged fishermen to cast their nets again, it was right in the same old place where they had been working all night and had caught nothing?" If we could only go off to some new place every time we get discouraged, trying again would be an easier thing. If we could be somebody else or go somewhere else, it might not be hard to have fresh faith and courage; but it is the same old net in the same old pond for most of us. The old temptations are to be overcome, the old faults to be conquered, the old trials and discouragements before which we failed yesterday to be faced again to-day. We must win success where we are if we win at all, and it is the Master himself who, after all these toilful, disheartening efforts that we call failures, bids us "try again." Those disciples who failed here in faith and power after Pentecost were filled with power for doing just what they had failed to do in the old days.—Sunday School Times.

The New Testament must be taken away from all special pleaders and given back to the humble-minded man of God who seeks in it nothing but the way of childhood and brotherhood, childhood toward God, and brotherhood toward man.—Christian Century.

THANKSGIVING.

The blessings we receive are always so much greater than the misfortunes that befall us that we can come to our Annual Thanksgiving Day with much to make us profoundly grateful to Almighty God. While we have not yet recovered from the losses of the World War, either materially or spiritually, we know that a process of readjustment is going on that will bring stability in business affairs; and we know that a new spiritual note is being sounded that is calling the world to the consideration of the real issues of life. The great Conference on the Limitation of Armaments, now in session in Washington, is a concrete illustration of the new mind with which men approach the problems of the world, and the progress that has already been made toward permanent universal peace is but a prophecy of the coming of that glad day when good-will will reign among all men.

When we think of the personal blessings that have been vouchsafed unto us, we cannot refrain from exclaiming, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!"

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The one hundred and eighth session of the Mississippi Annual Conference will convene in the Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., on next Wednesday, November 30. That the occasion will be a most pleasant one is assured by the fact that the pastor, Dr. H. F. Tolle, and the loyal membership of his own and the other Methodist churches in Jackson have made every preparation for the entertainment of delegates, and everything is in readiness for the meeting of this historic body. The presiding elder of the Jackson District, Rev. M. L. Burton, and the other pastors of the city will, of course, contribute not a little to the pleasure and happiness of all who are in attendance.

The sitting of the Conference in Jackson will be especially delightful to the ministers and lay delegates of the conference because two of our great institutions are located at that place—Millsaps College and the Methodist Orphanage. We understand that the members of the Conference will be given special opportunities of visiting these institutions, partaking of their hospitality, and inspecting their work. It is to be hoped that every one of them will take advantage of this opportunity to acquire first-hand knowledge of the work of these splendid institutions.

The presidency of Bishop W. F. McMurtry will insure to the Conference a business-like administration of its affairs and a brotherly consideration of all its interests. A full account of the proceedings of the Conference will appear in the Advocate.

KEEP THE RECORD STRAIGHT.

It is so well known that secular newspapers are prone to print inaccurate reports of ecclesiastical affairs that we are sometimes tempted to believe that it is useless to try to hold them to the record.

But in justice to all concerned we feel that a correction should be made of a statement appearing in the Dallas (Texas) Morning News of November 15 in connection with the attendance of Dr. John A. Rice upon the recent session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, of which he was a member. The statement is as follows:

"Discussion regarding the orthodoxy of Dr. John A. Rice, professor of Old Testament at Southern Methodist University, culminated Monday by the unanimous approval of the ideas he fosters by the Louisiana State Conference which closed yesterday, according to Dr. G. M. Gibson, pastor of the Oak Cliff Methodist Church. Dr. Rice is a member of the Louisiana Conference, and the status of Methodist ministers is agreed upon by that Conference. Though a number of the Texas Conferences do not favor the teachings of Dr. Rice, declaring them to be unorthodox, his position in the Southern Methodist Church is established by the decision of the Louisiana Conference, Dr. Gibson said."

As a matter of fact, the Louisiana Annual Conference did not at any time, in any way, have the question of Dr. Rice's orthodoxy or of his recent book before it, and there was at no time any discussion by the Conference of the ideas he fosters. To say that the Conference gave unanimous approval to his views, is as far from the mark as to say that "the status of Methodist ministers is agreed upon by that Conference."

At least let us keep the record straight in dealing with such matters.

REPORT No. 1 OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION. PAY-UP WEEK, DEC. 11-18.

We, the Board of Education of North Mississippi Conference, have had under consideration reports concerning the Christian Education Movement from the General Board of Education and from the Conference Educational Secretary, and respectfully offer the following recommendations:

First—We are gratified at the splendid progress that has been made towards the attainment of the five objectives of the Christian Education Movement. When all of the conditions are taken into account, we believe that what has been accomplished is little short of marvelous. It is a great tribute to the faithful service and loyalty of the preachers and people participating.

Second—We desire to emphasize that the campaign is not closed and must not be until the entire quota for this Conference is raised. We are, therefore, in the midst of an uncompleted task. Every charge in Methodism has been assigned a definite part in a great co-operative effort of the church to solve its educational problem, and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the North Mississippi Conference to regard the quotas assigned heretofore as the financial goal to be reached by each pastoral charge.

Third—That the presiding elders in the first round of quarterly conferences secure accurate reports from pastors and church collectors or directors concerning the quota and the amounts already subscribed and concerning the general economic condition in each charge. We further recommend that wherever practicable arrangements be made to finish the Every-Member Canvass in churches which have not raised their quotas. The full amount of each quota should be subscribed if possible by the General Conference of 1922.

Fourth—That we urge our people to pay promptly their educational subscriptions when they fall due, that pastors and presiding elders do what they can to secure prompt payment, and that as most subscriptions fall due November 1, we fix the week following the second Sunday in December (December 11-18) as Pay-Up Week. The schools and colleges of our Conference are sorely in need of money, and as a means of relief the co-operation of pastor, presiding elder, and people is urged in an effort to secure the prompt payment of pledges.

Fifth—That if church collectors in any charge or charges have not been appointed, they should be elected at the first quarterly conference of the ensuing year.

Sixth—That, where the original pledge cards have not been sent to the Educational Secretary, the pastor arrange to have them sent to him at an early date.

Seventh—That J. H. Holder be appointed as Conference Educational Secretary.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

The Conference host, E. R. Smoot, and his committee did everything that could be asked for the convenience of the members of the Conference. An out-of-the-ordinary arrangement was the furnishing for the convenience of the delegates stationery, typewriters, writing-room, and stamps—all in the church—and two young lady stenographers, Misses Sullivan and May, who were ever ready to serve any and all with their skilled services. More preachers were seen writing to their wives, those faithful, true, loyal help-meets in the parsonage home, than were ever seen at an Annual Conference before.

A delight to the eyes of the members of the Conference were the beautiful bouquets of choice flowers kept in the Conference room, placed there by the thoughtful women of the church. Mrs. Jessie Young, of Aberdeen, had placed in the church a bouquet of large, snow-white chrysanthemums, and Mrs. E. D. Gilmore placed there a bouquet of large "Radiance" roses in memory of her sister, Mrs. J. H. Beauchamp.

Revs. H. P. Crow, a former member of this Conference, but now a member of the St. Louis Conference, was a visitor, as was also Rev. A. N. Goforth, who is now pastor of Trinity Church, Jackson, Tenn., and Rev. O. A. Clark, now a member of Arkansas Conference.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, Rev. B. F. Lewis, and Rev. M. M. Black of the Mississippi Conference, Rev. C. A. Bowen, of the chair of Religious Education at Millsaps College, and Mrs. Alma G. Riley, of the Orphans' Home were visitors at the Conference.

Rev. Dell Longgear, a transfer from the St. Louis Conference to this Conference, made the trip from that Conference here in his Ford, a distance of over 600 miles, with his family.
Rev. L. H. Estes, secretary and treasurer of the Memphis Methodist Hospital, was among the visitors.

Rev. A. R. Beasley, of the Corinth circuit, spent two days in the Gilmore Sanitarium as the result of an auto wreck. Though badly bandaged up, he attended regularly the sessions of the Conference.

Rev. T. M. Brownlee, our pastor at Starkville, reports that there are between 600 and 700 boys from Methodist families in the A. & M. College.

There are only three men present who were at the organization of the North Mississippi Conference 51 years ago: Rev. J. J. Brooks, Rev. W. M. Langley, and Mr. Frank A. Howell.

Rev. T. M. Bradley, who has been sick, was able to be up and mingle with the members of the Conference during the last few days.

Judge W. A. Roane, of Houston, Circuit Judge of the 3rd Judicial District, attended the Conference and gave a rousing address.

Chaplain J. A. Randolph, Lieutenant Colonel in the U. S. Army, is among his brethren again this year.

Among the lady delegates noticed present in attendance on the Conference were Miss Corinne Rogers, Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. G. C. Jones, and Miss Etta Murray.

Wives of preachers that were among the visitors at Conference were noticed Mrs. J. D. Simpson, Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Mrs. R. H. Tucker, Mrs. T. H. Dorsey, Mrs. J. H. Holder, Mrs. T. H. Mills, Mrs. Carroll Varner, Mrs. T. M. Brownlee, Mrs. W. M. Young, and Mrs. J. J. Garner. Other prominent women of the church who visited the Conference were: Mrs. J. J. Beck, from Drew; Mrs. Dr. Green, from Drew; Mrs. P. W. Shell, from Houston; Mrs. Vick Hoyle Thompson, of Tupelo; Mrs. T. M. Clark, of Tupelo; Mrs. J. B. Sanders, of Booneville, and Miss Linder Ramcy, Elementary Superintendent for the Sunday School Board.

Mrs. J. A. Bowen, widow of the late J. A. Bowen, who for a number of years was evangelist for this Conference, was among the visitors to the Conference.

Mrs. T. H. Lipscomb and Mrs. T. E. Gregory, wives of our pastors at Columbus, attended the Conference Sunday.

Mrs. A. T. McIlwain, wife of the presiding elder of the Columbus District, was among the visitors on the Conference.

C. S. Bennett, a loyal layman and the Sunday school superintendent of the Sunday school in Yazoo City, of the Mississippi Conference, was among the visitors who came from a distance to hear the Bishop.

Dr. C. M. Chapman, who has been serving the Poplarville station, Mississippi Conference, and who is transferring to this Conference, was here getting acquainted with the brethren.

One of the most delightful features of the Conference was the meeting of preachers and laymen in attendance who had been associated together in the past as pastors and people. Old memories were stirred, old experiences gone over, old battles re-fought and won for God and the Kingdom in these happy meetings.

The testimony given by Mrs. P. W. Shell in the love feast, who was the only lady that had a chance to speak, was one that stirred the hearts of all who heard. Her statement that dances, card playing, and other worldly amusements had no charms for her after Christ came into her heart, was a great testimony that such amusements have no place in a truly converted heart and life.

The entertainment that the Amory pastor and people gave the members of the Conference has never been surpassed. Every arrangement for the comfort and convenience of the delegates was made, and ties were formed that will make all the preachers love Amory and her people.

PAY-UP WEEK, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Pay-Up Week in the Louisiana Conference has been set for December 4-11.

Twenty-three churches have paid 60 per cent or more of their pledges. Since last week's report Pelican, in the Shreveport District, and Gillad, in the Baton Rouge District, have paid 60 or more per cent each.

Sixty-six others have paid 40 to 60 per cent. It is our aim and full expectation that every church will reach the 60 per cent during this coming campaign. There are no other collections that the church has planned in our Conference for this time. Every subscriber should write it in his heart. "I must pay my vows."

Conference Sec'y-Treas.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Educational Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will hold its annual meeting at the Hotel Chisca, Memphis, Tenn., December 13-15.

More than three hundred guests attended the annual banquet of the First Methodist Church, Laurel, Miss., served at the Y. M. C. A. on Friday evening, November 18.

Rev. A. H. Williams, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference but now of the North Alabama Conference, was recently transferred from the Oxanna Church, Anniston, Ala., to Montevallo, Ala.

The Herald, of Algiers, gives editorial expression to the gratification the people of Algiers feel at the return of Rev. C. C. Weir as pastor of the Methodist church at that place for another year.

Rev. R. H. Clegg, of Raleigh, Miss., wants to buy a second-hand set of the Pulpit Commentary, provided it is not too badly worn, and is held at a reasonable price. Those who have such a set may communicate with Brother Clegg at the above address.

The Advocate is authorized by Bishop W. F. McMurtry to announce that, by the consent of all concerned, H. W. Cudd, who was appointed to the Belcher circuit, Shreveport District, and A. S. J. Neill, who was appointed to Waterproof, Monroe-Ruston District, have exchanged appointments.

The Era-Leader, of Franklinton, La., gives editorial expression to the gratification the people of that delightful little city feel over the return for another year of Rev. L. W. Cain and Rev. F. N. Sweeney. Brother Cain serves the Franklinton station, and Brother Sweeney serves the Bogalusa circuit.

Rev. J. S. Duke, who has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. work in Laurel, Miss., for the past two and one-half years, has been assigned to the Y. M. C. A. at the Gilchrist-Fordney logging camps, where a fine Y. M. C. A. building has been erected, and where he will have charge of the camp and community activities.

The fourth quarterly conference of the Gallop Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., passed very highly commendatory resolutions concerning Rev. Chas. W. Crisler, D. D., whose transfer to the Louisiana Conference and appointment to First Church, Baton Rouge, were announced by Bishop McMurtry at Alexandria.

An announcement that brought great sorrow to the editor was that of the death of little Eula May Setzler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Setzler, of Jackson, Miss., of diphtheria on November 12, the interment being in Cedar Lawn Cemetery. We have known and loved her parents for many years, and our deepest sympathy goes out to them in their great bereavement.

At a meeting of the Licensing Committee of the Meridian District, Mississippi Conference, held at Central Church on November 15, the following were licensed to preach: John Leland Holland, Fifth Street charge; Edwin Doty Snelgrove, East End charge; Frank Wedgeworth Dennis, Hawkins Memorial charge. Calvin Monroe Baggett, who is supplying the Vlmville circuit, was recommended for admission on trial.

Dr. Elmer T. Clark, editorial secretary of the General Board of Education, is preparing, by instruction of the Board, a history of Methodist education, and he is desirous of securing all available historical data concerning Methodism in Louisiana. If any of our readers know of any books bearing on the subject, whether out of print or not, Dr. Clark will appreciate any information concerning them. He may be addressed at Nashville, Tenn.

The work on the Forest and Morton charge, Mississippi Conference, has prospered this year under the leadership of Rev. John W. Chisholm. About $1800 has been spent for repairs and improvements on the parsonage and churches, a fair proportion of the Centenary and the Education pledges has been paid, 81 members have been received into the church, two young women have signed pledges for Home Mission work and one for Foreign Mission work, and one young man has been called to preach.

Bishop W. F. McMurtry authorizes the Advocate to announce the transfer of Rev. Alonzo Early, D. D., to the Northwest Texas Conference and his appointment to Quannah, in that Conference. Dr. Early has rendered splendid service to the Louisiana Conference as Sunday School Field Secretary, and his brethren will regret to lose him from the work in this State. Quannah is one of the leading appointments of the Northwest Texas Conference, a magnificent stone church, with every modern convenience, having recently been completed. It was from this charge that Rev. W. A. Waddill was recently transferred to the Louisiana Conference and appointed to Monroe.

Rev. T. B. Cottrell, our pastor at Gibson Memorial, Vicksburg, Miss., writes that he has just closed a good meeting at that place. For the first week the pastor did the preaching, after which Rev. T. J. Norsworthy preached for ten days. The meeting resulted in great good to the church, fifteen members being received. Brother Cottrell recommends Brother Norsworthy very strongly for evangelistic service.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following brethren who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. C. E. Downer, Kossuth, Miss., 3; Rev. J. B. Cain, Oak Ridge, Miss., 11; Rev. J. W. Price, Walnut Grove, Miss., 3.

BENJAMIN TAPPAN CAMP.

BENJAMIN TAPPAN CAMP, the son of Joseph W. and Margaret Sharp Camp, who came to this State among the first settlers from Virginia, was born March 28, 1831, near Flora, Miss., Madison County, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mary C. Harris, July 2, 1921, aged ninety years, three months and four days.

On October 11, 1851, he was married to Miss Margaret Jackson, a grand-niece of President Andrew Jackson. His wife preceded him to her reward twenty-nine years. To this happy union two children were born, a son, who died in infancy, and a daughter, Mrs. W. E. Harris, who, with her husband, survives him.

Mr. Camp came of sturdy Methodist stock, but on account of inaccessibility to the church of his parents, in early manhood he joined the Old Mount Bluff Baptist Church, where his body was laid to rest beside that of his beloved wife and infant son. There are left to mourn his going a sister, Mrs. Bowling, a daughter, Mrs. Harris, her husband, Mr. W. E. Harris, four grandchildren, B. C., W. T., Miss Margarette and Miss Annye B. Harris, and eight great-grandchildren.

Mr. Camp was a brave Confederate soldier, enlisting in the 38th Mississippi Regiment in the beginning of the Civil War. He was among the first to leave his wife and daughter and go out in defense of his country. He fought through the four years of war, taking part in many of the hardest-fought battles, among them the siege of Vicksburg, where he was taken prisoner by the Federal Army.

No truer man ever lived than B. T. Camp. He was a Southern gentleman of the highest type, the soul of honor, a loyal citizen, a kind friend and neighbor, a devoted husband, a considerate father, an indulgent grandfather and a genuine Christian man. He loved his friends and was true to his convictions of right and wrong. He had no patience with the slightest suggestion of crookedness or unrighteousness.

In the going of this man the South lost a brave and loyal soldier, the commonwealth an exemplary citizen, all who knew him, a trusted friend, and his family, an unselfish, devoted loved one—one who fought bravely in defense of his country and more bravely and heroically in the rehabilitation of a ruined South.

May his sacred ashes rest in peace. He hath wrought well in every relationship of life and is entitled to the best rewards of that life which is to come. One who knew and loved him.

CHAS. W. CRISLER.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 12, 1921.

On the 10th day of May, 1921, at his home near Benton, Miss., the spirit of HARDY SOUJOURNER SWAYZIE passed away. For months he had waited with patience and courage this event, and was ready. His body was laid to rest in the family cemetery near the spot where he was born and where he had spent his entire life. The large company of friends who attended the funeral services attested the esteem in which he was held in his own and adjoining communities. Converted in early life, Brother Swayzie united with the Midway Methodist Church about 1859, was called to the office of steward, in which capacity he served his church for about 52 years, having missed in this entire period not more than one or two conferences. While taking a responsible part in all affairs of interest in his community and county, Brother Swayzie was best known as a church man and everything was determined by his relationship to God. Truly can it be said that the church never had a more willing worker, a more loyal soldier than Brother Swayzie.

Brother Swayzie fought in that terrible struggle between the States known as the Civil War. By those who knew him in this capacity, it is said, a truer soldier, a more chivalrous patriot, never bore arms in defense of any cause. On July 13, 1866, at Benton, Miss., Brother Swayzie was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Handley. To this union were born eleven children, six of whom are still living, four boys and two girls, with the wife, to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and loving father. The wife feels utterly bereft without him. The sons and daughters all, while deprived of his presence and spoken counsel, are patterning their lives after his. His church and community miss his gracious influence and helpful service. All of his acquaintances have lost a friend. Nevertheless his life and influence will live through the years, and even though dead will yet speak.

His pastor, E. A. KING.

RESOLUTIONS.

On Sunday, October 30, Mr. B. C. Page, Assistant Superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School at Columbia, Miss., kindly referred to the recent death of William J. Lampton, one of our former Sunday school and church members, and second son of our beloved Sunday school superintendent, Mr. W. E. Lampton. It was the desire of the whole Sunday school that some expression of our regret and sympathy should be shown. Therefore the undersigned committee was appointed to pass suitable resolutions.

Whereas William J. Lampton departed this life on Tuesday, October 25, in far-away California, after many long months of suffering, and

Whereas he was for many years a consistent member of our Sunday school and church, and

Whereas he leaves parents, a brother, sisters, and a host of friends to mourn his death; be it therefore resolved,

That we bow to the will of Almighty God, knowing he doeth all things well;

Be it further resolved, That we delight to cherish his manly qualities, his cheerful disposition, and his thoughtfulness and consideration for others;

Be it further resolved, That we tender our sincere sympathy and regret to his family; and

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to them, a copy given to the Secretary of our Sunday school, and a copy to each of our editors, and a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed by: W. E. Barnes, L. L. Richardson, T. S. Ford, Committee.

THE PARADOX IN CHRISTIAN LIVING.

It is a central truth in Christ's teaching, emphasized repeatedly and in varieties of ways, that we get into life by the death route. Only the grain of wheat that dies bears fruitage. It is the man who loses his life that saves it. Into breadth of life we enter by way of the narrow gate. The free, light-hearted people are the burden-bearers. The very first and fundamental call of Christ is to surrender. Years ago I used to feel that such a call violated the dignity of man's personality. Now I have come to see that in surrender to Christ—the giving up of our plans for His, the exchange of our view of life and the world for His, the substitution for our program of work of His—we reach our highest peak of power. No man is nobler than when absorbed by Christ's will and controlled by His aims. For Christ's mind and program is that of humanity at its best. To be enlisted with Him is to be faced toward your greatest possible self and the cleanest possible world.—E. A. Leslie.

Recipe For Gray Hair

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 4 oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.—Adv.

Catarrh Means Impure Blood

It is a Constitutional Disease.

When it affects the nose and throat and becomes chronic it weakens the delicate lung tissues, deranges the digestive organs, and may lead to consumption. It impairs the taste, smell and hearing.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by purifying the blood removes the cause of the disease, so troublesome at this time of year, and gives permanent relief.

"I had catarrh of the head and stomach, and dreadful ringing noises in my ears. I decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla; my health improved wonderfully, and I adopted Hood's Sarsaparilla as my family medicine." Mrs. M. Jenney Shaw, St. Johns, O.

The infant's lowliness is not yet humility; for it is instinct rather than virtue. It makes no claims, thinks no lofty thoughts of self; in fact has scarcely begun to know that it is a self at all. On the other hand, clinging trust is the infant's life. It, too, is rudimentary and instinctive, but the impulse which makes the babe nestle in its mother's bosom may well stand for a picture of the conscious trust which the children of the kingdom must have. The child's instinct is the man's virtue. Alexander MacLaren.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Friday night, October 18, I conducted a cottage prayer meeting for the Capitol Street workers. This was indeed a pleasure and a profitable service.

Saturday, October 19, I gave an illustrated lecture at Lyman. This church has wonderful opportunities. I was rained out at Lyman, Beulah, and Mississippi City on Sunday. I regret this.

Monday I visited the Lyman Consolidated School. They are doing a good work there. The rest of Monday was spent at Nugent. These people have allowed their Sunday school to die. We succeeded in getting them interested in a Primary Department, which I feel will materialize, and be of great benefit to the community. There are some good workers in this community.

The Sunday School Board is interested in getting trained workers for each and every Sunday school. We feel we can be of great benefit and value to the schools by sending instructors for training classes. Winter months are by far the best for this work, as it gives an impetus for the whole year. Let us help you. Please help us get accurate reports.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS,
Field Secretary.

"ALWAY, ALWAY SOMETHING SINGS."

By Everett Ellis.

It has been said of some of the writing of Ralph Waldo Emerson that it was not easy for ordinary minds to Suffer From Backache? Pain in Your Side? Hear What Mrs. Youngblood Says

Jamestown, La.—"I suffered with my right side, back and head. A friend of mine told me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it did me so much good I never got tired of praising it, for I believe it saved my life. I am forty-two years old now and my health is very good, tho' when I think I need a medicine I get the 'Favorite Prescription', as it is the only medicine I ever got that did me any good. I tried several doctors, but none of them helped me. Now I am enjoying good health."—Mrs. Ida Yeungblood.

Favorite Prescription is made without alcohol and can be obtained from your nearest druggist, in tablets or liquid. If you write Dr. Pierce, president Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., he will give you confidential medical advice free of cost. Don't wait a minute if you're ailing.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is said that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

understand. But Emerson wrote much that the mind of the young could grasp, and young people could not make a better choice than to include in their reading some of the books of the "Sage of Concord."

There is nothing obscure in the following lines by Mr. Emerson:

Let me go where'er I will.
I hear a sky-born music still:
It sounds from all things old.
It sounds from all things young.
From all that's fair, from all that's foul.
Peals out a cheerful song.

It is not only in the rose,
It is not only in the bird,
Not only where the rainbow glows,
Nor in the song of woman heard,
But in the darkest, meanest things
There alway, alway something sings.

The writer was once escorting some visitors through the slum district of the great city in which he lives. One of the ladies visiting a district of this kind for the first time said:

"What an awful way to live! How can one expect anything happy and cheerful to exist in such an environment as this?"

At that moment we heard the clear, sweet notes of a girl's voice singing a song with a happy, lilting air. The song came from a girl leaning out of a window of a miserable tenement far above us. She sang as blithely as if she were in the most pleasing and happy environment.

"Evidently some one can be happy even here," said the lady. Then she added,

"Alway, alway something sings."

A little farther on, a group of children were playing a singing game in a foul, dark "court" that some one would have called an alley. Not a ray of sunlight could reach it, but the children at play in the dark place were singing and dancing through their little game with a chorus of laughter ending it all. And the last stanza of Emerson's lines came to mind:

'Tis not in the high stars alone,
Nor in the cups of budding flowers,
Nor in the redbreast's mellow tone,
Nor in the bow that smiles in showers,
But in the mud and seum of things
There alway, alway something sings.

It is proof of the mercy and goodness of God that this is true. There is a note of song everywhere and at all times if we attune our ears to hear it. "There is no man but may make his paradise," and he alone can make it. —Zion's Herald.

MODERN WARS.

By Wm. C. Allen.

During a life including much foreign travel I have observed that most people everywhere have a kindly feeling toward the peoples of other countries. But I have observed how propaganda—often of the most subtle description—has sometimes been directed against other nations and then suspicion is created toward other lands. Each nation next commences to emphasize the unjust actions of the other and forgets its own moral and political weaknesses. A hostile spirit is thus created.

It is openly known and charged from the most responsible European sources that these influences originate with men whose interests in some way or other are enhanced by promulgating international fears. We must expect this because both "preparedness" and war result in the hard-earned assets of the many going into the coffers of the few. The opinion once having been created that war is inevitable, the rest is easy. Under such conditions governments yield to the pressure brought upon them. Real motives for the prospective conflict are hidden behind plausible excuses, because nowadays you must have your great moral slogans to justify war. Next, "leaders of public opinion," who possibly had not approved of the threatened struggle but who do not wish to seem unpatriotic, join in the call to arms. Other citizens who had seen a better way are silenced. The governments, if strong enough, next apply conscription with its freedom-destroying corollaries of espionage and censorship. The people, often for political reasons, are kept in the dark whilst their wealth and their boys—the best of the breed—are destroyed. Who gets the plums? Members of the noisy minority, and a few others, get the plums. These plum-securing folks meanwhile are mostly safe in their offices or homes whilst "the boys" are sent to the slaughter. When the war is over and the moral and material effects are counted, mighty few people are satisfied. How worse than foolish we are!

What is a remedy? Knowledge is not sufficient. The only practical solution is obedience to the plain teachings of Christianity. And the peoples must let their respective governments know what they want. Now is our time. Write to the President!

IS AN "INCURABLE" DISEASE CURABLE?

From the United States government at Kalihi, Hawaii, comes the information that within recent months more than 100 leprosy patients have been paroled, apparently cured of the dread disease. These apparent cures are the result of the use of chaulmoogra oil, the product of the seeds of an East Indian tree by the same name. While the most optimistic authorities do not affirm that the oil will cure leprosy, there can be but little doubt that in certain types of the disease it has a decidedly beneficial effect. Chaulmoogra oil has been known to the East Indians for centuries, and they have regarded it as beneficial in all kinds of skin diseases. Only a few persons, however, have been able to take it internally, as it is a strong emetic. In its natural form it is viscous. Eight or ten years ago Dr. Victor G. Heiser and his associates in the Philippine Islands began to experiment with the oil, and his methods have greatly stimulated medical men in various parts of the world. One of these investigators has been Sir Leonard Rogers, a physician in Calcutta, India, whose use of gynocardate of soda—a product of chaulmoogra oil—has been quite successful. Chemists have reduced the oil to a more fluid state so that now it can be given hy-

New Lamp Has No Wick. No Chimney. No Odor. Most Brilliant Light Known.

A new lamp which experts agree gives the most powerful home light in the world, is the latest achievement of W. H. Hoffstot, 967 Factory Bldg., Kansas City, Mo. This remarkable new lamp beats gas or electricity—gives more light than three hundred candles, eighteen ordinary lamps or ten brilliant electric lights, and costs only one cent a night, a blessing to every home on farm or in small town. It is absolutely safe and gives universal satisfaction. A child can carry it. It is the ambition of Mr. Hoffstot to have every home, store, hall or church enjoy the increased comfort of this powerful, pleasing, brilliant, white light and he will send one of his new lamps on free trial to any reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate who writes him. He wants one person in each locality to whom he can refer new customers. Take advantage of his free offer. Agents wanted. Write him today.—Adv.

podermically, with little ill effect on the patient.

Despite the fact that leprosy is but feebly contagious, most sanitarians have come to the conclusion that the most practical and efficient method of dealing with the problem is through segregation. Were it not so little contagious, some oriental countries would be quickly depopulated; lepers are permitted to move about without restriction. In Siam, for example, a mother refused to give up her leprous child and was sent out to beg, yet she never contracted the disease. Until the discovery by Hansen in 1874 of the bacillus leprae, the real cause of the disease was in dispute. The bacillus has a resemblance to the tuberculosis bacillus and has a special affinity for the human body and cannot be carried by animals, nor can it be cultivated in the laboratory. There are two kinds of leprosy. One is the nodular variety; those afflicted with it generally die within eight or twelve years. Nerve leprosy, or the dry variety, acts much more slowly; victims live fifteen years or longer. In most cases one individual has both kinds. —The Continent.

THE COUNCIL DOING PUBLIC HEALTH WORK IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Miss Ellen Carter, a registered colored nurse, is an employee of the Woman's Missionary Council, doing work in Sumter, S. C. She is under the direction of the Conference officers of the South Carolina Conference in co-operation with Mrs. Ruth A. Dodd, of the Bureau of Public Health, South Carolina.

The employment of Miss Carter was authorized at a last session of the Council. Miss Carter is a graduate of the Hampton Nurse's Training School, Hampton, Va., and has done some postgraduate work. She has also had experience in public health nursing under the Red Cross in Italy.

The health conditions in and around Sumter, among the colored people, have been so serious that the various insurance companies doing business there have brought the attention of the State Board of Health to the situation.

Nurse Carter makes monthly reports to the Administrative Secretary's office in Nashville and to the Conference officers of the South Carolina Conference. She will be employed for about three months in and around Sumter, at the end of which time the plan is to develop self-support for the work among the colored people from the fees that the New York Life Insurance Company has agreed to pay where a registered nurse visits in the family of policyholders. Nurse Carter will then be transferred to a new field for the instruction of the people in home nursing and for training midwives.

In the dense colored population of South Carolina only one other registered nurse is at work among the colored population.

THE COUNCIL'S INTERRACIAL WORK COMMENDED.

Writing with reference to the Council's large plans for the work of the Commission on Race Relationships, Mr. John J. Eagan, chairman of Commission on Interracial Co-operation says: "I am delighted and encouraged by the action of the Commission on Race Relationships of your church. Its generous appropriation indicates how genuine its interest is. I ask that you express to the Woman's Missionary Council, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the deep appreciation of our Commission at its resolutions."

Dr. M. Ashby Jones, one of the leading Baptist pastors of Atlanta, Ga., and member of the Commission on Interracial Co-operation, says: "I was very much interested and pleased to receive copies of the resolutions adopted by your splendid group. As the boys say, I am 'strong for' the Southern Methodist womanhood. You represent to my mind the most forward-looking and aggressive body of women that I know. May God richly bless you and guide you so that you may fulfill the wonderful prophecy of your past."

Rev. W. W. Alexander, well known to Methodists says: "On behalf of the Executive Committee of the Interracial Commission, please allow me to thank you for sending the section of your Council report which referred to our co-operation. I have felt for several years that the Woman's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was the most progressive and constructive religious group in the South. My observation of the work of your Interracial Committee has confirmed this opinion. The contribution which the Woman's Missionary Council made to the Memphis meeting and in the general question of Southern Women and Race Relations is in my opinion the most important thing which has been done within the last twelve years. It was my privilege to meet recently a national group of leaders in Negro education and welfare—some of the most delightful and influential men and women in the nation. I had something to say to them about the work of your committee and its influence on Southern women in general, and it was their opinion that you were making the greatest possible contribution to this difficult question." —Council Bulletin.

What a Leading Layman Says of the Missionary Voice.

Judge W. Erskine Williams, Lay Leader of the Central Texas Conference, writes as follows:

"I cannot speak too enthusiastically of the Missionary Voice. From its first issue it has been not only an interesting but a most useful and helpful magazine.

"I think the chief reason for this is, if I may say so, that the Voice is really religious. Some periodicals published by the church have not manifested the highest spiritual qualities at all times.

"The Voice appeals specially to the laymen who really want the church to do something; first, because it tells what has been done, and second, because it shows what should be done.

"I challenge any one who knows the general work of the church to read the first page of any issue of the Voice and then be willing to put it down until he has read it through to the last word."

Are you a reader of the Voice? If not you ought to be.

It has a message for every Methodist man and woman.

PROGRESS IN BRAZIL.

Bishop John M. Moore reached Nashville, November 3, following a stay of some six months in Brazil. Since his election to the episcopacy in May, 1918, Bishop Moore has been in charge of the work in Brazil, and has spent practically six months of each year in that field. The present quadrennium has shown greater progress in our work in Brazil than for any ten years previous to 1918. Under the efficient leadership of Bishop Moore, and with money available out of the Centenary funds, we have greatly strengthened out work in South America. Concerning the progress in that field, Bishop Moore says:

"We have already erected some 60 churches and others are going up. We have 30 or more parsonages. All of the buildings are good, substantial structures. The new church just completed at Sao Paulo was built at a cost of $75,000, one-half being paid by the native membership. The fact that so many new buildings are going up is evidence of the fine spirit which the people have toward their Centenary pledges as no money can be spent there until the pledges made by the native membership have been paid.

"Our new publishing house at Sao Paulo has been finished and Pedro Tosetti, Tito Becker and Jairo Walsenberg, the three young Brazilians who received their training at the Nashville house, are busy directing the operations of this big plant.

"Our schools are doing fine work and are crowded to capacity. Before leaving Brazil I bought property for Bennett College at Rio, and buildings will be erected at once. Granbery College, at Juiz de Fora, has the largest attendance in its history and we have bought 20 acres additional grounds for needed buildings. The day before I left I bought 31 acres in the city of Campinas for a new boys' school in the Central Brazil Conference, and the first building will go up at once. In September I bought grounds at Santa Maria for a new woman's college in the bounds of the South Brazil Conference. Miss Eunice Andrew will be principal of this institution and Miss Louise Best, one of the new missionaries just sent out by the Woman's Missionary Council, will be associated with her."

DO YOU REGISTER DAILY VICTORY.

Victory is something concrete. It is not a smooth generality. It is a gripping, concrete result. Recently Center College registered a victory striking, definite, thrilling—over Harvard. At the finish of the game men knew who had won. The victory stood out in the open, clear, sharp, and unmistakable. Do you register victories like that in your moral battle? Do you know your temptations and frankly recognize them as your enemies that give reality and concreteness to your Christian grapple? Can you say with the great missionary pioneer, "I fight, not as one that beateth the air"? The Christian life is supremely an overcoming life. No life is Christian that registers incessant defeat. For the Christian, fight "the stars in their courses." The might of an indwelling Presence is his ally.

"Did we in our own strength confide,
Our striving would be losing;
Were not the right Man on our side,
The Man of God's own choosing,
Doth ask who that may be?"

Christ Jesus, it is He;
Lord Sabaoth is His name,
From age to age the same,
And He must win the battle."—Selected.

MAKING GOOD.

This world was not constructed for the lazy man of dreams;
One flash is not a nugget—gold is constant with its gleams;
The world keeps looking higher than the level you've attained,
And thinks you retrograding till it's certain you have gained.
No stand still will it tolerate; slide back, and you will see Your name among the "has-beens" as a harmless "used-to-be."
The standard you established when you did the best you could
Was but your all-day that you'd keep on making good.—Selected.

FROM THE AMERICUS CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: We are closing out the second year on the Americus Circuit. It is needless to say they have been both pleasant and profitable.

At our first quarterly conference this year the Board of Stewards raised the pastor's salary to $1000. The District Stewards assessed us $100 for the presiding elder, but our conference assessed $105 because Brother W. M. Sullivan is so zealous and brotherly.

Our revivals were all fine. In order to understand this last statement, allow me to say that this is a Methodist country and the folks teach their children to join the church early, so there is no chance of a great increase in church membership at any one time. We have only received about twenty-five. Revivals do not consist of a great increase of church membership alone, but in a quickened church as well.

Our first revival was held at Tanner's chapel, Rev. R. G. Williams, pastor at Escatawpa, Miss., doing the preaching. He is one of those who are smooth, prayerful and sound. Every message he brought us was built on the Rock, even Christ Jesus, and was food for the soul.

Our next was at Rosedale church, Rev. J. W. Thompson, Luedale, Miss., did the preaching. Only those who have used him can understand his work. His cry, "Back to the old paths of Methodism," together with his heart full of God's love and his whole being filled with a desire for the salvation of the lost stirred our church and the results continue to show in every department of our church here.

Brother Dave Ulmer, pastor at Saucier, Miss., held our meeting at Pleasant Hill. He certainly understands what the word DEVIL means and he proves his love for God and man by really fighting all sin. His work there was very effective.

At Cross Roads, our presiding elder, W. M. Sullivan, did the preaching. People came from every direction for ten miles around; the house, although a large one, was far too small for the folks. Time only can tell of the good done.

Next came Salem Camp Meeting. Brothers Sullivan and Thompson did the preaching. Salem is an old camp ground and has had much good preaching, but never, I am sure, any superior to that done by these two men. The grove meetings were grand. Shouts ascended and souls were made glad.

The Hurley church asked the pastor to hold the meeting there. We labored for a week with that zealous body of workers.

Roberts Chapel came last, Rev. H. H. Myrick, pastor of Wilmer church, Alabama Conference, doing the preaching, which was well done. He is easy in delivery, but his sermons seem to be directed at each individual and they are scriptural and soul-reviving.

At our second quarterly conference we recommended Brother F. L. Lingerian to the district conference for license to preach, and he has been very valuable this year to us. Our fourth quarterly conference recommended Brother Hugh Goff, who will meet the committee November 25. He came for definite life service during Salem camp meeting and professed his call to the itinerancy.

Pork and syrup as well as potatoes and other things have begun to reach the parsonage for our bodily good, so you see, in view of the fact that two men have entered the ministry and the general state of the church is improving, we are enjoying the work and are coming to the last days of this Conference year with glad hearts and thrilled spirits.

Let's now give honor to whom honor is due. If anything has been accomplished on the Americus circuit this year for the benefit of humanity, it was God's kingdom that did it. To Him be all the honor and glory. Amen! VAN R. LANDRUM, P. C.

RESOLUTIONS CONCERNING LAW ENFORCEMENT.

Whereas the Adult Bible Class of the Wesson Methodist Sunday school is convinced that the pernicious business of illicit distilling and bootlegging is spreading and has become a menace to our country and, if it is to be checked, it will require the combined efforts of all law-abiding citizens;

Therefore be it resolved, That this class go on record as approving a strict enforcement of the Prohibition laws by all town authorities, and favoring equal penalties for sellers and buyers of intoxicating liquors.

Be it further resolved, That we favor a law imposing more severe penalties for violations of the Prohibition laws.

Be it further resolved, That each member of this class obligate himself to investigate as far as possible any suspected violation of the Prohibition laws and report same to proper authorities.

Be it further resolved, That we use our influence to have a more thorough campaign waged against this monster evil from the platform, pulpit, and public press.

Be it further resolved, That these resolutions be read to the entire Sunday school and copies sent to the Wesson Enterprise and New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Miss Winnie J. Hood. Mrs. B. F. Youngblood, Coleman M. Furlow, Committee.

THE NEEDED SAVIOR.

By William C. Allen.

Some of us know very little about theology or creeds. The larger mysteries of the creation are too deep for us. We but dimly understand the beauty of the winning story of the Bible. Of one simple fact we are assured—we need a Savior. In the last analysis how little we have to depend upon within ourselves or in the world! We cast aside pride in our works, we acknowledge our sins, we bow at the foot of the cross and upon the humiliating tree find an invincible Deliverer. Antecedent to the pangs of Calvary were the pangs of the Nativity. It was of transcendent importance that the one should precede the other. It was desirable that He who was to be the Great Rescuer of all who would accept Him should take upon Himself the form of a man. So it came about that the Savior appeared, not with a mighty host, not with fanfare and palms of victory but in swaddling clothes in a manger. O the graciousness of God, in sending His Son as of the poorest of mankind, seeing that it was the poorest of mankind He was sent to help! Could a better plan have been devised? Can we measure the boundlessness of the Eternal Love that has provided such a simple method for our redemption? Shall we listen to the cry of the Child of Bethlehem as He calls to repentance and the offices of love? Does not a suffering world need to rediscover Him to-day? Should not the radiance shed nineteen hundred years ago upon the dark Judean hills become the glorious light of the present era? Then shall the sweet strain of the angels become our triumphant song: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men!"

Mrs. McCumber Avoided a Serious Operation by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in Time

Georgetown, Ill.—"After my first baby was born I suffered so with my left side that I could not walk across the floor unless I was all humped over, holding to my side. I doctored with several doctors but found no relief and they said I would have to have an operation. My mother insisted on my taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I soon found relief. Now I can do all my own work and it is the Vegetable Compound that has saved me from an operation. A NOTE FROM REV. G. R. ELLIS.

Dear Brother Carley: My wife and I have just returned from Livingston, Ala., where we went to visit our son, Rev. H. Marvin Ellis, who, in the early part of September, was appointed to the pastorate of Livingston charge, Greenshoro District, Alabama Conference, to serve the unexpired term of his predecessor, Rev. D. W. Register, who was elected to the presidency of the Vocational School for Boys at Hadly, Ala. While there, my son showed me an old quarterly conference record book which was used from 1838 to 1842. In looking through the book, among other items of interest, I found the proceedings of the first, second and third quarterly conferences for the Livingston charge, 1838, the first of which I am sending you for the Advocate. The difference between the proceedings of a quarterly conference now and then being so great, I thought perhaps it would be interesting reading for our younger brethren, and many of the older ones as well. You will note that there is nothing at all reported for the support of the ministry, or, for any other purpose.

The same is the case in the minutes of the second quarterly conference, and only $15 reported at the third quarterly conference—$10 to the P. E. and $5 to the assistant P. C. The peculiar phraseology of the minutes indicates that the P. E. was the pastor and the P. C. his assistant.

I think if some of our modern-day preachers had to face such financial reports as the above, they would pack their grips and do like those fellows recorded in John 6:66.

G. R. ELLIS.

Seminary, Miss.

The following is a copy of the Minutes of the first quarterly meeting conference held in Livingston station, March 10, 1838, copied from the old quarterly conference record book which was used from the year 1838 to 1842 on the Livingston (Alabama) station:

"March 10, Minutes of the first quarterly meeting conference held in 1838, Livingston station.

"Members present—Elisha Calloway, P. E.; R. C. Christopher, A. P.; Seabron Mims, Steward.

"Are there any complaints?—None.

"Are there any appeals or references?—None.

"What members have been admitted into the Society?—None.

"What members expelled?—None.

"Nomination for stewards—Seabron Mims, Daniel Ayres, Jno. H. Boling.

"A standing committee appointed on table expenses—Seabron Mims, Samuel B. Boyd, Henry Potts.

"Seabron Mims was nominated and appointed District Steward.

"There being no further business before the Conference, it closed with prayer. (Signed)

"ELISHA CALLOWAY, P. E.

"R. C. CHRISTOPHER, Secretary."

The book from which this copy of minutes was taken is in a perfect state of preservation except that the ruling has faded out. The book is bound in sheepskin and was intended for a cash journal; therefore, there is not the printed form which we have in our present-day quarterly conference record books. G. R. E.

FROM SEVENTH AVENUE, MERIDIAN, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: Our church is doing well in many ways. The prayer meeting, Sunday school, Epworth League and Woman's Missionary Society are all running well. We have had a number of conversions this year, also last year. Our membership has increased about fifty per cent during these two years, one hundred and twenty-four members having been received. Our pastor has received on the charge one hundred members this year.

Yours truly,

C. F. BUTLER, a Member.

FROM SUMMIT, MISS.

There has been some advancement on the Summit charge. The Osyka membership have asked for a resident minister, and have agreed to increase on salary, and, by a gift from Mrs. Edgar Goodwill, we have a nice little parsonage and four lots. The preacher that goes to Osyka will be lucky indeed. They are as fine a bunch of Methodists as you will find anywhere.

We will organize a church with about thirty members Sunday night, October 20, and get them in their own house at Smithdale.

Brother Albert Long has been recently licensed to preach.

I forgot to tell you Osyka Methodists have presented this preacher with a new suit. We have had revivals at each church and much good was accomplished, for which we are thankful. Your brother, ALGIE S. OLIVER.

NEW MEANINGS OF THE OLD, OLD STORY.

Our conception of Christianity and its mission in the world has been steadily broadening. So long as we thought of it wholly as a matter of saving for some future existence a certain intangible part of us which we called our souls, preaching was all we saw any need of. From that standpoint the vertical relation alone was essential to Christianity—man at one end of the line and God at the other. All other relations were merely incidental, if not inconsequential.

But at last we began to see that vital Christianity means far more. It means not alone the vertical relationship of God and man, but the triangular relationship of God and man and the other man, or better yet, the family relationship of a great human circle of brothers with the Father God at its center. It means not the Ten Commandments of Sinai, chiefly negative and perfunctory, but the one positive, living Commandment of Love—an all-embracing love that lives only to serve. It means not only a future salvation from the consequences of sin, but a present salvation from the power of sin. And it means not the salvation of individuals only, but the saving of society as well, through the Christianizing of its ideals and institutions.—R. B. Eleazer in Missionary Voice.

Mere continuance of personality after death is only the bare framework of the Christian hope. The revelation which Christ brought is a revelation of life rather than of existence. A life lived with Christ, nurtured by him, sharing in his fullness, drawing from him its energies—that is the Christian life. It is a life which death cannot destroy, but rather sets free for its true consummation.—Selected.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A NEW START.

The injunction of the Master, "Go, and sin no more," must have opened a new world to the sinful soul that had been taken in its sin. The past was as black as a heinous offense could make it—but the merciful words of the Master pointed to a beautiful day ahead. If the past could not be literally blotted out, the future could be kept spotlessly clean—and that was worth living for. What a blessing to us all that the festering corpse of an evil past need not forever hang about our necks to drag us down to perdition! Thank God for the gospel of a new start!

A GREAT GOSPEL.

If the church does not whole-heartedly believe that the gospel of Jesus Christ is able to save to the uttermost the individual sinner and society as a whole, it ought burn its Bible, close its pulpits, tear down its schools and colleges, and write "Ichabod" across the history of every institution that has its origin in the teachings of the Man of Galilee. The world is in the throes of the mightiest cataclysm in human history, and it is in need of a sovereign remedy for its tragic ills. This is not a time for experimentation with possible measures of relief, but for the application of a sure means of cure. The case is desperate and the need is urgent. But the church does believe whole-heartedly in the gospel it preaches: it has, therefore, the best opportunity in its whole history to convince the world of the validity of its message and of the saving power of its Master. What is needed now is the manifestation of an invincible faith and a passionate earnestness that will force men to listen to its call and constrain them to accept its offers of divine grace. What a day for the preacher of this gospel of salvation! Now is the time to proclaim the great doctrines of sin and repentance and faith and forgiveness and regeneration and conscious adoption into the family of the living God, not hesitatingly and falteringly and feebly, but with the love of certainty and the accent of authority. It is a great gospel with which we have been entrusted—it is still the power of God unto the salvation of every one that believeth.

THE CONFERENCE AT WASHINGTON.

As was eminently proper, Secretary Hughes laid before the Conference on Disarmament a concrete plan for bringing about the realization of the hope with which the Conference was called—a lightening of the burden of keeping constantly prepared for war and the ultimate attainment of the dream of universal peace. The plan, in essence, is this: the United States to abandon the construction of all capital ships now under way, England and Japan to refrain from undertaking the construction of new ships of this class, this program to be continued for a period of ten years; the United States, England, and Japan to destroy old battleships on the basis of an agreed proportionate tonnage, replacement of all ships that have reached the age of twenty years being allowed, but the new vessels not to be placed in commission until the old have actually been retired; very definite limitations to be placed upon the construction and use of auxiliary craft, including airships and submarines. This proposal, so bold and so definite as to be startling, has received the approval of the Conference as to principle, and the representatives of the various nations are now engaged in the work of reaching an agreement that will carry into effect the plan proposed. At the same time, other definite suggestions are being made with reference to the solution of some of the other great problems that confront the Conference, and there is an evident desire actually to attain the goal in view when the Conference was called. The world is trembling upon the verge of a new era in international relationships, and countless prayers are going up every day that the new era may be ushered in. We continue steadfast in the hope that the time is almost at hand when wars shall be no more.

MAKE SOMETHING HAPPEN.

When something happens, people hear about it, learn about it, and become interested in the why's, how's, and wherefore's. A crowd will quickly collect when something unusual happens on the streets. An itinerant peddler may take his stand on the corner, place a box on end and begin to call his wares, and within a few moments men will be craning their necks looking over the shoulders of other men to find out what is going on. The best way in the world to attract attention is to start something. A church where nothing ever happens has a hard time holding the interest of the community, and sometimes it finds it difficult to keep its own membership on the "qui vive." The church, too, is the one institution in the community where something ought always to be happening—something out of the ordinary. It has resources that no other institution has, and it deals with a side of life that is keenly sensitive to influences of an unusual kind. A few miracles of grace will turn a dead church into a center of activity and usefulness. Make something happen—but let it be something worth while.

GOOD FOR HIM.

We saw a news item recently to the effect that ex-Emperor William, on account of limited financial resources, has dismissed his head gardener and has taken over the duties of that official himself. Apart from the opportunity of moralizing on the theme, "How are the mighty fallen!" this incident furnishes us the occasion to remark that a little manual labor that will bring him into intimate contact with Mother Earth is not likely to do him any harm; on the other hand, the probability is that it will do him good. Work is the solvent of many of the problems that oppress us—and work with the hands is no more to be held in contempt than work with the head. Some of our most eminent scholars have borne testimony to the value of physical exercise in a garden, and what is good for a scholar cannot be bad for an ex-emperor. Even preachers, on occasion, have found it helpful to handle a hoe.

SCRAP OF PAPER.

We have a very definite recollection that the recently-adopted Constitution of the State of Louisiana declared that gambling is a vice, and that the Legislature should adopt measures to suppress it. Yet, on Thanksgiving Day, horse racing started in full blast on one of the tracks adjacent to the city of New Orleans, and the daily newspapers are printing the betting odds every day. It is a sad day for the commonwealth when its Constitution becomes nothing more than "a scrap of paper."

TAKE TIME.

Hurry is one of the besetting sins of this age. Men and women everywhere show a feverish anxiety to get through with what they are doing, to reach the destination toward which they have started. "Use speed" seems to be the motto of about four-thirds of the people one meets. The pleasant civilities of social intercourse are forgotten in the mad rush to get along. The important, but apparently useless, details of a great undertaking are lost sight of in the desire to "put over" the big thing itself. The frayed nerves are never given a chance to become quiet—the beginning of a new day is like the feverish close of one that is past. A lesson that is hard for all of us to learn is that there is plenty of time to do well everything we ought to do. One reason why so many of us have to hurry is that we never start in time.

A HERO PASSES.

To the Memory of W. R. Lambuth.

By Dr. W. W. Pinson.

Didst see a hero pass this way,
Whose course nor ease nor pain might stay;
With eye on far horizons bent,
And brow hard-knit with high intent;
His strength in daring deeds far spent—
For love of men, for love of God,
Forth-faring where the martyrs trod?

I saw a man with gentle mien,
Of lofty moods with smiles between—
A rare and radiant man I ween;
A man to whom the children clung,
Whose charm the poor and aged sung;
A comrade humble man among,
But never a hero have I known—
Since when have heroes common grown?

So dull of sight! So coarse our clay!
So sudden is our souls, I say!
A hero comes—we see a man:
He brings a world—we see a span;
He passes, and a glory bright
But leaves us blinking in its light!
Too late we know, too late—at last,
That all unknown a hero passed.

No marvel—for it needs must be
That men must share what they would see—
He only sees a landscape whole
Who bears all landscapes in his soul:
A hero passes, who shall know
That feels no kindred passion glow,
But thrilled and holden sees him go?

'Tis well, if late, with tearwashed eyes,
We see the radiance where it lies
About the finished sacrifice,
And in that chastened vision greet
Full-orbed a hero's life complete;
They yield us bondmen to its sway,
And children's children mark the day
On which a hero passed this way.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

By Hon. C. L. Bates.

Sixth Paper.

I.

The opinion has been expressed that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has no constitution at all, whilst some have sought to find one for it in a few segregated, detached provisions of the Book of Discipline, with no respect to their origin, connection or setting in our constitutional history. Both positions are untenable, and wholly at variance with law and fact.

England has no constitution set forth in one formal instrument, such as our American constitutions; but she has a constitution, comprehensive, definite, and clear, which no Parliament or statesman of that country would dare disregard; it is contained in many constitutional documents, dating from a very early period down to the Revolution of 1688, among which may be named Magna Carta, The Petition of Right, the Declaration of Rights, the Bill of Rights, and the Settlement of 1688.

And such is the character of the constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; there is no one, formal, orderly, compact, succinct, statement, characterized by unity of literary construction, setting forth in order of style the principles and provisions of the organic law of the church; but it has a constitution, strongly, clearly, unmistakably stated and declared by the fathers, in constitutional documents of undoubted genuineness and authenticity.

The General Conference is vested with no power to make a constitution for the church; it is, itself, a creature of the constitution and of the constitution-makers. Neither is it vested with any power to ascertain or declare what the constitution is, nor to construe it when ascertained; that is a judicial function, not a legislative function. The action of the General Conference of 1844, in constituting itself the judge of its own powers, was declared by the Constitutional Convention of 1845 to be a usurpation of power, and, of itself, justified the separation. It would be self-stultification for the Southern General Conference to commit the same blunder.

II.

Among the constitutional documents from which the constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, must be ascertained, and into which we must look for a statement and definition of its principles, the following must be accorded the first and highest rank, namely:

(1) The Declaration, and (2) the Protest of the Southern delegates upon the deposition of Bishop Andrew, (3) the Plan of Separation, (4) the call for a Convention and (5) the Address "to the members" issued by those delegates on June 11, 1844, (6) the proceedings of the Annual Conference in the slave-holding States at their ensuing sessions, (7) the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of 1845 and the Book of Discipline therein adopted, and (8) the amendments which have since been duly and legally adopted; all of which must be examined in the light of contemporaneous history, discussion, exposition and construction.

It is not the purpose of the writer to state in detail the voluminous documents above enumerated; that would defeat the very object of these papers, which is to give a brief outline of the constitution as he has been able to eliminate it from the voluminous material at hand. With great diffidence, an attempt has been made to state the constitutional results of the revolution and construction period of Southern Methodism.

III.

The plan of separation, agreed to on June 7, was a formal and solemn treaty between competent, independent parties. In defining the situation resulting from the division of the church and the various questions arising upon it, the minority delegates frequently applied to the subject the analogies, principles, and definiteness of both municipal and international law; and Dr. Bascom, in the papers drawn by him, constantly used the language of American statesmen in the discussion of constitutional powers, rights and guarantees: the similitude of political revolution, civil government, and international relations, was applied throughout to the dissolution of the old ecclesiastical relations and the establishment of a new connection; the process was recognized as creating new ecclesiastical sovereignties and the erection of a new government, with a constitutional division of powers.

In the Address to the Ministers and Members of Southern Methodism it was said: "The separation proposed is not schism, it is not secession. It is a State or family, separating into two different States or families, by mutual consent."

In the Report on Organization, discussing the establishment of a separate, independent connection, it was declared: "All the right and power, therefore, of the General Conference, in any way connected with the important decision in question, were duly and formally transferred to the Annual Conferences in the slave-holding States, and exclusively invested in them."

And it was further declared that: "The jurisdiction we are about to establish and assert as separate and independent, is expressly declined and ceded by the General Conference as originally its owner, to the Southern Conferences, for the specific purpose of being established and asserted in the manner proposed."

The ideas of Sovereignty and Jurisdiction, and their cession and transfer from one ecclesiastical organization or unit to another, and the vesting and seat of that sovereignty and that jurisdiction, pervade all the proceedings. The point of greatest solicitude was to locate the sovereignty—the power to govern—"the power to command in the last resort"—for that is the first step in the construction of government. The legitimacy and legality of the whole fabric of a separate, independent Southern Connection, and the validity, and regulation of its laws, orders, and sacraments, were dependent upon that; that was the foundation upon which the superstructure was to be erected.

If the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church had not ceded to the Annual Conferences in the South its sovereignty over Southern Methodism, if that sovereignty had not vested exclusively in those Annual Conferences, then their delegates in convention assembled had no power to dissolve the old connection and establish a new one, and the enterprise must fail. There was no Southern General Conference in existence to receive a cession of sovereignty and jurisdiction; it remained for such a General Conference to be created, and it could be created only by sovereign Annual Conferences.

The question of sovereignty—the power to create and then to govern—met Southern Methodism at the threshold. That question must be settled first; if you have not got it, it is not vested and exclusively vested in your Annual Conferences, then your movement is a "schism" and a "secession." Who, then, even at this late date, can wonder that Dr. Bascom took the pains to make the masterful argument on the point which he did make in the Report on Organization, and which was adopted by the Convention and which is the greatest constitutional document of them all? The wonder is that even the iconoclast can sneer at that great State paper. By it, the author won for Southern Methodism an invulnerable position of regularity and legitimacy amongst the ecclesiastical organizations of Christendom, based upon the cession of sovereignty by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Southern Annual Conferences, which was sustained by the Supreme Court of this Union, though repudiated by the Northern Church.

IV.

On June 10, the General Conference of 1841 adjourned sine die; and on June 11 the Southern delegates issued and transmitted the following call to their constituent Annual Conferences:

"With a view to promote uniformity of action in the premises, we beg leave to submit to your consideration the expediency of concurring in the following plan of procuring the judgment of the church within the slave-holding States, as to the propriety of organizing a Southern division of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, and of effecting such an organization should it be deemed necessary:

"1. There shall be a Convention held in Louisville, Kentucky, to commence the 1st of May, 1845, composed of delegates from the several Annual Conferences within the slave-holding States, appointed in the ratio of one for every eleven members.

"2. These delegates shall be appointed at the ensuing session of the several Annual Conferences enumerated, each Conference providing for the expenses of its own delegates.

"3. These several Annual Conferences shall instruct their delegates to the proposed Convention on the points on which action is contemplated—conforming their instructions, as far as possible, to the opinions and wishes of the membership within their several Conference bounds."

Upon an analysis of this paper, it will appear that the purpose of the proposed Convention was (1) to procure the judgment of the church in the South as to the propriety of organizing a separate Connection in the South, and (2) to effect that organization should it be deemed necessary; and it will also appear that (1) the Annual Conferences were to appoint their delegates, each separately and severally, (2) to instruct their delegates on the point on which action was contemplated, and (3) the instructions were to conform to the opinions and wishes of the membership—the Methodist people—within their several Conference bounds.

At their respective ensuing sessions, the Annual Conferences, acting in agreement with the opinions and wishes of the membership, approved, ratified and confirmed the actions of their respective delegates in the General Conference of 1914, and, likewise, pursuant to said call, elected delegates to the Convention, which duly assembled at the time and place designated in the call. A discussion of the proceedings of that Convention must be deferred until the next paper.

MINUTES OF THE MEETING OF THE COLLEGE OF BISHOPS

Nine bishops attended the meeting of the College of Bishops held in Richmond, Va., October 26-28: Bishops Candler, Atkins, Denny, Murrah, Waterhouse, McMurry, Darlington, DuBose, and Cannon. Bishops Hendrix, Morrison, and Kilgo sent word that because of sickness they could not be present. Bishop Moore has not yet returned from Brazil, and Bishops Mouzon and Ainsworth were busy with their Conferences.

Bishop Lambuth.

Communications from Bishop Lambuth were read, written in Yokohama the day before he went under the knife. He gave a detailed account of his work in the East, and calmly spoke of his trust in God. The American Bible Society and the Oriental Missions Council of San Francisco sent resolutions of sympathy. Bishop Atkins was appointed to prepare a memoir of Bishop Lambuth to be read at the spring meeting.

Representative to American Bible Society.

The American Bible Society requested that a representative from the College of Bishops should be appointed to attend a meeting of that Society November 2 and 3 in New York, and Bishop Denny was appointed.

United Brethren Church.

Dr. E. B. Chappell, Fraternal Delegate, to the United Brethren Church, sent a report of his mission.

Universal Conference on Life and Work.

Bishop Cannon, Drs. T. N. Ivey, W. W. Pinson, and H. N. Snyder were appointed members of the Committee on Arrangements of the Universal Conference on Life and Work.

Telegrams of Sympathy.

Telegrams of sympathy were sent to Bishop Hendrix and Mrs. Lambuth, and letters to the bishops who because of sickness could not be with us.

Questions of Administration.

Much time was given to the discussion of questions of administration, in order to comply with the provision of the Discipline which charges the bishops "as far as possible to provide a uniform policy of administration."

The Orient and Africa.

Bishop McMurry was appointed to take episcopal oversight of the oriental fields assigned last May to Bishop Lambuth. Bishop Cannon was appointed to take charge of the African work assigned last May to Bishop Lambuth, and Bishop Cannon was requested to arrange for his Conferences as to dates and if necessary to call to his assistance one or more of his colleagues to the end that he may visit Africa before the meeting of the General Conference, if practicable to do so and return by May, 1922.

Next Meeting of the College.

It was agreed that there should be a meeting of the College in Nashville, Tenn., beginning at 9:30 a.m., March 8, 1922.

Adjustments with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Our last General Conference adopted report No. 12 of the Committee on Missions, in which report a commission to be composed of one Bishop, three laymen, and three ministers was to be appointed to co-operate with a like commission from the Methodist Episcopal Church, or such other agents as may be authorized to act for the Methodist Episcopal Church, to consider the wisdom of the exchange of territory and such other adjustments as may be possible and practicable in order that all needless waste and competition may be eliminated and that American Methodism may, under the most favorable conditions, and to the best advantage occupy and cultivate the whole field. This committee was duly appointed and notice of the appointment sent to the Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church. That Board of Bishops acknowledged receipt of the communication, but no further notice having been received, the Secretary of our College of Bishops was requested to call the attention of the Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church to this fact.

Administration in Mission Fields.

The Bishops in charge of our mission fields, with Bishop McMurry as Chairman, were appointed to work out a consistent practical plan for administration in those fields.

Tablet to Bishop Asbury.

The Methodists of Richmond had provided a tablet to Bishop Asbury to be unveiled October 27, the 150th anniversary of the landing in America of Asbury, and to be placed on the site of the church in Richmond, Va., in which the dear old Bishop had, on March 24, 1816, preached his last sermon. The programme of these interesting exercises and a newspaper cut of the tablet is enclosed.

Cornerstone of the Methodist Publishing House in Richmond, Va.

On the afternoon of October 28, Bishop McMurry, the Bishop in charge of the Virginia Conference, presiding, the cornerstone of the new Methodist Publishing House was laid. Bishop Candler delivered the address, Bishop DuBose offered the prayer, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., read the scripture, and Bishop Murrah pronounced the benediction. The St. John's Lodge of Masons were present and participated in the exercises, calling on Dr. T. A. Smoot, pastor of Centenary Church, to pray.

Appeal to the Church.

The following appeal to the church was unanimously adopted:

By an unfortunate oversight the General Conference of 1918 failed to arrange for the annual payment which had been made for many years by our church to the support of the work of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, of which Council the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a constituent member. Without this specific order by the General Conference, no one has been willing to take the authority to make this annual payment. As the amount of their payment had been, preceding 1918, $2000 annually, the treasury of the Federal Council has been deprived of $8000, which would have been paid by our church during this quadrennium but for the accidental omission noted above.

This has not only been a cause of mortification to our representatives in the Federal Council, but the work of the Council has been impeded for lack of this money. We greatly regret the present unfortunate situation, and we appeal to our people to contribute promptly $8000 to prevent embarrassment of the Federal Council in its operations because of the failure of our General Conference to authorize the usual payment. We appoint Bishops Jno. M. Moore, James Cannon, Jr., Dr. E. O. Watson as a Committee to solicit and receive subscriptions for this purpose. Send all contributions to Dr. E. O. Watson, Room 927 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

Message to the Church.

The following message to the church was unanimously adopted:

We rejoice that the progress of our church during the past year has been so great. Reports from the Annual Conferences which have been held, both at home and in the foreign field, show unusually large increase in the membership, and reveal a most commendable degree of liberality in matters material and financial, notwithstanding the commercial depression which prevails in our own and other lands.

Our preachers and people having put behind them certain divisive and distracting agitations, whereby, for a time their evangelical labors hindered, have given themselves with renewed zeal and quickened energy to the discharge of their high and holy obligations. The churches thus having rest from unprofitable debates and walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, have been edified and multiplied. For this we give thanks unto God, and take occasion to entreat most affectionately all who have membership in our widely extended connection to walk by the same rule and mind the same thing. Let us dwell in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, continuing steadfast and immovable in doctrine and always abounding in the work of the Lord.

While rejoicing in the abounding prosperity which the God of all grace has so enriched our beloved church, we are not blind or indifferent to perils which easily beset us in common with all other evangelical bodies in the land we love and for whose welfare we cherish a jealous care.

The world has but lately emerged from a terrible war, which it is now generally agreed was the outcome of decayed faith with its consequent demoralization of life. This fearful conflagration was kindled not by the fanaticism of ignorance, but by an incendiary rationalism which had been consuming the foundations of faith in one of the most enlightend and highly educated nations of modern times: a nation whose educational influence and rationalizing processes had been communicated to not a few individuals and institutions in our own country. This lesson of the war should not be overlooked. What wrought evil over seas cannot fail to be equally pernicious in America. Mankind cannot enjoy the fruits of faith after cutting its roots. If men depart from the truth as it is in Jesus, wasting in riotous rationalism their rich inheritance of divine revelation, they must expect spiritual destitution and moral disorder extending through all the ranges of individual, national, and international life and relations.

Heretofore our church has been remarkably exempt from these destructive influences and revolutionary tendencies. Our preachers, with few, if any, exceptions, have been characterized by purity of doctrine and elevation of life, and the spirit of our people has been marked by the most admirable conservatism of angelical Christianity. May such ever be the case!

We do not discourage devout scholarship, nor discourage efforts to reach sound learning in all departments of thought, and promote investigation along all lines of useful research. From the first Methodism has fostered education and walked unafraid along all the paths of intellectual culture. From its founders and fathers who came forth from the halls of famous seats of learning, we have inherited courage in pursuit of truth and confidence in following its light. We have received also from them the disposition to maintain the faith once for all delivered to the saints. They were not, and we must not be, unstable children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine. Modish rationalism must not be permitted to affect our devotion to the established tenets of ancient and abiding Christianity. To such folly we should not give place for a moment.

In these times of doubt and distress the message of the enduring gospel of the Son of God, with apostolic accent and authority, must speak tranquility and order to a perturbed and distressed world. The demands of the hour exclude the propagation of novelties and notions.

The learned and devout men into whose labors we have entered did not follow cunningly devised fables when they made known to our fathers the way of salvation. Mists arising from "astral myths" and "ethnic legends" did not becloud their judgment nor dim their faith, and to the sure word of prophecy in which they trusted we shall do well to take heed in these troubled times as unto a light that shineth in a dark place. The present is not the age for discovering the gospel, so long revealed, but for declaring it as a body of saving truth which even an angel might not seek to displace for another gospel without incurring the just anathemas of all holy and faithful souls. Our office is not to produce a new Christianity, but to preach with the power of the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven "the old, old story of Jesus and His love." We should deplore any other view of our mission, and deprecate any departure from it.

Let the evangelical note sound loud and clear throughout our borders, excluding all doubtful disputations.

At the same time let the campaign for Christian Education so auspiciously begun under most difficult conditions be carried to complete success for the more perfect equipment and adequate endowment of our institutions of learning, and let our schools of all grades fulfill with unwavering fidelity the purpose for which they were founded by the church which established them, and to which they must ever look for fostering care and constant support.

The Centenary movement has resulted in an extraordinary development of our work, especially among foreign peoples. The maintenance of this new work is of necessity dependent upon the successful carrying out of the obligations assumed by our people during the Centenary campaign. We urge that the subscriptions made to our Centenary fund be met with scrupulous exactness and promptness, to the end that the work of Christ committed to our hands may be maintained and extended in both the home and foreign fields.

Rejoicing in all that God has wrought for us and through us, let all our forces advance to greater victories of faith under the leadership of the Captain of our Salvation, to whom be glory and dominion forever and ever.

Signed by: E. R. Hendrix, Warren A. Candler, Henry C. Morrison, James Atkins, Collins Denny, John C. Kilgo, William B. Murrah, Richard G. Waterhouse, Edwin D. Mouzon, John M. Moore, William F. McMurry, Urban V. W. Darlington, Horace M. DuBose, William N. Ainsworth, James Cannon, Jr.

Resolution of Thanks.

The Methodists of Richmond were most courteous in their hospitality and the following resolution of thanks was adopted:

"With heartiness the College of Bishops thanks the committee in charge of our entertainment, our preachers, and indeed all our Methodist brethren in the city of Richmond for the gracious hospitality extended to us. Our stay, though short, was most pleasant, and the care of us made it profitable. Not one thing was left undone that could have been done, and the ample and unaffected courtesy we received from every one was in perfect harmony with the best traditions of Virginia."

COLLINS DENNY,

Secretary of the College of Bishops.

THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

Bishop McMurry made a much more favorable impression as a presiding officer and appointment-maker than last year. This is not even intimating that his methods were unacceptable to any large number at that time. In practically every way he met the demands of the occasion. No man was hastily appointed to any place. He assumed all the responsibility when ready to read the appointments, but the presiding elders surely had a direct hand in the making of them all. The most notable feature of the cabinet work was the unusual amount of time given to the men who serve the weaker places, and the charges. It would hardly be challenged if I were to say that more time was given in caring for pastors and people who are not always considered so sympathetically than at any remembered period for years.

The election of delegates to the General Conference provoked considerable interest, and some "personal work" that was not exactly creditable. It is too often presumed that the rank and file of a Conference do not know, or at least need instruction, as to how and for whom they should vote. It does not appear to the present writer that it is a desired compliment to be told whom to vote for. It is one thing to discuss the relative merits and ability of men, quite another actually to WRITE A MAN'S BALLOT. It is probably only a "pipe dream," but I would certainly be interested in seeing an election of delegates to the General Conference without so much as a suggestion as to how men should vote. It might change the personnel of many delegations. Such a course might even prove disastrous to some aspirants for the bishopric. However, as the end of the session drew near a more marked atmosphere of religious fervor was apparent.

Perhaps the one outstanding feature, the one that will linger longest in many of our hearts, was the "talk" made by Dr. J. R. Countiss, president of Grenada College. That Sunday night message should be delivered from every pulpit in the Conference. It was sane, sound, filled with common-sense observations, humor, wit, pathos, homely wisdom, and the far-seeing vision of a man who stood on high ground and glimpsed many angles. Beyond any question Dr. Countiss sounded a note of warning that must be heeded, and offered the elements that must enter into the reconstruction and preservation of the home-life of Mississippi. He might have said more, he could hardly have said less and have been true to his theme and the occasion. OUR HOMES ARE THE PILLARS OF CIVILIZATION. These destroyed, the whole structure crumbles and decays. Let our pastors take up the echo of that sermon and sound it through the whole Conference. Better, let them command the services of Dr. Countiss on every possible occasion for the express purpose of hearing that message.

This letter would become alike burdensome to printer, editor and reader if attempt were made to recite any appreciable number of the interesting and helpful things of the Conference. I heard it pronounced on every hand as the best we have had for many years, and I said, AMEN! Amory did herself proud. There was positively nothing left undone that would have added to our comfort or pleasure. The spiritual tide rose much higher than usual. There seems to be dawning a new day. Old things, by the grace of God, are passing away. New things, and old things that are ever new, are finding a place in our hearts to abide. Every earnest prayer or exhortation provoked amen's that sounded like the early days. They were good to hear. Tears were often seen. Radiant faces were not wanting. Petty jealousies had scant fare. Men differed without airing personal grievances.

There is no task too great, no journey too hard, no appointment too burdensome for men who really love God and their fellowmen. Send men to their appointments with the assurance of the love of their brethren, and that they have had a "fair deal" in the cabinet, and complaint is all but eliminated. Appointments are comparatively easily made when all parties concerned love God and each other. Such seemed to be the case to a large extent at Amory. May the God of all grace keep our faces towards the heights!

An Aftermath.

When Rev. E. S. Lewis reached home Monday night he was surely "paralyzed." Many members of the Big Brother's Class were ready to greet him. He was carefully brought home, gently led, together with his wife, to the back room of the parsonage, and held there a prisoner of love for some ten minutes. Then he was brought to the front yard, turned over to the presiding elder for a moment, and the fun began. He was presented to the many friends present as a weary, foot-sore, often tried and true Methodist pastor, and the tender mercies of those present were invoked. Then Dr. T. B. Lewis, a big-hearted member of the board of stewards, and one of the leaders of this occasion, presented the five-times pastor, in the language of the heart, with a beautiful and well equipped Ford Sedan. He said they would have liked to make it a Packard, but this was the best they could A Ford (afford). Brother Lewis was just about "out of soap" for once in his life, but he responded with suitable words—and the fifth year of a remarkable pastorate was begun. Blessings on all concerned!

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON THE CONSTITUTION.

To the Bishops and Members of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session at Hot Springs, Ark., May, 1922.

Dear Fathers and Brethren: Your Commission on the Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, appointed by the General Conference of 1918, with instructions to report to the General Conference of 1922 their conclusions as to

First, what is the Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South? and,

Second, what changes in the Constitution should be initiated by the General Conference of 1922? beg leave to submit the following report for your consideration and action:

First, the Constitution of the Church is contained in Paragraphs 42 and 43, as printed in the Discipline of 1918, which paragraphs read as follows:

"Paragraph 42. Ans. 11. The General Conference shall have full powers to make rules and regulations for our Church, under the following limitations and restrictions, viz.:

(1) The General Conference shall not revoke, alter, or change our Articles of Religion, or establish any new standards or rule of doctrine contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrine.

(2) They shall not allow of more than one representative for every eighteen members of the Annual Conference, nor allow of a less number than one for every sixty: provided, nevertheless, that when there shall be in any Annual Conference a fraction of two-thirds the number which shall be fixed for the ratio of representation, such Annual Conference shall be entitled to an additional delegate for such fraction: and provided, also, that no Conference shall be denied the privilege of two delegates, one clerical and one lay.

(3) They shall not change or alter any part or rule of our government, so as to do away episcopacy, or destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency.

(4) They shall not revoke or change the General Rules of the United Societies.

(5) They shall not do away the privileges of our ministers or preachers of trial by a committee and of an appeal; neither shall they do away the privileges of our members of trial before the church, or by a committee, and of an appeal.

(6) They shall not appropriate the produce of the Publishing House to any purpose other than for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated, and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows, and children.

"Paragraph 43. Provided, nevertheless, that upon the concurrent recommendation of three-fourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences, who shall be present and vote on such recommendation, then a majority of two-thirds of the General Conference succeeding shall suffice to alter any of the above restrictions, excepting the first article, which may be altered upon the joint recommendation of all the Annual Conferences by a majority of two-thirds of the General Conference succeeding; and also, whenever such alteration or alterations shall have been first recommended by two-thirds of the General Conference, except as in first article, so soon as three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences shall have concurred as aforesaid, such alteration or alterations shall take effect: provided, that when any rule or regulation is adopted by the General Conference, which, in the opinion of the Bishops, is unconstitutional, the Bishops may present to the Conference which passed said rule or regulation their objections thereto, with their reasons, in writing; and if then the General Conference shall, by a two-thirds vote, adhere to its action on said rule or regulation, it shall then take the course prescribed for altering a Restrictive Rule, and if thus passed upon affirmatively, the Bishops shall announce that such rule or regulation takes effect from that time."

Second, what changes in this Constitution should be initiated by the General Conference of 1922?

Whereas, Restrictive Rule No. 2 has been interpreted by the General Conference and by the Annual Conferences, through the required process for amending or changing one of the Restrictive Rules, to mean that the General Conference shall be composed of an equal number of clerical and lay members, and, further, that the term lay members includes women as well as men, we recommend that Restrictive Rule No. 2 should be changed so as to read as follows:

"(2) They shall not allow of more than one clerical and one lay representative for every eighteen members of the Annual Conference, nor allow of a less number than one clerical and one lay member for every sixty members of the Annual Conference, and that said lay delegates may be either men or women: provided, nevertheless, that when there shall be in any Annual Conference a fraction of two-thirds of the number which shall be fixed as the ratio of representation, such Annual Conference shall be entitled to one additional clerical and one additional lay delegate for such fraction: and, provided, also, that no Conference shall be denied the privilege of two delegates, one clerical and one lay."

We recommend further: In order that Paragraph 43 may be made to clearly express what we understand to be its meaning, that it hereafter be made to appear in the Discipline as follows:

"Paragraph 43. Provided, nevertheless, that upon the concurrent recommendation of three-fourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences, who shall be present and vote on such recommendations, then a majority of two-thirds of the General Conference succeeding shall suffice to alter any of the above restrictions excepting the first article, which may be altered upon the joint recommendation of all the Annual Conferences, by a majority of two-thirds of the General Conferences succeeding; and, also, whenever such alteration or alterations (except in the first article) shall have been first recommended by two-thirds of the General Conference, so soon as three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences shall have concurred as aforesaid, such alteration or alterations shall take effect: provided, that when any rule or regulation is adopted by the General Conference, which, in the opinion of the Bishops is unconstitutional, the Bishops may present to the Conference which passed said rule or regulation their objections thereto, with their reasons, in writing; and if then the General Conference shall, by a two-thirds vote, adhere to its action on said rule or regulation, it shall then take the course prescribed for altering any Restrictive Rule except the first rule, and if thus passed upon affirmatively, the Bishops shall announce that such rule or regulation takes effect from that time."

Respectfully submitted,

"SAFETY SIGNALS."

Writing under the above heading, in a recent issue of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Rev. S. J. Davies said: "I have not read Dr. Rice's book on the Old Testament, but I will venture this remark: if he is more heretical, rationalistic, modern or advanced in his interpretation of the Old Testament than some of the current writings of our times, he must be going some. And nobody seems disposed to put others out of the synagogue; why land on Rice?"

The first impression to be gained by reading these remarks is that Brother Davies is out of accord with those who have denounced the book of Dr. Rice. If he were not, he would not now be trying to defend Dr. Rice, on the ground that others are guilty of the same offense and go unpunished. If in some instances men do not get their just deserts, can this fact be used as an argument to justify every man in his evil deeds? I can not see things in this light. If a thing is evil, it should be considered as such without having to resort to comparisons and contrasts.

But Brother Davies asks: "Why land on Rice?" The answer to this inquiry is so self-evident that Brother Davies ought to know it without having to ask. Dr. Rice held a very responsible position in a university (the Southern Methodist) established by the church for the education of her ministers. If he taught heretical and rationalistic theology, he was in the very strategic position to do the most harm. This is the reason why they "landed" on Dr. Rice.

Brother Davies complains about "the sensualism and the gross materialism contained in the Book of Ecclesiastes." He says that there is something of everything in the Bible. Why not cleave to the good that is in Ecclesiastes instead of worrying about "the sensualism and gross materialism?" I feel sure that such a course would be far better.

Brother Davies says: "If a man wants to believe Samson is a sun myth, or Jonah a parable or fable, he does not shake my faith." This statement puts Brother Davies in a class with his friend, Dr. Rice. It speaks for itself and does not need any comment. It is not enough for Brother Davies to know that it will not shake his faith. If there is a possibility of it shaking a fellow-man's faith, and there is, such useless speculations ought not to be indulged in.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Pay-Up Week for the Louisiana Conference was get for January 8-15. Let every pastor and church collector do his utmost to get in hand the subscriptions falling due at this time. Our institutions are in great need right now, and we must meet the wonderful opportunities that present themselves to us at this very moment.

Centenary has 203 students. They are meeting with great success in all their plans. Satisfactory work is being done in the classrooms. The boys are enthusiastic concerning the future of the college, as they realize they are making "bistory" right now.

Mansfield has 225 students. They have always had an influential body of students coming from the very best homes. Thorough work is being done in the classroom. The students themselves are enthusiastic boosters for the College. They keep the halls filled with new students, so that our greatest need is for more room.

Our Board of Education sustained a great loss in the death of Dr. J. M. Henry, our Chairman. We will miss his wise counsel and his careful planning. In his stead, we elected Dr. H. T. Carley, Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, as Chairman. The other new members of the Board are: Dr. F. N. Parker, Rev. W. L. Duren, and Rev. A. A. Bernard. We welcome these brethren to a great task that is before us in Louisiana. We are on the border-edge of the most remarkable achievement in the field of Christian Education. No ordinary obstacle can stay the onward marching of our cause. Success is ours! We must move forward!

ALBERT S. LUTZ,

Conference Secretary of Education

SUPERINTENDENT OF METHODIST MISSIONS IN CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

Dr. J. L. Neill, who for the past several years has been Superintendent of the Department of Missionary Education of our Sunday School Board, has been appointed to work in Europe. His headquarters will be in Prague, Czecho-Slovakia, and his work Superintendent of Southern Methodist Missions in Czecho-Slovakia and President of the Bible Training School in Prague.

Dr. Neill has done a remarkable work as head of the Department of Missionary Education in the Sunday school. Under his leadership, we have put on a real program of Missionary Education in the Sunday school, and in this work he has reached the church in the foreign field as well as in the home land.

Our Sunday schools in Cuba have asked for the privilege of providing Dr. Neill's salary in the new field, and this request has been granted. This gives evidence that the church and Sunday school in Cuba are of missionary spirit and bears witness also that Dr. Neill has a strong hold upon Southern Methodists in that Mission field.

The new Superintendent of our work in Czecho-Slovakia is a native of Mississippi and a member of the Mississippi Conference. He is a graduate of Millsaps College and before coming to Nashville, held important pastorates in the Mississippi Conference and was for a time Sunday School Field Secretary.

He will enter upon his new duties about January 1, but the work of his department in Nashville will continue under his direction until May, 1922.

THE SEASHORE DISTRICT.

Dear Mr. Editor: We are winding up the work of the Seashore District in fairly good shape. Will report nearly six hundred accessions on profession of faith, and also an increase in pastors' salaries. We have had a number of great revivals.

Rev. J. V. Bennett, one of our Conference evangelists, has held several meetings in the district. I consider Bennett one of the safest, sanest gospel preachers I have known in the evangelistic work. He is fully qualified to go into any of our largest churches and is willing to go into any of the smaller ones to do evangelistic work.

Hope to see you at Conference.

Yours,

W. M. SULLIVAN.

THANK YOU!

I wish to take this method of thanking the Editor of the Advocate, and each of the Presiding Elders, Pastors, and Centenary Treasurers in the Mississippi Conference for the courteous consideration given me in the work of the Centenary during this Conference Year—and pray that God's choicest blessings shall be yours.

Hoping to see you at Conference, I am,

Yours for service,

W. D. HAWKINS.

Conference Centenary Treasurer.

Conference Missionary Secretary.

So long as episcopal ordination is a requirement, church re-union will remain in the clouds—Dr. Norman McLean, in Pan-Presbyterian Union.

A LETTER FROM DR. BRISCOE CARTER.

Dear Brother Carley: Guess I will skip the description of those rooms in Warwick Castle that I sort of threatened you with in my last. Their contents are mostly scented with dead folks and associated with a past that I hope may never be repeated in this or any other country. Of course we saw Shakespeare's country, the ruins of Kenilworth, the three spires of Coventry, the town made famous by Lady Godiva and her deeds for her people. From thence we went to Oxford, immortalized to Americans as the place where John Wesley was educated. I was shown into the room he occupied while there.

I think that American Methodism ought to put an adequate memorial tablet there commemorating the facts incident thereto. There is nothing there to make it; but then I guess that should not excite wonder, for as far as I have been able to judge by things seen, there is very little in the Wesleyan church to remind you of Wesley!

From Oxford we went to Bedford, the home of the immortal Tinker. His monument has a conspicuous place. The house in which he was born has been gone many years, but we walked out in the early morn and saw the cottage in Elston where he lived, after his marriage. I guess it is the place—looks like Noah might have stayed there.

There is a great rivalry between Oxford and Cambridge now, as of yore, but to me the latter appeals more than the former. In the first place, Cambridge has more land and much beauty is given its surroundings by it. In one of its big parks there are majestic trees, from three to five feet in diameter, which give it a stateliness that is most impressive. Here I saw a herd of about fifty deer and was told that was only a part that roamed in the great park. Then I like the arrangement of its buildings and their appearances better. But the general plan of all the schools here is the same—the Quad. Carley, I don't believe you would have occupied the seats in the dining room, if such had been offered you in your school days. You would have moved your boarding place: great big room, ceiling about 35 feet high; down each side a row of heavy tables, tops about 3 inches thick, about four feet wide; on each side benches with no backs. There never were any church benches more uninviting! Dr. Linn remarked that if he had a dining room like that he would not get many boys there.

Before passing from Oxford I must tell something of the wonderful glass window, the work of the 16th Century, in the chapel of St. John. It takes up the whole end.

The New Testament themes depicted have right under each its Old Testament type. Under the nativity is the Creation; under the Baptism of Jesus, is the passage of the Red Sea; under the Lord's Supper is the Passover; under the Cross of Crucifixion, the brazen serpent; under the resurrection, Jonah emerging from the fish's belly; under the ascension, Elijah going up in his chariot of fire. The coloring and tinting are marvelous.

Being in Cambridge Sunday, we went to Ely, about 15 miles away, and attended service in that famous Cathedral. I will not go on record as saying that this is the largest in England, for I have never seen all nor measured any. The books differ in the dimensions of these houses. The claim is that this is 565 feet long. The main thing here is its tower, the only Norman tower in England. The western tower is 266 feet high. A monastery is said to have been founded here in 673, which was destroyed and rebuilt in 979, so you see this is not the thing of a day or so. The service lasted from 11 to 1 and there were in all this vast house only 125 people, outside the choir and the ministrants. There is a wonderful choir and a magnificent organ.

Monday we took ourselves to London, where Conference was to convene on Tuesday. We were all comfortably quartered in the National Hotel. Here we found Dr. I. W. Cooper and wife, Dr. Wainright, from Japan, and Brother Hitch from Korea, whose fellowship we greatly enjoyed. I had the Methodist Times sent you so you would get the news of the Conference early and from the British viewpoint. Every American that I have heard express himself, emphasized his disappointment in the whole thing. I thought of suggesting for their discussion, "The whenceness of the Was and the whereforeness of the Is." By the way, these Methodists here are the greatest bunch of "fraid cats" I ever saw. They have a stuff here they call theology that would hardly pass as foolishness. They don't seem to believe anything with any degree of certainty, except that they are smart. There is a question-mark after every article of faith. No wonder they are getting nowhere. The only man in London who preaches to a full house is one like Opie Read's judge in Arkansas, who believes in the Bible from "kivver to kivver"—and my observation is that these are the only people whom the world cares to hear, and they will always get a hearing, even in a storm at sea, who can stand up and heartily say, "I believe God, and that it will be even as he has said."

In this country the Established Church is aping Rome, and the Wesleyan Church is aping the Establishment. Of course much stage talk was indulged in on the reunion of Methodism. This was very familiar to me—a fine phrasing of words without meaning—as we over there know. I asked a very prominent Primitive Methodist why it was that they could not get together, and he said it was mainly with the Wesleyans, as the majority of them favored union with the Establishment instead. Since then, after attending services at their churches, being "incog," I think he was correct. At the 11 o'clock service the full ritual service of the Established Church was read from the book of Common Prayer. After service a good brother came up and spoke to me, saying, "You did not enjoy the service. Neither did I, and I don't blame you." I said that the world starved to death once on that fodder and I thought it poor taste for people who claimed to be followers of Wesley to try to galvanize it into life. No wonder the Salvation Army had such a wonderful growth here.

But these folks are world beaters for thinking they "are the people" and wisdom will pass with them. I guess I will have to apologize to the "Japs" for thinking themselves Alexs.

The most ludicrous thing I have ever seen is the snug self-complacency of the Britisher. I can hardly look at them and keep my face straight. They take themselves as seriously as does a mummy. And for seriousness of expression commend me to the aforesaid mummy.

Saw the Celtic pull off from the wharf taking the last people out of England that I knew to-day. Wanted to go myself, but the boat was full, so I will have to wait until Wednesday, the 5th. Dr. R. H. Cooper from Missouri and I have stayed together pretty well. We just completed a little trip into Scotland this week, and he left to-day, also Dr. Elliott, editor of the Review of the M. E. Church. Enjoyed my brief stay in Edinburgh and Glasgow very much, but we were too late—the weather had gotten too thick to see much. May be more later.

BROTHER RANKIN AND THE HERETICS.

Prior to the publication in the church papers by Brother Pinson, General Secretary of the Board of Missions, of his communication, "Brother Rankin and the Heretics," he sent me a copy and informed me that he would publish it. Now that the church papers have published it, I do not feel that I ought to do more than to submit this brief statement:

After having been a missionary for nearly nine years in China, I came home and appeared before my Mission Board as a witness from China; and from that day to this I have been just a mere witness, and I am now nothing more than such a witness. I have testified as a witness from China, and I have furnished such information as I had—this is all I have done. Whether I am a credible witness, or whether I furnish any material proof, or whether others contradict my testimony, or whether others furnish more or better evidence, is not for me to decide; but I do feel that the information which I laid before the Mission Board and which, in some measure, I have laid before the membership of my church, should have been given consideration, at least to the extent of an examination, in an inquiry and investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether it had, or had not, any foundation in fact.

I came to our Board of Missions as the highest authority of our church having to do with our missionary work, as a witness to facts that had come to me while serving as a missionary, as I have stated, showing, as I believed, unorthodox faith on the part of certain of our missionaries in China. And I only came to our Board after, with others of our Mission, trying unsuccessfully to deal with this matter through our usual official channels. I did not come to prosecute any missionary nor to ask that the Board try any missionary in his or her absence. I came in order that our Board of Missions, first having the same information that I had, might in their own way make an investigation that would ascertain all the facts, and then take such action as the facts might warrant. And only when our Board declined to investigate did I finally determine to bring these facts before our church in the best way that I could, and then published and began to circulate my pamphlet. On July 30, 1921, a copy of this pamphlet was mailed to each member of our Board of Missions, and about the same time one copy was also mailed to the presiding elder of the Shanghai District, at Shanghai, China.

So soon as I learned of Bishop Lambuth's death, since I had made statements in the pamphlet with reference to him, I wholly ceased circulating it either through the mail or in person, and wrote to three parties who were requesting the issuance to them of sixty-three copies, declining to send them on that ground, and also changed my plans with reference to giving out copies at one of our Conferences. Only one of these pamphlets was given out subsequent to Bishop Lambuth's death, and from that one all reference to Bishop Lambuth was first torn out. However, when Dr. Pinson wrote his article, quoting Bishop Lambuth and relying upon him as authority for conditions in our Mission in China, then I felt that our church was entitled to the full record, and again began to circulate it in its complete form, as it was asked for.

While I have felt no driving or compulsion from Him in my feeble efforts to witness for the faith of our fathers, I want with profound gratitude to say that I have been wonderfully conscious of our Lord's most gracious presence and of His constant leading and guidance; and also in the writing of this brief statement I wish to acknowledge my heavy obligation and my deep gratitude to Him, as well as to constant human friends whose thought and wording have also found expression here.

CHRIST OUR PROPHET.

The major and minor prophets whose writings we have in the Old Testament have done much to turn the darkness of man's ignorance of sacred things into twilight. But it was reserved for Christ to intensify the light and make our night day.

Antisthenes was famous as a teacher of rhetoric and had Diogenes among his pupils. But when he had heard Socrates, he was so impressed with his own inferiority as a teacher that he shut up his school and told his pupils, "Go, seek for yourselves a master; I have found one." John the Baptist did the same. He had a school of disciples. But when Christ came upon the scene, he referred his disciples all to Him, saying, "He must increase, but I must decrease."

Every school of philosophy that theorizes about God and creation and the soul and its hereafter, would do well to close its doors, that teacher and taught may together sit at the feet of Christ. All other prophets are over-shadowed by the sublime philosophy of Him whose knowledge is all-comprehensive, and who spoke as never man spake, startling, moving, captivating, and electrifying His hearers.—The Intelligencer.

The Home Circle

THE LOST PARTY AND ANOTHER.

Betty's grandmother, watching the busy street from her window, told Betty a story of the days when no one had ever heard of an automobile or an electric car. In those days grandmother, whose name was Elizabeth, would have thought it a fine joke had any one told her that the time would come when she could ride round the country without any horses to draw the carriage.

The little Elizabeth—that is, grandmother when she was a girl—lived in a lonely country house, where she saw few carriages, and she had never even seen a town. So, when her Aunt Julia from the city came to pay a visit and asked Elizabeth to go home with her, the little girl was greatly excited. While her mother dressed her and packed her clothes she chattered all the time.

"And shall I walk in the streets?" she asked. When her mother nodded she went on, "By myself sometimes?"

"Perhaps," her mother said doubtfully. "But remember, Elizabeth, don't ever cross the street in front of a carriage."

"No, ma'am," Elizabeth promised. "If there's a single horse in sight, mother dear, I will not cross."

"All right," said her mother absent-mindedly. She had found that two buttons, were missing from her daughter's best petticoat, which had taken her mind off the conversation. She was not listening carefully to what Elizabeth said.

"The child can be trusted, I know," she thought as she hunted for her thimble.

So away to the city Elizabeth went with Aunt Julia. It was not really a city, only a large town, but Elizabeth could not believe that there was a place in the world with more people and horses and carriages in it. Aunt Julia had a carriage and horses of her own, and so Elizabeth did not have a chance to walk, but she thought it very wonderful to drive through the streets and look at the strange sights. Sometimes during a drive she turned her head so constantly from side to side that she almost got a crick in her neck.

Before her visit had lasted a week she made several little friends. Polly Randall was the best of them all, she thought. When, one day, the morning mail brought an invitation to Polly's birthday party the next afternoon, Elizabeth was quite overcome. She had never been to a birthday party before, and in her own home birthdays were not made much of.

"We must go down-town and pick out a birthday gift for you to take to Polly," Aunt Julia said.

Elizabeth chose a blue china vase decorated with pink rosebuds. When the next day came she put on her best dress, a white lawn starched stiff, and tied her white hat under her chin. Beneath the white ruffles of her dress her heart was beating high with thoughts of the happy hours to come.

"I must hurry and dress for a meeting," Aunt Julia said. "But Polly's house is only a block away, and so you can easily go by yourself. Be careful when you cross the street."

"Yes, ma'am," was the obedient answer.

Down the front steps and up the street went Elizabeth starched and proud. When she reached the end of the block she paused and looked up and down. This was the place to cross, but she must wait until the street was clear.

She waited and waited. Up and down went the carriages and the wagons, the buggies, the carts, and the cabs. The horses' hoofs made a loud clatter on the pavement. How many there were! Was there no end to them?

Elizabeth stood patiently on the curb. Surely the long procession would soon break. But meanwhile time was flying; she could see the hands of the City Hall clock pointing to five minutes to three; and three was the hour for the party! At last the double line of carriages grew a little thinner. There was a long space in the middle of the street with no carriages at all in it. Elizabeth took a quick step forward; then she pulled up short. Was there a carriage in sight? Yes, there were several. They were far enough away, she felt sure, to be harmless; but still they were in sight, and, remembering her promise to her mother, she drew back to the sidewalk.

Clatter, clatter, rattle, rattle, on came the horses and the wheels; and in a minute the street had filled up again.

More than once it happened. Just as Elizabeth would be thinking, "Now is my chance!" a carriage would come into sight, and the chance would be lost.

The big clock boomed three; from its high tower it seemed to be staring down at the forlorn little figure on the corner. Elizabeth cast troubled glances toward Polly's house on the other corner. Little dressed-up girls and boys were hurrying through the gate and up the steps.

"O dear!" cried Elizabeth aloud. "O deary, deary me!"

Suddenly, before she could stop it, a fat tear went racing down her nose; another raced after it. Was she going to cry in the street? She turned and ran home.

When Aunt Julia reached home the hour for the party was long past. She found a red-eyed little girl who was trying hard to smile. When Elizabeth had told what had happened Aunt Julia looked sorry.

"Well! Well!" she said. "I am so used to the city that I never thought, you poor little child!"

Polly, too, was sorry when she heard about it. She came over and brought a piece of birthday cake, and Elizabeth tried to forget all about missing the party, though it was hard to do it.

She learned that in large towns people would scarcely ever get anywhere at all if they waited until the street was free of carriages. But it was too late then.

In the week that followed, Elizabeth thought that her friend behaved rather quietly. Polly seemed to be trying to keep something to herself, and she kept running up to the other girls and whispering, though she never whispered to Elizabeth.

On Saturday Aunt Julia said, "Elizabeth, put on your best dress this afternoon."

"Are we going somewhere?" questioned Elizabeth.

"No. But put on the dress and then come down to the side yard. And hurry, dear, for there's no time to lose."

Wondering greatly, Elizabeth obeyed. And when she went down there was the side yard all decorated with flowers and bunting and full of girls and boys. Under the arbor a table was set up, and in the middle of the table was a huge cake with eight lighted candles on it and mysterious packages round it.

"Why how!" stammered Elizabeth.

But Polly pushed her forward. "It's your birthday, you know," she said. "And this is your party."

Sure enough, it was her birthday. Elizabeth had forgotten.

"And that's your cake," Polly went on, "and these are your presents, and"

"And ice cream is coming," interrupted a little boy.

Elizabeth jumped up and down until her starched ruffles crackled. "Oh, what a party!" she cried. Zeila M. Walters, in The Youth's Companion.

THE CENTENARY IN CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

On request of Dr. W. B. Beauchamp, Director General of the Missionary Centenary, the Board of Missions sent Dr. O. E. Goodard to Czechoslovakia to conduct evangelistic services for two months. Dr. Goodard conducted two meetings in Prague and one in Bunn. Great throngs attended these services. Penitents were called to the altar in the old-fashioned way and instructed on how to be saved. In the three meetings more than one thousand persons professed faith in Christ at the altar.

Dr. Goodard says: "This is the most wonderful revival campaign I was ever in. Centenary money paid my traveling expenses. Centenary money paid the rental on the great theaters in which we held the meetings. Centenary money paid for all the advertising. Centenary money is buying the houses in which these congregations created by these revival meetings shall be permanently housed. Centenary money is paying the expenses of the colportage work being done in Czechoslovakia. Centenary money is doing the great relief work among the Russian refugees now in Prague. In short, were it not for Centenary money, none of the great work now being done in this new republic would be possible. While this work in Czechoslovakia is but one of the ten thousand good things being done with Centenary money, yet there is no other place on earth where a dollar will do so much towards establishing the Kingdom of God."

Editorial

A TIME-LIMITED EPISCOPACY.

There is considerable agitation going on at the present time throughout the church in favor of the election of bishops for a term of years, the proposed term ranging from four to eight years, with eligibility to re-election. The movement seems to have gained considerable headway, several Annual Conferences having expressed themselves in favor of it by the adoption of memorials to the General Conference asking for legislation to that end.

The argument most frequently advanced in favor of the proposed change is that it will provide a more democratic administration of the affairs of the church and that it will, therefore, do away with the tendency toward autocracy inherent in our present system. This argument is reinforced by the appeal to the new spirit of democracy that is making itself felt in all spheres of activity since the World War, and by reference to the polity of other churches in which there is no life-tenure of office.

While there is some merit in this argument, we do not believe that it is of sufficient force to warrant a change in the system under which episcopal Methodism has become one of the greatest forces for righteousness in the world. While admitting that no system is likely to work perfectly, we believe that our present system is so well adapted to our needs that it should not undergo the radical change involved in the plan proposed. The following are some of the reasons why we hold this belief:

1. A careful student of the episcopacy has found that the average period of active service of our bishops is about eight years—maybe a little more or a little less. While the "law of averages" is not always to be relied upon for establishing a principle of action, it does frequently serve to remove popular misconceptions concerning questions at issue. If the average length of active service of our bishops is only eight years, more or less, we already have, in effect, all the advantages that would accrue from election for a term only.

2. It is commonly said that there is, at every General Conference, considerable activity among the friends of those who are supposed to be in line for election to the episcopacy, resulting in the mixture of "politics" with ecclesiastical affairs. We have never attended a General Conference, and we cannot, therefore, speak from personal knowledge of such "political" activity; but if it does exist, it is only reasonable to suppose that it would be greatly intensified by the increased number of quadrennial elections and the desire of their friends to see incumbents re-elected to their positions. If there is any reproach to the church in connection with the election of bishops under the present system, there would be a much greater reproach under the proposed change.

3. There is no question but that the most representative men of the church should be called to the highest office within the gift. With a life-tenure of office, it is only once in a great while that one who has been elected to the episcopacy declines the election, and then it is for reasons thoroughly understood by and acceptable to the church; but it is altogether probable that some of the men who would otherwise accept the office would hesitate to do so with the term so limited that its opportunities for service would be conceivably less than those offered in some other position of equal honor and responsibility. This would not involve the question of self-interest, either, for, under such conditions, the episcopacy would be only one of many positions in which the church could be equally well served.

4. Without contending that the episcopacy is an order, we have come to attach to it a degree of importance that gives to our bishops a pre-eminence that commands the respect of the world and, in consequence, secures to the church a consideration that it would not otherwise have. A short-term bishop might perform all the duties of the episcopal office—but he would not be the bishop we have learned to love and honor.

The above are some of the considerations which make us believe that no change should be made in our present system of electing bishops for life. To meet certain criticisms of the present plan of electing bishops for life, the following suggestions have been made:

1. Let the Committee on Episcopacy "function with a little more conscience" in the matter of retiring bishops on account of old age or physical inability to perform the duties of their office.

2. Let some plan be devised whereby the bishops will be able to cultivate more intensively the fields assigned to their care. This may involve the election of a larger number of bishops, the assignment of the bishops to definite episcopal residences, and a provision that they spend much of their time within their episcopal districts; but it would not involve any limitation of their episcopal functions, nor would it detract from the high honor in which the office is held.

The times may call for an adaptation of the episcopacy to the needs of the new age in which we live, but we do not believe they demand a fundamental change in the nature of the office itself.

BISHOP McMURRY AND THE GAVELS.

If presentations of gavels to Bishop W. F. McMurry continue as they have begun this year, the good Bishop will soon have a sufficient number of these emblems of authority to wield a different one at all the sessions of Conferences over which he may be called to preside for years to come.

At the recent session of the Louisiana Conference, he was presented with two—one from the famous Evangeline Oak, and another from the sill under the pulpit of the historic church at Opelousas, La., where the Louisiana Conference was organized, the first being presented by Rev. Martin Hebert, presiding elder of the French Mission District, in behalf of himself and the preachers of his district, and the other by Rev. S. L. Riggs, pastor at Opelousas.

At the North Mississippi Conference, Bishop McMurry received three gavels. One was made from the pulpit of old Shiloh Church, of Civil War fame, and was presented by the board of stewards of the Corinth Methodist Church. Another was made from the wood of a black walnut tree planted sixty years ago at Aberdeen, Miss., by Bishop Robert Paine, sent by his son, Capt. G. C. Paine, and presented by Rev. T. H. Dorsey. The third was made from the timbers of the house in which Bishop Chas. B. Galloway was born, at Kosciusko.

Miss., and was presented by Rev. E. H. Cunningham.

Bishop McMurry has as little need of a gavel as any presiding officer we have ever seen—but if occasion should arise, he would be able to select one that would meet any emergency.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOUTHERN METHODIST PRESS ASSOCIATION.

The Southern Methodist Press Association will hold its annual meeting at Lakeland, Florida, beginning December 15. Lakeland is the home of the Florida Christian Advocate, whose able editor, Dr. J. E. Wilson, will prove a most gracious host to his brethren of the tripod. The Chamber of Commerce of Lakeland has also indicated its intention of treating the visitors with most generous hospitality, providing for their entertainment while in the city, taking them on extensive sight-seeing tours, and contributing liberally to the expenses of the gathering.

The Southern Methodist Press Association, although young in years, has already accomplished much for the betterment of the church publications, and it faces the opportunity of increased usefulness. The following tentative program has been prepared for the meeting this month:

A NOTE OF APPRECIATION.

We are sure our readers enjoyed the account of the proceedings of the North Mississippi Conference, which appeared in last week's Advocate. They, as well as we, are indebted to Rev. H. P. Lewis, a member of that Conference, who graciously acceded to the editor's request to furnish the account. We first knew Brother Lewis when we were students together at Millsaps College, and the passing years have only strengthened the high opinion we formed of him in those early days.

REV. J. L. NEILL GOES TO CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

The announcement on another page that Rev. J. L. Neill has been appointed superintendent of Methodist Missions in Czecho-Slovakia will be read with especial interest in Mississippi, of which State Brother Neill is a native and within the bounds of which, as a member of the Mississippi Conference, he rendered notable service as pastor of some of the leading appointments. He is a graduate of Millsaps College who has reflected honor upon his Alma Mater in the great work he has done throughout the church as Superintendent of the Department of Missionary Education of the General Sunday School Board. He will take up the work in his new field about January 1, making his headquarters at Prague, but he will continue in charge of his department at Nashville until May, 1922. It is a splendid tribute to his efficiency that the Sunday schools of Cuba, where he has rendered magnificent service, should have asked the privilege of providing his salary in his new field. Having already demonstrated the fact that he possesses unusual executive ability, Brother Neill will enter upon his new work with an experience and equipment that insure a successful administration in our missionary work abroad.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The next meeting of the College of Bishops will be held at Nashville, Tenn., on March 8, 1922.

Dr. A. W. Plyler has been elected editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate to succeed Dr. G. T. Rowe, elected Book Editor.

A great union Thanksgiving service was held at Durant, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett and Rev. S. G. Posey having charge of the program.

Dr. J. M. Rowland has been elected editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, to succeed Dr. G. H. Lambeth, who resigned on account of ill health.

Sister T. S. Randle, of Yoakum, Texas, has recently suffered severely from a bone felon, but, in spite of the pain, she was on "shouting ground" all the while.

Rev. R. A. Davis, an honored superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference, is making his home with his son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. R. S. Crlchow, 916 Lowerline Street, this city.

Rev. J. M. Boykin and family were given a gracious reception on their new charge, Boyce, La. The services were well attended on the first Sunday, and three members were received into the church.

The Licensing Committee of the Aberdeen District recently granted license to preach to J. A. Helms, E. L. Jernigan, and J. A. Young. The first two are from the Pontotoc charge, and the last is from the Salem and Oakdale charge.

The Southern Methodist Handbook, no edition of which was published this year, will make its appearance early in 1922. It will be welcomed by all those who like to have important information concerning the church easily accessible.

Rev. T. H. Dorsey, Aberdeen, Miss., in renewing the subscription of Mrs. M. A. Cunningham, states that she has been a subscriber to the Advocate for fifty-two years—a notable record. We pray that the paper may continue to be a blessing to her.

When Rev. J. W. Booth and family arrived at their new home, Amite, La., last week, they found that the ladies had a fine dinner waiting for them, and they were made to feel thoroughly at home. Both the services on Sunday were well attended.

Rev. J. H. Felts, presiding elder of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, is very highly esteemed by his co-laborers on the district. A recent number of the "Big Brother" pays him high tribute as a man and as a minister.

The first honorary degree ever conferred by Boston University was bestowed upon Marshal Foch recently, when he was granted the title of doctor of laws.

Dr. Henry Allen Peck, vice-chancellor of Syracuse University, who became acting head of the institution after the resignation of Chancellor James R. Day last summer, died on November 17.

Dr. Theodore Copeland recently closed a great meeting in Alderson, West Virginia. There were one hundred accessions to the churches, and a great many reclamations. The whole community was stirred religiously as a result of the meeting.

According to an exchange, between one-third and one-half of the undergraduate students of Johns Hopkins University belong to the Methodist or the Episcopal Churches, the Methodist Church having 134 members and the Episcopal Church 132.

The Baltimore Annual Conference passed the following resolution at its recent session: "Any undergraduate who fails to pass his examination on the Course of Study for two consecutive years, unless excused by the Conference, shall be discontinued."

Rev. George Avery, Jr., well known in Louisiana, was appointed pastor of the West End Methodist Church, Houston, Texas, at the recent session of the Texas Conference. He was ordained deacon at that Conference by Bishop W. N. Ainsworth.

Rev. H. N. Brown, the recently appointed pastor of Parker Memorial Church, this city, reached the city with his family last week, and filled his pulpit last Sunday. Large congregations attended the services and the work of the new Conference year begins auspiciously.

The Methodist Union Thanksgiving service in New Orleans was held at Rayne Memorial Church on Thanksgiving morning, the sermon being preached by Rev. W. L. Duren. The sermon was really a great utterance. The offering was devoted to the Memorial Home.

Rev. J. H. Moore, our pastor at Pascagoula, Miss., requests us to say that he is in need of Vol. III of Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History. He has Vols. I, II, and IV, presented to him from the library of the late Dr. T. B. Holloman. He will pay a reasonable price for the missing volume. The date of publication of the volumes he has is 1821.

The "Big Brother," official organ of the Big Brothers' Class, Greenville, Miss., pays high tribute, in its issue of November 20, to the pastor of the First Methodist Church of Greenville, Rev. E. S. Lewis, who was returned to that appointment for the fifth year. Brother Lewis and his great organization are doing a fine piece of work at Greenville.

We clip the following from Zion's Herald of November 23: "At a meeting of the Commission on Unification of the Methodist Episcopal Church held at Detroit a few days ago, a communication to the Commission of the Church, South, to be transmitted to the General Conference of that church, was adopted in accordance with the directions of the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

Rev. Humbert Weir and Miss Rosa Lee Pratt were married at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Pratt, at Bentonla, Miss., on Thursday afternoon, November 24. Rev. B. H. Williams, of Satartia, Miss., officiating. Brother Weir was pastor of the Sallis charge, North Mississippi Conference, last year, but was appointed to the Waterford charge at the recent session of the Conference. The Advocate extends hearty good wishes to the happy young couple.

We clip the following from a recent issue of the Oxford (Miss.) Eagle: "Dr. L. M. Lipscomb, of the Methodist church, leaves the first of the week for Amory, to attend the Annual Conference. Brother Lipscomb has a host of friends here who wish that he return to Oxford, as he is not only a strong gospel preacher, but a stalwart Christian character who takes a fearless stand for righteousness, truth, and justice, regardless of condition or class. The world is dying for the want of such leaders in our churches and communities."

Rev. R. S. Stewart, D.D., one of our general evangelists, has been working more than a year in the Orient. The major part of his time has been spent in Korea and Japan. His largest success has been in schools and colleges. In one school there were several hundred professions. He has been much in demand at numerous conferences of Christian people. In Japan he reports conversions as bright and as instantaneous as in the home land. Let us not forget Dr. Stewart in our prayers in the great work he is doing in the Orient.

We record with sorrow the death of Mr. Henry Skipwith, father of Mrs. R. H. Harper, wife of the pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city, at Baton Rouge, La., on Tuesday night, November 22, at an advanced age. Mr. Skipwith was a native of Clinton, La. He was a Confederate veteran, having fought through the battle of Shiloh and through the siege of Vicksburg. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and had been prominent in the business and political life of the State. He was buried from the Presbyterian church in Baton Rouge, interment being in Magnolia Cemetery. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the bereaved family and friends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—IMPORTANT!

All those who wish their Advocate sent to a new address should notify us at once of the change desired, giving the old post office as well as the new. We can make no changes without this authority. This notice is especially important to the preachers of the three Conferences.

BUSINESS MANAGER.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: T. M. Babington, Franklinton, La., 2; Rev. A. A. Simms, Johns, Miss., 2; Rev. E. M. Shaw, Houston, Miss., 9; Rev. D. W. Babb, Strongs, Miss., 3.

WHY CAN YOU BLOW OUT A CANDLE?

When you light a candle it burns because the lighted wick heats the wax sufficiently to turn it into gases, which mix with the oxygen in the air and produce fire in the form of light. You know it is not easy to light a candle quickly. You must hold the lighted match to the wick until the wax begins to melt and change to gases. As long as the wax continues hot enough to melt and turn to gas, the candle will burn until all burned up; but if there is a break in the continuous process of changing the wax to gas, the light will go out. Now, when you blow at the lighted candle, you blow the gases which feed the flame away from the lighted wick, and this makes a break in the continuous flow of gas from the wax to taper, and the light goes out.—From "The Book of Wonders."

I should be ashamed, as an American citizen, to have millions of men unemployed this winter, because there is work for all if we will only manage our affairs with a reasonable degree of intelligence.—Eugene Meyer, Jr., War Finance Corporation.

Obituaries.

Miss., on April 20, 1849. She departed this life on July 5, 1921. She was born of pious Christian parents, and therefore got a good start in life. In early childhood she acknowledged Christ as her Master, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and remained a member for more than fifty years. To the best of her ability she followed Christ all the way, even to the end. She was a faithful attendant upon all the ordinances of the church, as long as her physical strength permitted. When, a number of years before her death, affliction—blindness and disease—caused her to give up going to God's house, her interest in the work of the kingdom remained keen, and she never forgot to pray for God's cause. On March 17, 1875, she was married to T. W. Sullivan. This union was blessed with three daughters, two of whom preceded this patient, prayerful mother to heaven. One is yet living, Mrs. Jno. F. Hollinger, Meadville, Miss., who, no doubt, with her father gets inspiration from the memory of the Christ-like life of the mother and wife that God has called home. Let us not grieve as those who have no hope, but from this land of grief let us look for the dawn of the endless day when we shall see her again. May God bless and comfort the loved ones and friends.

PAUL H. GRICE, Pastor.

MRS. ETHEL TUCKER PITTMAN.

The Woman's Missionary Society of First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, La., offers a tribute of love and appreciation of a beautiful life that has passed to life eternal.

In losing Mrs. ETHEL TUCKER PITTMAN, our auxiliary has lost a faithful worker, one ever ready to do any service assigned her. She lived a devout Christian and loyal Methodist. Her devotion to her family was beautiful, particularly her solicitous care of her feeble mother. Her spirit was very self-sacrificing, her nature lovable. She was always ready to help others.

To her bereaved husband and mother and the other members of her family, we offer our sincere sympathy.

PROPERTY VALUES OF WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

The Whitworth College property, located between West Cherokee and West Monticello Streets, is a source of pride not only to Brookhaven but to Southern Mississippi especially and to the entire State.

President Cooper is gratified at the enrollment of 278 students so far this term. The morale of the student body is admirable, the young ladies appreciating the splendid additions to the campus and the equipment as shown in the gymnasium and natatorium that is adding to their pleasure as well as development.

Of the five buildings on the campus at the inauguration of Dr. Cooper's administration, only two remain, the big brick structure to the south now known as the chapel, and its counterpart to the north, used as a dormitory; and remodeling, improvements and repairs costing about $8,000 have been made on these.

There are now eleven buildings on the campus. The values of the later additions we give as follows:

Mary Jane Lampton Auditorium, $30,000; Cooper Hall, $35,000; Elizabeth Hall (former President's Home), $7,000; Enochs Hall, $50,000; Gymnasium and equipment, $20,000; Y. W. C. A. Hut, $10,000; Fernwood Cottage (former parsonage), $4,500; McGrath House, $15,000; laundry, $1,500; repairs to Margaret Hall and Johnson Institute in 1920, $8,000. Total, $181,000.

These are the buildings that have been erected or added in the last eight years. The two older structures mentioned before in this article, at present day values, are worth $100,000 in the opinion of a competent architect.

A very conservative estimate of the buildings and site, which covers about three city blocks, would be $500,000.

The President's new home, the McGrath House, is a handsomely appointed home, the architecture and beautiful situation attracting the attention of observers in our city of beautiful homes. It is the gift of President Cooper to the institution over which he has presided with such signal ability for nearly twenty years. —The Semi-Weekly Leader, Brookhaven, Miss.

CENTENARY RECORD TO NOVEMBER 1.

To November 1 there had been paid on individual pledges to the Centenary $11,102,294.81. Including payments by the Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues, the total is $12,957,151.49. This total represents 33 per cent of amount pledged, as against 60 per cent now due.

In total amount paid—including Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues—the Virginia Conference is first, its amount to November 1, $1,100,615.7. The next six Conferences, with amounts paid, are: North Carolina, $595,036; North Georgia, $568,471; Tennessee, $533,332; South Georgia, $532,951; Western North Carolina, $531,973; Baltimore, $505,049.

In percentage of pledge paid, the first seven Conferences are: Pacific, 49.1; Missouri, 41.4; Kentucky, 42; Baltimore, 41; Northwest Texas, 41; Denver, 40.4; Virginia, 39.9. In percentage of quota paid, the first seven are: Pacific, 49; Kentucky, 48.7; Western Virginia, 48; South Carolina, 46.6; Baltimore, 46.4; Virginia, 44. Nineteen Conferences have paid 33 per cent and above of their pledges, while nineteen are below that percentage.

Much is to be done during the next few weeks, or we will come far short for 1921 of the amount paid in 1920. And much can be done if we give ourselves, with the best we have of effort, of faith, and of prayer, to this task. Let us make this special effort to close the year with a record worthy of a great church, and one that shows sacrificial giving.

PROSPERITY.

Never are we so well off as when the people about us are sharing our prosperity or our happiness. This is one of the fine facts connected with giving regularly to religious and charitable causes; such giving blesses the giver quite as much as the getter.

So a native of East India learned of whom an Oriental parable tells. The first year after he had received an irrigated rice field by bequest, he observed that the water, having enriched his land, flowed on to his neighbor's fields and enriched them too, so that each had an abundant harvest.

Hating to see any one else get in on a good thing the man closed the water channel that led to his neighbor's fields, with the result that his neighbor's crop was destroyed by drought. But his own was ruined, too, because there was no outlet for the too abundant water.

Selfishly keeping our prosperity to ourselves means eventful unhappiness for ourselves, but passing on our prosperity means a blessing for others as well as ourselves. Selfish prosperity sooner or later dooms one to sorrow. —Exchange.

TO-DAY'S MEN OF WEALTH WERE YESTERDAY'S SAVERS.

Commenting on the value of starting saving habits early in life, the St. Joseph (Oreg.) Herald brings out the fact that the men who have got ahead in the world are those who started to save when young.

"Can you recall the little incidents of your young days?" asks the Herald. Perhaps you remember some child who was close with his pennies—who put them in his bank and kept them there. That child, even in its tender years, was imbued with the habit of saving and was cultivating the budding idea of thrift. If you can locate that child to-day you will probably find a man who has made a commercial success of life and who is financially at ease, even if not wealthy.

"The child who saves his pennies in time becomes the man who accumulates dollars. But the one who spends his pennies as fast as he gets them, generally finds that in after years the habit has fastened itself upon him to such an extent that his life becomes one of endless spending always earning money but never having a surplus dollar. The gravest financial injury you can do your child is to encourage it to go out and spend its pennies as fast as he gets them. It marks the beginning of a bad ending. It is easier for the leopard to change its spots than for the spender to be anything but what he is."

Said a heathen to a missionary: "There must be something in your religion which makes you come all the way out here to tell us of it. I am sure I would not go so far to tell you of mine." Exchange.

THIS GIRL IS A WONDER.

Do you want more money than you ever possessed? If so, learn to make out and fruit bonbons—the business will net you $30.00 to $300.00 per month. You can work from your own home; all who sample your bonbons become regular customers. You start by investing less than $10.00 for supplies. Mary Elizabeth started her candy kitchen with $5.00, and has made a fortune. Cannot you do likewise? I will tell you all about the business and help you start, so you can become independent. Now is the psychological time to make big money, as sugar is cheaper and fine bonbons command phenomenal prices. Write to-day. Isabelle Inez, 57 Morewood Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Adv.

BEFORE AND AFTER CHILDBIRTH

Mrs. Williams Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Kept Her in Health

Overpeck, O.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me both before and after my baby was born. I suffered with backache, headache, was generally run down and weak. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the newspapers and decided to try it. Now I feel fine, take care of my two boys and do my own work. I recommend your medicine to anyone who is ailing. You may publish my testimonial if you think it will help others." —Mrs. CARRIE WILLIAMS, Overpeck, Ohio.

For more than forty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been restoring women to health who suffered from irregularities, displacements, backaches, headaches, bearing-down pains, nervousness or "the blues." Today there is hardly a town or hamlet in the United States wherein some woman does not reside who has been made well by it. That is why Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is now recognized as the standard remedy for such ailments.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

On November 18, I spoke to the men's and boys' club at Harrisville, giving the stereopticon lecture that night.

Sunday following I was with Brother Westbrook, at Seminary. We had a good service at Seminary, and if the school will keep their promise, they will do a good work next year. We also visited Eminence and Sandford.

Thanksgiving Day we spent at Hopewell, preaching in the morning, and in the afternoon we darkened the building and gave a stereopticon lecture, and that night we gave a lecture at Gallman.

Next Sunday will be spent at Lodebar, thus completing the year's work. You will read this letter while at Conference; will you not plan to do some definite training for your people? The Sunday School Board is anxious to help you. There are only 196 subscribers to the "Church School" in our Conference; we want to have at least 1000. You cannot do a better thing than to get your workers to read this magazine—the idea that it is merely for advanced schools is wrong. It is for every one that believes in Christian education and the spreading of the Gospel.

Pray for me, and the work.

Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

ministers in college towns than getting acquainted with these stranger Methodists and making them feel at home. The names and if possible the addresses of all the students who have gone away to college should be sent to the pastors in their respective college centers. A visit from the pastor and an invitation to the church will help remove the lonesome feeling that many experience in their new and strange surroundings. It may also be a factor of no small importance in keeping these young people allied with the church during their student days, thus laying the foundation for loyal Christian manhood and womanhood in later years.—Exchange.

FROM OLOH, MISS.

The work on this charge has made some improvement this year, financially and spiritually. Two new Sunday schools, two Woman's Missionary Societies, and one Epworth League have been organized and are at work.

Our church at Clyde deserves creditable mention. Its growth has been phenomenal. They are an earnest working band. Have Sunday school pretty well organized, with two Wesley classes. They have organized a Woman's Missionary Society and an Epworth League that are working.

Total finances for the year about double that of last, approximately $1200. Clyde is the site of the Helen White Lumber Company.

THE CHURCH AND PUBLIC OPINION.

By Dr. John H. Finley, Chairman of the Federal Council's Commission On International Justice and Goodwill.

The bold and noble policy for the reduction of navies announced by Secretary Hughes at the opening session of the Conference on Limitation of Armament may well prove to be the beginning of a new day in our international life. This far-reaching proposal was made possible by the nationwide tide of public opinion which has supported the calling of the Conference and which has made it as clear as daylight that the people everywhere are not only ready for a thorough-going reduction of armament, but insistent that it should be no longer delayed. In developing and expressing this public sentiment, the churches have played a memorable part. Even the most critical could not declare that on this issue they have been either indifferent or ineffective. In fact, it is not too much to say that they have been one of the decisive factors in setting our nation before the world as the outspoken advocate of the abandonment of the policy of competitive armament.

But the work of the churches in behalf of a more Christian international life is not finished, it is only beginning. To mistake proposals for achievements would be a perilous mistake. Above all things, we must now be on our guard against being betrayed into complacency or inaction. We must support the Conference with the utmost vigor until it actually adopts constructive plans. We must then continue our campaign of education through the churches until Congress has taken action that will put those plans into operation concurrently with other nations.

The currents of reaction and skepticism may begin to set in at any time. In the face of these misgivings the church must sustain a lofty faith in the possibilities of the Conference for practical achievement and the workableness of a positive substitute for super-armament and war.

The complex and delicate problems of the Far East are still to be considered. They can be solved at all only as they are approached with largeness of vision and in an attitude of generous co-operation. The church must, therefore, create a spirit which will make it possible both to secure the future welfare of China and at the same time to maintain the utmost friendliness with Japan.

As the Conference goes on it will, no doubt, become increasingly clear that something more than reduction of armament is necessary. This, after all, is only the negative side of the question. Some arrangement will have to be found for assuring the sense of security and of the possibility of obtaining justice for which men have looked to armaments in the past. This will require a willingness on the part of America to join in permanent co-operation with the other nations in the support of international courts and some continuing association for future conference and the maintenance of peace. To develop an underlying conviction of the solidarity of the human race, to make men see that we are members one of another, and to inspire them to act according to this Christian point of view—surely that is a permanent task of the church and one which was never more challenging than now.

A GOOD MEETING IN BILOXI, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have lately closed an excellent meeting at Main Street, Biloxi, Miss., which resulted in about thirty-five accessions to the church representing ten families not hitherto connected with us, and giving a spiritual uplift to many already within the church. The preaching was well done by Brother J. V. Bennett, who was also with us in a splendid meeting here last year. He is a strong and effective preacher, with a winsome personality. Withal he is a growing man. His improvement during the past year was apparent. He preaches well at every service. He is without doubt one of our best and safest evangelist. He possesses both fervent piety and the spirit of a sound mind. He is helpful to the pastor and the results of his work abides. I most heartily commend him to the brethren who may need a helper. The singing, which was well done, was under the leadership of Rev. Frank Collins, of the Louisiana Conference, who is now a student of Emory University, and Mrs. Bennett, soloist and leader of our local choir.

In all ways, with candidates to be received, we have had a hundred accessions to the church this year, and should report a net gain of about fifty at the Annual Conference.

THE INNER CHAMBER.

I cannot choose my surroundings, but I can choose my thoughts. I cannot hinder evil entering my mind, but I need not, unless I like, bid it welcome and ask it to stay. I can get rid of it best, not by direct attack, but by what soldiers call a flank movement. To face the evil thoughts in your own mind, and try to think them away, is, in most cases, to make the trouble worse by concentrating attention upon it. The better way is Paul's—whatever things are true, pure, lovely, and of good report, think on these things. The good will expel the evil. Beyond our speech, our secret cherished thoughts speak for us. Beyond our profession, they declare what we are. If beyond our poor speech and imperfect discipleship we want our lives to speak for Christ, we must love him and worship him, and cleave to him, just in our inmost hearts.—Archibald Alexander.

The best part of human history is never written at all. Family life, patient service, quiet endurance, the training of children, the resistance of temptation—these things are never mentioned by the historian. . . . If we remember these things we shall mitigate the contempt with which we are apt to speak of so-called nobodies. Because we admire brilliance we need not despise usefulness. — Joseph Parker.

It is self that keeps us from service, self which breaks the golden rule by which Christ bade us live. Self is the first weight that we must cut off and lay aside, to which we must say as the knight said unto those who came to tempt him from his errand: "Stand aside; I run for my lord the king!"—Margaret Slattery.

If a pig could give his mind to anything, he wouldn't be a pig.—Dickens.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A Request.

Mrs. Susie Thomas, Superintendent of Supplies of North Mississippi Conference, has received the following request from Mrs. McCoy, Administrative Secretary for the Eastern Division, with the request that it be given all publicity possible:

"The Vashli Industrial School has organized an orchestra. They are very much in need of violins, guitars, mandolins, and any other instruments they can get. Would you mind making a call through the Department of Supplies for musical instruments, stringed, brass, or silver, for Vashli?"

"Possibly there are some young folks who, having outgrown the days of their orchestral performances, have tucked away many of their instruments in old attics and would be glad to hunt them up for the use of the Vashli girls."

All parcels sent to Vashli must be addressed to Miss Charlotte Dye, Thomasville, Ga.

Mission Study Classes.

I had only fifteen Mission Study classes during the third quarter, according to the reports sent in to Mrs. H. R. Steele. I have on hand a number of these report cards and would be so glad if every auxiliary who has a class taking a new book during this fourth quarter would write for one and send it to Mrs. Steele. Following are the Superintendents who sent in cards last quarter: Mrs. W. W. Woollard, Grenada; Mrs. J. E. Ross, Minter City; Mrs. E. B. Allen, Ruleville; Mrs. R. E. Williams, Charleston; Mrs. Vivian S. Jackson, Macon; Mrs. H. L. Moser, Iuka; Mrs. W. B. Parks, Merigold; Mrs. E. C. Sturdivant, Tyro; Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Durant.

Sixty-seven superintendents of Mission Study of the Conference reported to me last quarter, Grenada District leading. What about the other 200? Even should you have no Mission Study or Bible Study class, you should send me a card saying so, and that counts your report. Let's make the fourth quarter a banner one. Already had one report.

President's Message.

Dear Friends: For several years it has been my custom to send to the auxiliaries a message at the end of the year to tell them how much depended upon the separate societies throughout the Conference. At this time it seems to me that all I have written before has merely touched the surface of the matter. If you will refer to the record of our Conference as it is shown by years in the last minutes, you will notice that our contributions through the Council have doubled during the past five years and that each year a very substantial increase has been made. Always the credit for this showing has been given to the faithful members who have labored so earnestly to round out the work. There has never been the difficulty of reaching what seemed an impossible goal.

But in this month before our records are closed again, the appeal must be made for the greatest effort you have ever made. With a wave of enthusiasm as well as of faith that our membership would achieve it, at the last annual meeting the goal was placed at $28,500. The first three quarters of this year the contributions amounted to $14,951.45, which is below the amount of the same period of 1920. If we reach the goal which our representatives set at Okolona, the fourth quarter must bring in $13,548.55. This is more than is usually sent for that quarter. Can it be done?

It is not an impossibility. In the first place, our records show that the specials have not come in as formerly. If your auxiliary is one which carries a special, see to it that it is paid in full. Your district secretary has been informed where the weak spots of her district lie. She has probably written you to tell just what effort it will take to make us reach our aim. Even if she has not, your auxiliary officers are cognizant of conditions and many are wondering whether their last report may state that all pledges are met in full. I may say that to be strong an auxiliary requires the best effort of each member, and that the Conference is helpless without the thorough co-operation and help of all its membership. Don't be one in auxiliary or Conference to cause the failure.

In fact, there is nothing left for us to do but to pledge ourselves to ONE LAST STRONG PULL for the last month of the year. Harvest Day is at hand; don't neglect to observe it. Make it attractive with a special program; get gifts from the women who have never united with the society. Your auxiliary may not need it; your Conference does. ARE YOU READY TO HELP?

May December truly be a gathering in of the fruits of the year in each auxiliary, is the wish of

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas Brother Alonzo Early has, for the past three years, served our Sunday School Board as its efficient field secretary; and whereas the work has been abundantly blessed under his administration; therefore be it resolved.

That we receive his resignation with regret, and pray God's blessing upon him as he returns to the pastorate, and also pray that his mantle may fall upon his worthy and painstaking successor.

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE."

Dear Brother Garley: Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, having completed a four-year period of service among us, will leave in a few days to take up their service in other fields; therefore it is a pleasure to give a brief summary of the wonderful achievements which they have accomplished since they came to Shelby.

The membership of the church four years ago numbered one hundred and twenty-two; it has been increased to two hundred and sixty. There were seventy members of the Sunday school, and the number now is two hundred and sixty-three, an excess of three over the church membership.

The Business Men's Bible Class, for which both Brother and Mrs. Wyatt have so zealously and tirelessly labored, and of which Mrs. Wyatt is leader and instructress, has made remarkable progress both in numbers and in achievements. Mr. C. S. Stone is president of the class and to him Mrs. Wyatt gives great credit for the growth and "aliveness" of this fine class of business men, which now numbers seventy members.

On last Wednesday evening at the usual hour for prayer service, Mr. Stone, who was leader for the evening, turned the meeting into a beautiful "farewell service" for Mrs. Wyatt as teacher and leader of the Men's Bible class. Expressions of appreciation, love and good wishes were given by various members, and a lovely gift was presented to Mrs. Wyatt, to her great surprise and pleasure, and her response was both touching and beautiful.

The summary of their work would not be complete without making special mention of the Junior Church Service, which Brother and Mrs. Wyatt conceived and organized and of which Mrs. Wyatt has made a wonderful and greatly-loved leader. The membership of this organization consists of young people of the Intermediate and Senior ages—or from 12 years up—and it is the only known organization of its kind in this Conference. Its greatest service, aside from the religious objective, is the social appeal it makes to the young people during the ages when their social instincts demand recognition.

Mention also may be made of the growth and progress of the Woman's Missionary Society, of which Mrs. Wyatt was president, and to her the greatest credit is due for the excellent work it has achieved under her efficient and unselfish leadership.

It has been a rare pleasure to have Brother and Mrs. Wyatt among us; their zeal has been an inspiration, their culture and intellect of mind a delight to a wide circle of friends. The good wishes, love, and prayers of the people of Shelby go with them as they leave us. Sincerely,

Mrs. H. W. PEASE.

Read the Gospels and you cannot help seeing that what men learnt from Christ was to be themselves—not bound by convention, or fashion, or custom of unintelligent respectability, tradition of ordinances which only restrict and confine, but that each man, in his own individual gifts, had his own splendid opportunities, his own unique powers of development put into his own hands, and that the voice of the Father was perpetually calling him to use them to the utmost and so to rise into the glorious liberty of the children of God.—William Holden Hutton

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs, loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract known the world over for its healing effect on membranes. Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. A program of superlative merit has been prepared for this meeting. The opening evening, Tuesday, December 13, will be marked by addresses by Dr. Ed F. "The Spirit and Ideals of Distinctively Christian Education." The themes of all the addresses that will be delivered stress the Christian note in education and in all of the deliberations of the Association the uppermost thought will be the best methods of perfecting an education that is Christian to the core.

The general topic of discussion on December 14, will be the Christian Education Movement and addresses will be made from the standpoint of the college, the preacher, and the layman by Dr. W. F. Quillian, president of Wesleyan College, Rev. W. A. Lambeth, of High Point, North Carolina, and Mr. Thomas S. Southgate, of Norfolk, Virginia. Dr. J. H. Reynolds, Director General of the Movement, will speak on the subject of "Building Financial Constituencies for Our Colleges," and Dr. I. P. Martin, of the Holston Conference, will speak on "Relations between the Conference Secretary of Education and the Various Institutions."

One most interesting feature of the gathering will be a pronouncement on the part of the Committee on Resolutions concerning distinctively Christian education, in which the schools and colleges of the church will express their convictions, attitude, and purpose in this regard. The Committee which will deliver this pronouncement is composed of Dr. H. N. Snyder, president of Wofford College, Dr. J. S. French, president of Emory and Henry College, and Dr. F. N. Parker, Dean of Emory University.

A full day will be devoted to the discussion of religious education with especial reference to the training of Sunday school workers and religious educators in the schools and colleges of the church.

While the gathering is of especial interest to educators, it likewise possesses great significance to pastors and others who are interested in the cause of Christian education in the church. The sessions will be open to all visitors who may care to attend.

THE BIBLE AT THE DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

When the World Conference on Disarmament opened its history-making deliberations on Armistice Day, November 11, a Bible presented by the New York Bible Society was on the table, available for use.

President Warren G. Harding had accepted the Bible in behalf of the Conference a fortnight or more before the session opened. It was presented to him by John C. West, president, and Dr. George William Carter, executive secretary of the New York Bible Society, by whom the Bible had been designed.

On its black morocco covers in gold lettering was the inscription:

"This Bible is presented to the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments and dedicated to the Promotion of good will among the nations by the New York Bible Society, November 11, 1921."

The Bible contains 1,000 pages and is printed on India paper. When it rests on the speaker's stand in the Continental Memorial Hall, it is encased in a leather case lined with plush.

The New York Bible Society, at 5 East 48th Street, gave a Bible to every soldier and sailor who left New York ports during the war for France. Hundreds of thousands were distributed in this way. The Society provides a Bible for every immigrant who comes into this country and its work at Ellis Island has become famed around the world. The work is maintained by contributions from those who believe in its effectiveness. Sixty thousand dollars was used last year to "carry on."

The 112th anniversary of the Society will be on Bible Sunday, December 1, at 8 o'clock, in the St. Nicholas Reformed Church, Fifth Avenue and 48th Street. Sir William Ramsay, the author, who is the world's most famous archaeologist, and was knighted by King Edward VII, will deliver an address on "The Authority of the Bible."—Bulletin.

HOW BISHOP DENNY STUDIES THE BIBLE.

Bishop Collins Denny possesses a wonderful verbal knowledge of the Bible, and nearly always quotes from memory in the pulpit instead of reading from the Book as is the case with practically all ministers. The Bishop recently made the following statement with reference to his Bible studies.

"No man does much at anything who does not have a plan. My plan for Bible study is to hold myself responsible every day for a definite minimum of Bible reading. This minimum takes me through the Bible about three times every two years. For a busy man, it takes determination to carry out this plan, but it can be done, as I know by experience. In addition, a man should have some plan for regular and constant study of the Bible. I have found that it is good for my spiritual life, profitable for my intellect, helpful in my preaching to study a book of the Bible. In making this study, I secure the best available commentaries, and try to go through the Book word by word. Yet another plan that I have pursued with great profit is to commit to memory chapters and indeed whole books of the Bible. For this purpose I always use the authorized version. Its tuneful periods are easily remembered and ring like bells. While walking along the street, or lying awake at night, I find it profitable to let the very words of the Bible flow through my mind. If a man really loves the old Book, it will be impossible for him to neglect it, and the more he loves it the more attention he will pay to it."

IN THE HEART OF BOLSHIEVIK RUSSIA.

"On to Habarovsk! I have just come out of a long and hard conference with the Korean preachers here in Nikolai. I have just appointed two to Habarovsk, following the instructions of Dr. Cram, Superintendent of the Mission. This means that Southern Methodism is going right on toward the Arctic Circle, following the work of the Centenary. This is right in the heart of Bolshievik Russia, and the missionary may not go in there. But the Korean preachers believe that they can brave all the dangers and get in there behind the wall of Bolshivism and through the line of robbers who infest the country, and spread the Gospel there. So, feeling that they are better men than I am, I have started them on their way.

"The rural districts of Manchuria and Siberia are now literally hotbeds of roving bands of robbers. Wherever you go, you constantly hear one word, 'Hong Wee Juk,' which means 'red robber.' The Japanese and Chinese police and military are after them, but they hide away in the mountains and are hard to catch. Our Koreans here are following in the steps of the Apostle in the dangers that they are sharing here for the Gospel."

What Of This For

A Christmas Present?

A sparkling new volume by John Paul on God and Christ and Inspiration and Atonement. A constructive answer, in classical plainness, to new theology and evolutionary criticism, entitled,

"What Is New Theology?"

Scores of expositors recommend it. The Indian Witness of Lucknow says: "Such a reply to the so-called new theology is much needed at this time, when all authority is questioned, even that of revealed religion."

PROCEEDINGS OF MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

The one hundred and eighth session of the Mississippi Annual Conference convened in the Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., at nine o'clock a.m., Wednesday, November 30, Bishop W. F. McMurry presiding. Hymn No. 36 was sung, the Bishop led the Conference in prayer and read a Scripture lesson from Matthew 26, after which, according to a Conference rule, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, the Bishop being assisted in the administration by J. T. Leggett, W. H. Huntley, C. C. Evans, and L. E. Alford.

The roll was called by A. F. Watkins, secretary of the last Conference, and most of the preachers and many of the lay delegates answered to their names.

A. F. Watkins was elected secretary; G. S. Harmon and Claude P. Jones were elected assistant secretaries; G. P. McKeown, J. D. Ellis, and W. A. Hays were elected statistical secretaries.

The bar of the Conference was fixed to include the lower floor of the main auditorium, and the hours of meeting and adjourning were fixed at nine a.m. and 12:30 p.m.

The following committees, nominated by the presiding elders, were elected:

State of the Church—J. L. Decell, C. M. Crossley, W. A. Davenport, A. S. Oliver, J. O. Ware, M. B. Sharbrough, J. G. Galloway.

Conference Relations—J. T. Leggett, H. L. Norton, L. E. Alford, J. T. Abney, T. H. King, J. F. McLelland, C. A. Schultz.

Sabbath Observance—O. S. Lewis, C. H. Strait, W. E. Barnes, Bura Hilbun, J. W. Ramsey, W. B. Alsworth, Dr. Henry Flowers.

The following were presented to the Conference: Dr. H. C. Morrison, of the Kentucky Conference; Dr. S. H. C. Burgin, Secretary of the Board of Church Extension; Dr. J. H. Reynolds, Director-General of the Christian Education Movement; Rev. C. T. Talley, of the Texas Conference; Rev. K. W. Dodson, of the Louisiana Conference; Revs. E. H. Cunningham, W. V. Shearer and R. P. Neblett, of the North Mississippi Conference; Rev. H. T. Carley, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate; Rev. J. L. Decell, transferred from the Pacific Conference; Rev. G. W. Riley, pastor of the Griffith Memorial Baptist Church, Jackson; Rev. J. R. Carter, Superintendent of the Baptist Orphanage; President Joe Cook, of the State Normal College, Hattiesburg.

Announcement was made that Dr. H. C. Morrison would preach at noon each day at Millsaps College Chapel, and at 7:30 p.m. at the Capitol Street Church.

A resolution was adopted requesting Dr. H. Walter Featherston, who completes with this session of the Conference fifty years as an itinerant preacher, to preach an appropriate sermon at the close of the Memorial Session on Sunday afternoon.

M. L. Burton called attention to the fact that seventy-nine years ago Jackson entertained the Mississippi Conference for the first time, and requested the privileges of the floor for Prof. J. N.

Broome, Assistant Superintendent of Education of the State of Mississippi, that he might deliver an appropriate address. Prof. Broome delivered a felicitous address, and presented to Bishop McMurry, on behalf of the pastor, the officials, and the members of the Sharon charge, a gavel made of wood taken from the buildings of the old Sharon Female College, the head of the gavel being made of wood from the girls' dormitory, and the handle of wood from the boys' dormitory, the gavel being furnished by Miss Hattie Byers. The Bishop made an appropriate response.

Various communications were referred without reading to appropriate Boards and Committees.

The report of the Seashore Divinity School was read and adopted.

Leave of absence was granted, if needed, to L. L. Roberts and C. F. Emery.

On motion of the presiding elders, the following substitutions were made on Boards and Committees: Examining Committee, Admission on Trial—W. B. Jones in place of C. M. Chapman; Board of Education—A. F. Watkins in place of C. W. Crisler, and T. L. Enochs in place of P. H. Enochs.

Question 17, "Are all the preachers blameless in life and official administration?" was called. The names of the presiding elders were called, they made written reports, and their characters were passed. We summarize their reports as follows:

Brookhaven District, H. M. Ellis, P. E.—About $120,000 was subscribed to the Christian Education Movement. Revivals have been held in every church and at many schoolhouse appointments, with 462 accessions on profession of faith and 416 by certificate. Eight Sunday schools, five Woman's Missionary Societies, and eleven Epworth Leagues have been organized. Many family altars have been established, and quite a number of people have pledged themselves to tithe their incomes. The new church at Crystal Springs is about complete. The church at Tylertown is installing a heating plant. At Osyka, Mrs. Goodwell presented a comfortable house, with ample grounds, for a parsonage, and the good women of the town have furnished it. Two new churches have been organized, and two churches have been dedicated during the year. Three young men have been licensed to preach. There are 69 churches in the district, and every charge except one has a comfortable parsonage.

Hattiesburg District, W. W. Graves, P. E.—Eighty-one revival meetings were held during the year, with more than 800 members added to the church. The sum of $157,000 was pledged to the Christian Education Movement. Fifteen church buildings have been repaired, two are under construction, and two others are being moved to more desirable locations. The churches at Lucedale and at Collins have added Sunday school rooms. A lot adjoining the Main Street Church at Hattiesburg has been secured, upon which an annex will be erected. There are 23 parsonages in the district, one new one having been built during the year, and 17 having been repaired and improved. The district parsonage has received needed repairs.

Jackson District, M. L. Burton, P. E.—Meetings have been held in all the churches, with 616 accessions by vows and baptism and 514 by certificate, giving a net gain of 836. There are 216 family altars on record in the district. Eighty-nine children have been baptized. Five young men have been licensed to preach, and all of them are attending Millsaps College. Four have been recommended for admission on trial, though one has withdrawn his application for the present. There are 78 churches and 73 Sunday schools, three of the schools being held in schoolhouses, leaving eight organized churches without Sunday schools. There is a Woman's Missionary Society in every charge except one, the number of adult auxiliaries being 37, and of Juniors and Young People, 17. There are some flourishing Epworth Leagues. All but three of the charges have parsonages. During the year three churches have been completed, one renovated, and four built. Six church enterprises are under way. The Lord's Day campaign was put on in the district. Gateway Memorial and Capitol Street exceeded their quota. The full amount apportioned to the district for the Memorial Home was raised.

Meridian District, P. P. Canale, P. E.—Seventy-eight protracted meetings have been held during the year, resulting in 966 accessions to the church, 661 of these on profession of faith. Four young men have been licensed to preach, and three recommended for admission on trial. Two young women have gone to the foreign field, and two others are preparing for missionary service. Three new churches, two new Sunday schools, and two new Epworth Leagues have been organized. Two parsonages have been built, four repaired, and two moved to better locations. Two church buildings have been acquired by purchase, three have been built, and fifteen have been repaired. The new building at East End, Meridian, will be completed next spring.

Newton District, J. A. Moore, P. E.—There have been eighty-seven revival meetings, with 800 additions to the church, about 600 of them on profession of faith. Two young men have been licensed to preach, and both of them are in college. Seventeen Epworth Leagues, fifteen Sunday schools, and five Woman's Missionary Societies have been organized. Ten parsonages have undergone repairs and improvements. Improvements have been made on all the churches in Laurel. The church at Forest has been painted, and Sunday school rooms have been added to the church at Morton. Improvements have been made on the church at Carthage, and the church at Rose Hill destroyed by a tornado last year has been rebuilt. At Bay Springs both church and parsonage have been improved. Some indebtedness on church property has been liquidated. A new church movement is under way at Hickory, and plans for remodeling the church at Newton are being made. More than $10,000 was pledged to the Christian Education Movement.

Seashore District, W. M. Sullivan, P. E.—Two new churches have been built during the year and one was received by donation. A total of $7000 has been raised for church buildings and repairs. The building of the Back Bay church was a remarkable achievement. A new parsonage has been built at Logtown, and 11 parsonages have been repaired. The district parsonage has been repaired and furnished at a cost of $100. One church was lost by storm, and one by fire. There is great need of improved church facilities at Gulfport, Lumberton, Columbia, Picaville, Sandler, Coalville, and Passapatan. There have been sixty revival meetings, with 750 additions on profession of faith and 125 by certificate. Approximately $50,000 was pledged to the Christian Education Movement. There are twenty Woman's Missionary Societies, which have raised $1025. Three or four more churches are needed on the beach front. There has been an increase of three Epworth Leagues during the year. Six men have been licensed to preach, and one has been recommended for admission on trial.

Vicksburg District, J. R. Jones, P. E.—Fifty-six revival meetings have been held, with an addition of 500 members. One young man is in Emory University preparing for the ministry, and two have been recommended for admission on trial. One church has been built and dedicated during the year, the money having been raised last year. Plans are being formed for the erection of two new parsonages. Churches and parsonages have been repaired and beautified at a total cost of $2700. About $60,000 was pledged to the Christian Education Movement. Payment of Centenary pledges has been encouraged.

R. P. Wilson and J. A. Gallerville, representing the Publishing House at Nashville, were presented to the Conference, and Dr. Wilson addressed the

A JOURNEY TO THE ORIENT—FROM KARUIZAWA TO SEOUL.

By Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker.

IV.

I had fully expected to make the journey from Karuizawa in the company of Bishop Lambuth. In the light of subsequent events the loss of that privilege is even to be greater than it seemed at the time. On Friday afternoon of the week of the Mission meeting the Bishop had gone to Yokohama, accompanied by Mr. Towson, seeking relief, but as the event proved, he was like Elijah crossing Jordan toward the place from which he should be taken up. It is good to think that he was accompanied by his life-time friend and co-worker in the early days of the Japan Mission, who afforded him material and spiritual help. But our company was not sad; for we were hoping for his early restoration, and there is a resilient character in human emotion that lifts depression from our spirits even when we wonder that it is so. A number of the missionaries had gone to their stations in the southern part of the Island via Tokyo; I preferred the route through the western part of the Island mostly along the Japan Sea, and the choice proved to be a wise one. Between the wonderful wooded mountains, through gaps and passes, over grades that gave proof everywhere of the skill of the Japanese engineers the road runs until it suddenly comes upon the shore of the Japan Sea and thence as we traveled throughout the half day remaining we were seldom out of sight of the water. The shoreline is varied, characterized by curves and high promontories that jut out into the water and form the protecting arms of bays; and at such places the roadway usually runs through tunnels that open out upon new scenes of mountain and riparian beauty and novelty. As the sun was setting far over the ocean flamed the crimson and gold and in the light clouds above delicate pink and neutral tints matched the soft hues of approaching dusk on the mountain shores.

The density of the population and the intensiveness of the cultivation that prevail in Japan are nowhere better seen than on this western side of the Island of Hondo. The shore is lined with the lowly thatched houses of fishermen and farmers. Down to the water's edge the villages extend, and drawn up on the shore are the sampans and smacks that enable them to ply their trade. The meat of Japan is fish. It is hard to see what this dense population would do without the wealth of the sea. Dried fish are everywhere for sale in great quantities and every menu suggests a large consumption of the food of the sea. The wealth of the sea for food we have hardly suspected. Not only the fish and crustacean and mollusks, but sea weeds offer sources of food supply of which the Japanese avail themselves. If any of us should have become alarmed over the possibility of the demands of the appetites of the race exceeding the supplies of the earth, let him reflect with confidence upon the great resources of the sea, of the use of which our codfish chowder, breakfast mackerel and varied seaside resort delicacies offer only a suggestion.

The valleys of western Japan widen out to the sea and through them flow rivers, the beds of which in August have little water, but great quantities of stones. The water is in part diverted higher up for flooding rice fields and the stones that winter and spring torrents wash down are bare, for the hills and mountains are so well wooded that one sees no silt, no loss by erosion, in the river beds. It is a frequent and beautiful sight up the narrowing valley to see the terraced rice fields rising like steps as far as the eye can distinguish their green, broken as by risers by the dykes that retain the water at the high levels to which they reach and all the way down to the sea. So closely is the land cultivated that one may see a little field about six feet wide planted in rice with a dike and terrace as high to make flooding possible. Hardly a foot of available land is unused, and yet the aspects of nature are not deprived of charm, for the mountains still stand in informal beauty, sometimes sublime, covered with their wealth of forest and rising in receding outline as their elevations increase with the distant ranges. Nevertheless it is fortunate that Japan, with its rapidly increasing population, has entered upon a course of industrial development; else it were impossible to sustain the human life that teems in contrast with the reluctant yield of sustenance by the narrow fields. Industrialism has its problems, and the morals of the Empire are feeling the effects of the transition. Laws there are for the protection of wage earners, but many of them are to go into effect only gradually, while congestion in the factory regions and physical and moral deterioration due to excessive hours and unsanitary conditions go on. In Europe and America we have had the same conditions and the same problems; the former are not yet fully corrected, the latter not yet solved.

On the journey from Karuizawa I had my first experience in a Japanese sleeping car. It is smaller than the American, as is everything else in the way of rolling stock, but excellent in appointments and the service charming. But on going to bed all is changed. "The bed is shorter than that a man of 6 feet can stretch himself on," and the cover is hotter than that a man can bear, nor is there any way to divide the heavy double blankets that are enclosed in a bag of sheeting; one must take it all and swelter or throw it all aside and chill. Adding to this preparation for sweating the "boy," a functionary who takes the place of the genial Negro porter in the service of Pullman & Company, had tightly closed every window and hung a mosquito netting behind the draperies. I wondered why several members of our party had resisted all persuasion to take a sleeper and persisted in occupying the lengthwise running seats of the second-class coach until I had this experience of the sleeper, and I then learned that there are two sides to this question also.

Early morning found us at Kobe and within five minutes walk of Palmore Institute, where entertainment in the hospitable home of Mr. J. S. Oxford, the Principal, awaited us. Here also we caught up with some of the recruits for Korea, Misses Bray, Furry, Mauk, Hanson and Coker, with whom I was to travel the rest of the way to Seoul, the place of meeting of the Mission and of the Annual Conference of Korea. I saw very little of Kobe, as the time was short; but at night climbed the mountains in the rear of the city and from that elevation saw a most marvellous and beautiful sight. Spreading out before one through the intervening blackness of the night was the city with its six hundred thousand population and its wide expansion illuminated as if for a gala occasion, and looking toward the northeast one could see the lights of (Osaka) a city of two millions of inhabitants. Nothing could be more exhilarating and only the starry heavens more inspiring. Coming down from the mountain I was thinking in connection with this sign of human life, with its unknown sorrows and disappointments and joys that wane and beauties that fade and love that grow cold, of another scene that I had witnessed just before. It was the long line of youths awaiting their turn to enroll as students of Palmore, where the unformed and hardly articulated aspirations and needs of their nature may be developed and directed to an ampler fulfillment. Young men interested in Japan. He loved one young man who aspired, but was unwilling to pay the price; he told the world's most beautiful story about two young men, and followed the younger of them through the bitterness of a broken life back to restoration and his father's house. St. John in his old age writes: "I write unto you young men, because ye are strong . . . I write unto you young men, because your sins are forgiven you." Jesus is interested in the Japanese youths who are seeking to realize the promise of their youth through the processes of Christian culture, and the young Dr. Lambuth, now the sainted Bishop, who founded Palmore, and Doctor W. B. Palmore, who made the initial gift for its building, were moving in the line of Jesus's plan. But how of the church at large? Five hundred of these youths can be received at Palmore; five hundred who desire to avail themselves of its opportunities must be denied because there is no room. But the church at home does not realize these things, else the great Centenary offerings would become but the normal expression of a growing spirit of consecration to the work of Christ.

From Kobe to Shimonoseki, almost at the southwestern end of the Island of Hondo, is a day's ride, but the trains are reasonably fast and the equipment is even more luxurious than that of the day coaches of an American railway. Miss Mabel Whitehead, the daughter of an honored member of the North Alabama Conference, the Rev. H. Whitehead, formerly Assistant Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, joined us in order to see our five young ladies safely along the way, and our company was enriched by Dr. Wynn and Mr. Urdman of the Northern Presbyterian Mission in Korea and Dr. Earnest D. Burton, of Chicago University, now traveling in the East as the Superintendent of the Rockefeller Educational fund. Dr. Burton's party numbers about a dozen, including Mrs. Burton. They were to be at the dedication of the Union Hospital and Medical College at Peking, another of those vast and inspired philanthropies of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, perhaps the greatest captain of industry of modern times and one of the greatest Christians. As the train stopped at Hiroshima during the afternoon, Miss N. B. and Rachel Gaines met us at the station with cordial greetings and a basket of luscious fruits. At half past eight the train stopped in the station at Shimonoseki and the multitude of passengers began to file into the gangways of the great steamer Nishio Maru, by which we were to cross the strait of Shimonoseki to Fusan, Korea. Trunks (of the young ladies) checked and hand baggage safely bestowed on board, thanks to the ever efficient and trustworthy red cap, we make haste to secure our first class reservations of cabin accommodations. Yes, it is all right; the purser is somewhat deficient in English, but unfailingly polite; he has my telegram for six berths for Dr. Parker and party of five: here they are three in this cabin and three in that. But I remonstrate, five of the passengers are ladies. He cannot see the point, hence I resort to my friend Mr. Urdman, who speaks Japanese, and he explains that it is impossible for us to occupy cabins in that promiscuous fashion. However, there is no help for it, there are no other berths available; so Mr. Urdman, my good angel, finds for me an excellent second class cabin, in which I make out very well, but with thanks that I do not have to sprawl on the matted floor on a "tomati" as the Japanese in absolute promiscuity seem to prefer doing. The passage of the strait is as provocative of seasickness as is that of St. George's Channel, but our crossing was suspicious as the water was calm. From my second class cabin bunk I arose early and went on deck hoping to look upon the stretch of water upon which Admiral Togo met and demolished the Russian Baltic fleet. It was this great victory that assured to Japan her place among the first class powers and decided the war with Russia at a time when the finances of the Empire were strained almost to the point of breaking, and the war must soon have stopped but for this finishing stroke. We were just passing the Island of Tsuchima where the battle took place. It was the Trafalgar of modern times. There were two ways by which the Russian fleet might have reached Vladivostok: one going north of Yezo, the other by Korea Strait. If Togo had awaited the enemy on the former route they would have escaped him; if the Russians had chosen the southern route, with Togo near the other, they would have made their destination. The great admiral had to rely upon his intuitions of the probabilities of the course. It is said that twelve hours before he received the first wireless information that the Russian fleet was coming by the southern route he had received peremptory orders to await them by the northern. He called the fleet commanders to the flagship, informed them of the situation and declared his purpose of abiding by his own decisions, at the same time giving them the opportunity of resigning, of which none availed himself. The victory left no room for future discussion of the Admiral's course.

As the steamer neared the dock at Fusan we recognized Dr. Cram, of Songdo, one of the chief leaders in the Centenary Movement, who had made a day's journey to meet us. He happened to be at home on furlough at the time when such a man of organizing genius was needed, and was detained until the year, following the great offering. He has returned to Korea and resumed his work in the Mission. Still an enthusiastic Centenarian (note the spelling with a capital initial), with the assistance of Mr. Ryang he has led the Korea Conference in a wonderful Centenary advance, as the result of which the Korea church will doubtless become self-supporting by 1922. It was good to see Cram again after what seemed a longer time than it really was. He made things easy for us in getting past all the official detentions and securing our seats on the elegant South Manchuria Railroad train for Seoul.

Evidence of some magnificent engineering we had seen in Japan was never lacking from the view as we journeyed. Rivers are restrained by stone revetments within their beds; grades, bridges and tunnels are made to afford the greatest economy and safety for the fine, broad-gauge, rock-ballast track. The bare mountains of Chosen, from which torrents laden with soil have been rushing into the rivers for centuries, are being afforested, and within a few years will not only enhance the beauty of landscapes already alternating in loveliness and sublimity, but will make their contribution to the well-being of a country in which deep poverty used to prevail.

I must hasten to bring this letter to a close, not for lack of material that at least interests me, but because space seems to be so easily used up. At the station in Nandalmon, as the new city outside the gate is called, the entire missionary force of the Seoul Station was awaiting us. Miss Myers was there to take care of the young lady recruits, also Misses Nichols, Jackson, Edwards and Hardie, and others. Dr. Hardie, Prof. Fisher, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor and a number of Korean brethren also greeted us. I was soon being rapidly conveyed to the compound at Dr. Hardie's, where home comfort awaited the traveler. The streets through which we first passed were broad and well macadamized and the buildings, so far as could be seen in the night, fine and modern; but all this changed to streets so narrow that it would have seemed impossible for the "Ford" to traverse them. But Prof. Fisher is a skillful chauffeur, and by dint of keeping the horn honking all the time was able to avoid running over any of the numerous Koreans, men, women and children, who swarmed in the crooked ways and crowded one another in order to escape the machine.

MEMORIAL TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH, MAY, 1922, FROM THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, NOVEMBER 20, 1921.

(Presented by T. H. Lipscomb, just before reading of appointments Sunday night, and unanimously adopted.)

Whereas questions of speculative Biblical Criticism, affecting the inspiration, authority, and historical veracity of the Holy Scriptures as a Divine Revelation, are now agitating the church; and

Whereas speculative evolutionary theories as to the origin and history of man, contradictory to the Biblical record and destructive of the whole Christian Plan of Redemption are now widely prevalent; and

Whereas a new Rationalism which, in the name of the "Christian consciousness" and the Spirit's illumination of the student to-day, rejects the "external authority" of the Scriptures and exalts the individual opinion against the obvious and generally understood teachings of God's Word, is now becoming dominant in the educational institutions of America, both theological and otherwise; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the North Mississippi Conference, in annual session assembled at Amory, Miss., on this, the 20th day of November, A. D., 1921, that we memorialize the approaching General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to appoint a Commission of ten ministers and laymen of recognized evangelical orthodoxy, one of whom shall be a bishop, six of whom shall be ordained elders, and three of whom shall be laymen, none of whom shall be in official connection with any of our educational institutions, whose duty it shall be to study carefully the character of the teaching being offered in our universities and colleges, both at home and in mission fields; particularly, (1) as to the recognition of the authority of the Holy Scriptures as a divine revelation and the doctrines related thereto and derived therefrom as the sure foundations of Christian faith and experience, i. e., is rationalism and individualism, however disguised, supplanting anywhere Revelation and faith? (2) as to the attitude assumed in scientific departments toward speculative evolutionary theories as to man's origin and history as it affects the Biblical record of the creation and fall of man and the Christian redemptive system; (3) as to the theological presuppositions and bias of the textbooks or reference books in use, as in harmony with or undermining the foundations of orthodox evangelical faith.

The further duty of said Commission, should teachers either ministers or laymen, be found in our church schools holding or advocating theories out of harmony with Methodist faith as expressed in our Articles of Religion, creeds, and standards of doctrine, shall be to bring to the attention of the Boards of Trustees of such institutions the facts brought to light by their investigations.

Resolved, second, that the educational institutions of our church and all ministers, laymen, and students, as well as college authorities, be requested to extend the utmost freedom and all proper assistance to said Commission, that a fair and impartial examination may be made, to the protection of the church from the insidious approaches of heresy, and in discharge of the duties hereby imposed upon the Commission by the church.

Resolved, third, that said Commission be instructed to make public report of its findings through the church press as in its judgment conditions may justify or demand and that the expenses of said Commission be provided for by the General Board of Education.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

Not long ago I met a young man who had the nerve to tell me that he reads more than I do. I am puzzled to know how the youngster does it.

When I get up in the morning I read until breakfast; after breakfast I read or write until dinner; after dinner, and a nap to recharge the cerebral cells, I read until supper; after supper I read until I go to bed. So, unless this young man reads while he is asleep, I do not understand how he can read more than I do. At the time he said that to me I had a copy of Tennyson's poems in one coat pocket, Emerson's Representative Men in another, Bledsoe's Theodicy in my grip, and a trunk full of books in the baggage-room. You will say Bledsoe's Theodicy gives you away—a lover of old books, Rip Van Winkle literature! I plead guilty to the charge of being a lover of old books, but deny the insinuation that old books are obsolete books; especially Bledsoe's Theodicy, unless, as may be true, theology itself is obsolete. For profound thought, for close, logical reasoning, for clear theological truth, and for splendid rhetoric, I have read few books that equal Bledsoe's Theodicy. As a mere drill in logic, it would pay any man who wishes to think correctly to read that book, however much he might dissent from the views it advocates. Perhaps it is because I have read Bledsoe's Theodicy ten times, and the sixth chapter twice as often, that I find the pages of some brilliant present-day writers so superficial and insipid. Wells a spouter of nonsense, and Fosdick a tinkling cymbal. If I had anything to do with such matters, I would put Bledsoe's Theodicy in the course of study for young preachers in the fourth year.

But I read new matter also. When this young man boasted about his reading I had just read in the latest Scribner, Chauncey Depew's "Autobiography" and Washington's business record; and in the latest Atlantic Monthly the opinions of public men on the question of limitation of armaments; and the last Methodist Review, a superb number, by the way; and Tennyson's story of Wilson; and a lot besides. But if this young man reads in his sleep, he beats me. I am glad he reads.

But the book of all books for interesting reading is the Bible. I mean simply reading good literature. The "Short Story" is the favorite form of modern literature, and the Bible excels all other books in this department. Who ever wears with the romance of Jacob and his meeting with Rachel at the well; or the wonderful tale of Joseph and his rise from the slave-block to the second place under Pharaoh over all Egypt; or the even more marvelous story of Moses, his rescue from the murderous decree, his adoption into the royal family, his education, his deliberate choice of affliction with the people of God, rather than the pleasures of sin for a season, his flight to Midian, his mission to Pharaoh, his leadership of Israel out of Egypt, and all the marvels of the wilderness—these and a hundred other equally wonderful narratives always delight a lover of reading? This oldest of all books is also the freshest in its perennial truth, and we see the human nature of today expressed in the behavior of the people of long ago. Women do not set their caps for men now as Ruth did for the rich widower of Bethlehem, but widowers tumble to the same art of Cupid, and as Naomi told the blushing young Moabites are not "in rest" until they have finished the thing!

I wonder if the young man reads the Bible as I do? My daily Bible reading is a few chapters in the Old Testament, ten of the Psalms, and one of Paul's "Epistles," sometimes varying this with the Gospels. Often, as I read the Psalms, I find something new in them each time. I love poetry, and believe this literary taste helps to keep life sweet and full of inspirational zest. So I usually read the Iliad and Odyssey, Dante's Divine Comedy, Paradise Lost, and Tennyson's Poems once a year. But as far as I am competent to judge real poetry, the Psalms merit the highest place. For bold metaphor and splendid imagination, where can you match the 114th Psalm! "The sea saw it and fled; Jordan was driven back. The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs!" The Psalms teem with poetic conceptions far surpassing any uninspired composition.

Question 11, "What preachers have died during the year?" was called, and the report of the Committee on Memoirs announced the name of Herbert B. Watkins.

By special resolution of the Conference a memoir of Bishop Walter R. Lambuth was read. The memoir was written by Bishop James Atkins and read by W. J. Ferguson.

The memoir of Herbert B. Watkins was written by Dr. D. C. Hull and read by George H. Thompson. Pending the adoption of the report, affectionate tribute was paid to the memory of the departed brethren by Robert Selby, J. C. Chambers, M. M. Black, P. D. Hardin and J. Loyd Decell.

A beautiful and touching tribute to the memory of Herbert Watkins from the Board of Stewards of Central Church, Meridian, took expression in a large floral offering of magnificent white chrysanthemums standing within the chancel of the church.

The hour, designated by resolution of the Conference for the preaching of a semi-centennial sermon by H. W. Featherstun, having arrived, on motion, the Conference adjourned, and Dr. Featherstun preached an appropriate sermon.

Attention was called to the fact that a monument to the memory of Dr. J. W. Lambuth, father of Bishop Lambuth, had been erected on the grounds of old Pearl River church, and, on motion, a committee, consisting of H. G. Hawkins and Columbus Ray, was appointed to take up the matter of having the monument removed to the campus of Millsaps College.

A resolution in opposition to the sale by the Publishing House of books of questionable orthodoxy was, after considerable discussion, adopted.

The report of the Committee on Memorials to the General Conference was read. The Committee reported "concurrence" in memorials as follows, and the report was adopted: To substitute the word "aid" for the word "supervise" in the directions concerning the relation of the Board of Missions to revival work; to cease negotiations looking toward the unification of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Episcopal Church; to give the General Board of Finance right of way during the next quadrennium for a campaign to raise a Superannuate Endowment Fund; to modify the powers of the Board of Missions so as not to interfere with the functions of the episcopacy on the mission fields; to appoint a commission to inquire into the teachings of our colleges, universities, etc. The Committee reported "non-concurrence" in the memorial to increase the membership of the Board of Missions, etc., and the report was adopted. The report was then adopted as a whole.

Question 17, "Are all the preachers blameless in life and official administration?" was resumed. The names of all those who had not previously been passed in examination of character were called, and their characters were passed.

The report of the Statistical Secretary was read. The report showed that there has been a net gain in membership during the year of almost 2000.

Dr. H. R. Hays was presented to the Conference, and he spoke briefly concerning the efforts of the medical authorities to bring about a better state of social morality, and asked the co-operation of the Conference in the work.

A supplementary report of the Board of Missions, recommending that the sum of $600 be raised by the presiding elders for co-operating with the North Mississippi Conference in furnishing religious oversight for the Methodist students of the A. & M. College, was laid on the table; and the earnest request of the Conference to the Board of Missions that it appropriate the sum out of any available funds remained as the action of the Conference.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

low. The heavy and ponderous are in the thought, not in the expression which the idiomatic difference between the original and western makes it difficult sometimes for the superficial reader to perceive and appreciate.

And this is the book which we exclude from our public schools while at the same time we teach in our public schools a "science" of biology that excludes God from the world. In Memphis, Tenn., the Catholics have built a High School for their own children where they can be taught the truth and escape the blight of modern scientific instruction. All honor to the Catholics! Would to God we Protestants had the same loyalty to our faith. But by allowing our young people to go to these High Schools where Evolution is taught as "science" we are sowing the dragon's teeth. As a nation we will reap what we sow. In short, we are teaching in our public High Schools precisely the science that Herbert Spencer, for it is a perfectly logical conclusion from High School "science" of Evolution, that "war is a biological law" and that "nature makes right." I wonder if the young man will read my book? Whether he does or not, I want a thousand folks who read my Pelican Letters to send me at once $1.25 each and get a copy. The title of this book is The Modern Theory of the Bible. They need the book and I need the money. The $1.25 is important, of course, but I want to help maintain the "Faith once delivered to the saints" and to smash the "new theology" fallacies about the Bible. The book is now ready and so am I to receive the check for it. So!

I passed in on the Louisiana Conference, but having nothing to do there, hurried on to the Pines, and the street little home in Mansfield. I was permitted, however, during my brief stay in Alexandria to enjoy a meal at the board of dear old Halsey Warren, and his family all packed up for their long move to California. Halsey is one of, perhaps, a half dozen of the old Emory and Henry boys now left with whom I attended college in the long ago. Bishop Lambuth was the last to transfer to the Church here, by far the most distinguished of the group. Adams is still here and old Ben Heron, and Ex-Governor Scharf, and a few more, but "our company before is gone." But the more I read the Bible the brighter the sky grows at set of sun. For,

It tells me of a land where our friends have gone.
Who have vanished from our sight
Where they walk on the banks of the river of life
All clothed in their garments of white!

No night ever darkens that beautiful land.
And they need not the light of the sun.
For the Lord is the light of the home on high.
We shall enter when our work is done!

LOCAL PREACHERS, LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT.

By Rev. C. A. Battle, P. E.

At the session of the Lake Charles District Conference, held at Rayne in April, a resolution was adopted requesting the presiding elder to write for the Advocate a paper in which sketches of the life and activities of each of the local preachers of the district appeared. This article purports to be what the district conference requested of the presiding elder. It is late in appearing on account of the necessary wait in obtaining facts from the local preachers. Something about the lives of twelve good men appears below.

R. T. Wright.

Brother Wright is a member of the Holy Grove Church near Anacoco, La., of the Hornbeck and Pearson charge. He was born June 14, 1857, and was baptized in early infancy. He has been a member of the M. E. Church, South, fifty-two years. He was a steward at eighteen years of age, a Sunday school superintendent at twenty-one, was licensed to exhort at thirty-four, and was licensed to preach at thirty-five. Rev. Robt. J. Harp was Brother Wright's presiding elder in 1903, and that year Brother Wright served the Anacoco charge, which was composed of Union, Pine Island and Beach Grove. During that year Brother Wright traveled over twelve hundred miles in connection with his appointments; and he was in several meetings in other places besides. In December 15, 1911, Brother Wright was ordained local preacher by Bishop A. P. Fitzgerald at New Iberia, La. This year was his pastor at Anacoco all the year. He has passed his thirty-ninth birthday, is constantly selling the story of Jesus and His love, and he awaits with gladness the message from the High: "Well done."

John Franklin.

Brother Franklin is a member of the Holy Grove Church, Anacoco, La. He was born November 21, 1845, and joined the church in 1873. He was licensed to preach in 1876 when Rev. E. F. Alexander was his presiding elder. Bishop A. V. Wilson ordained Brother Franklin a deacon in 1884 at Mansfield, La., and Brother Franklin has served in various churches about half of his ministerial life. He has been faithful and his influence for good has never waned. Brother Franklin suffered on March 15, 1921, the loss by death of his good wife who for a half century had walked with him through love and sorrow. She had encouraged him in his ministerial life, and had helped him in all other matters where good judgment and determination were needed. He awaits the time when he will join her wherever that Land of Light beyond.

C. W. McLean.

Brother McLean has recently moved to Jackson, La., from Longville. In the latter place he has been a Sunday school worker since 1910 until a few months ago. He was licensed to preach in 1875 and in 1878 was junior preacher in the same church, Wauville District, Mississippi Conference. For about fifteen years Brother McLean had regular appointments in charge of various events. He states that Brother E. T. Reames, of the Louisiana Conference, began his ministry under his supervision. Brother McLean has two sons in the ministry: E. J. McLean, a member of the Louisiana Conference, and C. B. McLean, a local preacher supporting the Anacoco Church in Baton Rouge this year. Brother McLean was ordained deacon by Bishop J. C. Reeder about 1885, and Brother McLean has been true to the Methodist Church and to the Master in all his ministerial labors.

G. E. Roberts.

Brother Roberts began religious work at Aurora, Ill., as city missionary. From there he went to the Upper Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but after two years again took up the missionary work at Aurora. His health was failing and he came to Brookhaven, Miss. He joined the Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and served three years. His health failed again but he regained it sufficiently to be appointed by Bishop Morrison to Slidell, La. From thence he went as pastor to Hornbeck, and thence as pastor to Merryville. But finally Brother Roberts permanently located on account of impaired health. He now lives at Leesville, La., and is a local elder. God is with him and he feels His sustaining influence day by day.

R. P. Howell.

Brother Robert Patton Howell was born at Bonham, Texas, June 25, 1862. He came to Lafayette, La., in May, 1881, and was converted in a meeting held by Brother Jackson, the pastor. Brother M. C. Manley and Brother H. C. White in 1885. Brother Howell was licensed to preach at Carrollton Avenue, New Orleans, in 1886, joined the Conference at Houston in 1887, was ordained deacon by Bishop Hendrix in 1889 and elder by Bishop Duncan in 1891. He has served several of the important points in the Conference, and located at his own request in 1903. Brother Howell is doing effective work for the church at present as lay leader for the Lake Charles District, as secretary of the Board of Stewards of the First Church, Lake Charles, and as minister for the Methodists of Longville, giving them two Sundays a month on the charge assigned at the last Conference to Brother P. M. Brown. Brother Howell is faithful and loyal to the Master's great cause.

E. S. Williams.

Brother Williams is from Missouri. He was married a Baptist and was converted when fifteen years of age. After studying two years for the Baptist ministry he became dissatisfied with the teachings of that church and turned toward Methodism. He was licensed to preach by the Methodist Church at an early age. He was received into the Missouri Conference and after serving eight years as pastor in charge located in account of poor health. Brother Williams was readmitted into the Conference four years after his location, but was forced on account of poor health again to leave after two years. He served as a supply for two years in the West, and at present is moving to Louisiana. He served as pastor at Elizabeth, La., for a time; and now he has charge of the Methodist constituency at Baton Rouge. Brother Williams is a valuable addition to the Methodist forces in this section.

A. T. Hoffpauir.

Brother Bert Hoffpauir is now living at Crowley and is supplying the Bremen church of the Lake Charles District. He was licensed to preach in 1904, admitted on trial in the Louisiana Conference in 1910, was ordained deacon and elder in the same year. Since he began his ministry Brother Hoffpauir has regularly served appointments from the hands of the bishop in charge until his location in 1920. His work is proving effective on the Bremen circuit.

I. C. Gray.

Brother Irl Gray is a young man who felt the call to preach in the spring of 1913 while attending Centenary College as a student. He was licensed by the Shreveport District Conference that same year. His first sermon was preached at Baker, La. Brother Gray later graduated from Meridian College, and while a student there he often preached at the Seventh Avenue Church. He has been teaching school at Hornbeck, La., and in his connection he has served the Holy Grove Church near Anacoco since December, 1920. Brother Gray recently was recommended for admission on trial in the Louisiana Conference by the Licensing Committee of the Lake Charles District. He is now a student at Southern Methodist University, Elmhurst School. Brother Gray has promise of being a great force in the church as a minister.

W. E. Roberts.

Brother Roberts is living at Merryville, La., and is teaching in the high school. He was licensed to preach by the Alexandria District Conference in 1906 and served as supply in a mission work while attending high school. In 1907 he entered Millsaps College and remained there one session. He married in 1908 and in the fall of this year he entered Centenary College where he remained four years. While at Centenary Brother Roberts served various churches as pastor also. After his schooling was over he gave all his attention to his ministerial work. In 1920 Brother Roberts located in his own accord. He is a faithful follower of the Master, feels his call to preach, and expects to come back into the Conference.

A. R. Hoffpauir.

Brother Hoffpauir was converted when fourteen years of age during a meeting at Fuson, La., conducted by Brother L. N. Hoffpauir. While attending Centenary College in 1902 he was called to the ministry and was licensed to preach. He was admitted on trial in the Louisiana Conference in 1904, ordained deacon in New Orleans by Bishop Morrison in January 1906, ordained elder at Leesville by Bishop Seth Ward in 1908. Brother Hoffpauir has served as pastor the following appointments: Mandeville, Glenmora, Ringgold, Bell City, Simmsport, Pollock and Elizabeth. He was located at his own request in 1911. In 1913 he supplied the Jennings church. Brother Hoffpauir lives at Eschervood and preaches when he has opportunity.

M. C. Holt.

Brother Holt lives at Jennings, La., and is a member of considerable proportions in that city and in the State. He is a graduate of the Divinity School of Yale University and for a number of years was a member of the Louisiana Conference, serving some of the important charges. He located in 1911. His membership is at Jennings, La. Jennings Brother Holt is superintendent of the fine Sunday school of the Congregational Church.

THANKSGIVING REMINISCENCES.

When Ma penned up the gobbler
And fed him ever' day,
And Sis baked pies and fruit cake
And put them all away;
And Pa put up some apples
"To meller," as he'd say—
Right then it set me thinking About Thanksgiving Day.

And, O, those hours of rapture,
To think the day was nigh,
When I'd help eat that turkey,
The apples, and the pie!
And, O, so many goodies,
It made me wonder why
Each day was not Thanksgiving,
As time dragged slowly by.

But now, somehow, Thanksgiving
Don't have that charm for me;
It seems, as I've grown older,
Those joys have slipped from me.
And so once more I'm longing
At home again to be Around my childhood hearthstone, Filled with Thanksgiving glee.

—Ethella Moore.

THE LITTLE SOLDIER.

There were once two little boys, and each wished—O, so very, very much—to be a soldier. It was Soldiers' Day, the sun was up, and from every house a red-white-and-blue flag was flying. Soon the soldiers would march by in their gay-colored uniforms, with the fifes playing pretty tunes and the drums beating time for the soldiers' feet.

The two little boys sat upon their doorsteps and talked together across the fence about it all, for they were both very much excited.

"I shall be as fine a soldier as any of them," said the first little boy, whose name was Bobby.

"I shall put on my soldier's cap with the gold cockade and my fringed epaulets and my new red drum," he went on. "As soon as I hear the parade I shall follow at the end, and every one will see me."

"O, there it comes!"

There was the sound of music at the end of the street.

"We must hurry, Tommy," said Bobby. "You put on your cap and your epaulets and your drum, too."

So the two little boys put on their soldier caps, their fringed epaulets and their little red drums, and they hurried off to join the parade.

Bobby could run the faster; so he soon outstripped Tommy, whose feet were short and fat and got in his way a good deal. Soon Bobby had reached the end of the parade; but Tommy, left behind, nearly tumbled over a silky-eared dog which lay crying in the road.

"Pretty little dog! What's the matter?" asked Tommy, stopping and lifting the silky-eared dog up in his arms.

Then he saw. The dog's poor little paw had been broken and quite crushed by some heavy cart wheel. Tommy sat down on the curbing and bound the hurt paw with his own handkerchief and stroked the silky ears and whispered comforting words in them. Presently he got up, still holding the dog in his arms, and he started home, for it was quite too late now for him to follow the parade. Even the drums sounded far away.

"I can't be a soldier to-day. I can't be a soldier at all," said Tommy to himself; and one big, salt tear splashed down to the sidewalk.

"Why not?"

Tommy stopped suddenly and looked up right into the eyes of a real soldier in a long blue cape. The soldier had dropped out of the parade and was going home.

"You are a soldier," the real soldier said. "Look!"

He opened his cape and showed Tommy a shining gold star that he wore upon his coat.

"That is my decoration," he said. "They gave it to me because once I carried a wounded friend just as you are now. It was harder than fighting, my lad."

"And do you really think I can be a soldier?" Tommy asked again.

"You are a soldier," answered the real soldier again, stroking the dog's soft, brown head.—The Mayflower.

"ON THE OTHER FOOT."

"But, Aunt Nell," said Elinor. "I shouldn't think I'd have to tell you why I seldom go to church any more; you have just been yourself. Now, frankly, did you ever hear any one more stupid than our pastor?"

Aunt Nell laughed. "Why, yes. The janitor at my apartment house and—"

"Oh, well, Aunt Nell, you know what I mean. Mr. Gray naturally had to have a few brains to study for the ministry; but he doesn't make himself interesting to me or to a lot of other young people in our congregation!"

Miss Porter regarded her niece with a considering look. "I wonder," she said, "whether you make yourselves interesting to him."

"Interesting to him?" Elinor repeated. "Why should we? It's his business to be interested in us. That's what we pay him for."

Miss Porter's look was now frankly quizzical. "Elinor, I should have supposed you were too proud to be satisfied with the dollars-and-cents kind of interest. Surely you know there is a kind that no money can pay for. However, I wasn't really looking at it from that point of view. I was just thinking about your end of the preaching service in your church. Put the shoe on the other foot for a minute."

"My end? What in the world do you mean by my end? I can't do anything but sit there and listen to Mr. Gray's perfectly commonplace utterances, can I?"

"You might make them less commonplace," replied Miss Porter coolly.

"I might! It sounds like a large order."

"It isn't. All you have to do is to make yourself an uncommonplace listener. Do you remember, my dear, when I was sent round to some of the schools to speak for the Junior Red Cross? Well, I went first to the Jay Street School. The children there were all interest and excitement! My, but I felt that I was a good speaker, and I certainly did my best. Then I went over to Rome Street where all the little foreigners live. They didn't understand very well. Some of them stared at me stolidly, and others fidgeted; and I felt myself growing more and more stupid till finally I realized that I was no speaker at all. It all depended on my listeners."

Elinor was silent, and Aunt Nell continued, "Interest seems to me to have a good many of the properties of electricity: the current can be easily grounded or short-circuited, but the more batteries there are to reinforce it the farther it will carry."

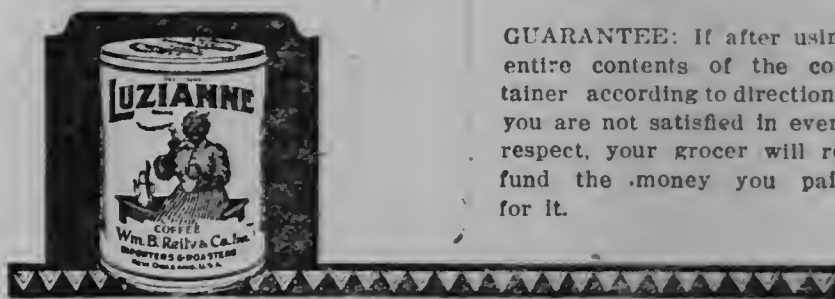

"Just one battery helps amazingly sometimes," said Mr. Porter, speaking suddenly from behind his paper. "I stopped after church to see Mr. Gray, and I happened to remark that he'd given us a particularly good sermon. 'Not I,' he said; 'it was the stranger that was sitting in your pew this morning. She was the most stimulating listener I ever had.'"

"Well, good for Aunt Nell, who practices what she preaches!" cried Elinor. "Next Sunday I cease to be a short-circuiter."—The Youth's Companion.

THE GREAT EYES.

Ours is the God of the ever-open eyes. O those eyes of the Lord, that "run to and fro through all the earth to behold the evil and the good!" Are we afraid of them? When Lafayette was a prisoner, during the Revolutionary War, he was distressed beyond measure by the fact that a guard was continually watching him through an aperture in the door of his cell. But those were the eyes of an enemy. Well may the Omniscience of God be terrible to such as are not on friendly terms with Him.

But to those who love Him His unceasing watchfulness must be a source of unspeakable joy. The bond-woman who fled from oppression in Abraham's tent and betook herself to the wilderness was bowed down in utter loneliness and desolation until the Angel of the Covenant spoke to her. Then filled with wonder and gratitude, she called the name of the place Beer-lahai-roi, that is, "Thou God seest me."—The Intelligencer.

Dr. Theodore Copeland writes that he has recently been in his greatest meeting of the year at Del Rio, Texas.

Mr. Thompson Snyder, author of the article, "Safety Signals," which appeared in the Advocate of December 1, requests us to call attention to two typographical errors. In paragraph three, the word "strategie" is misspelled "stragetie," and in paragraph five, "speculations" should be "speculation." We are glad to accommodate Brother Snyder by calling attention to these errors.

Mr. J. C. Ellis, Jr., son of Rev. J. C. Ellis, of the Mississippi Conference, and Miss Aniel Cole were married at the residence of the bride's parents, in Mobile, Ala., on Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Ellis is teaching at Hadley, Ala., in the Coley-Blackshear Vocational School. Mrs. Ellis is a highly gifted and accomplished young lady who has many friends in Mobile and vicinity. The Advocate extends hearty good wishes to the happy young couple. Rev. D. Y. Reglster, son-in-law of Brother and Sister Ellis, is vice president and business manager of the Coley-Blackshear School.

On Wednesday evening of last week, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Ahten, for many years active and influential members of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. Their beautiful home, "Oak Lawn," was the scene of a large gathering of members of the church and other friends, and there were many expressions of the esteem in which they are held by those who have known them and loved them through the years. The officials and members of the Carrollton Avenue Church presented them with a beautiful loving cup, suitably engraved, as a token of appreciation of their friendship and interest in the church. The editor of the Advocate regrets that attendance upon the Mississippi Conference made it impossible for him to be present on the happy occasion.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Educational Pay-Up Week for the Louisiana Conference is January 8th to the 15th. Let every pastor make the announcement from his pulpit in due time and govern himself accordingly.

January 8th is the anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans. What would be more appropriate than to call attention to "Our Schools and the Nation?" Surely, education is the greatest investment for community, church, State and nation.

This week in January would be a good time to fill out your quota with new pledges. Then, where the drive has not been put on, let there be careful planning to give all our people a chance to subscribe. We still have 35,000 Methodists in Louisiana who have not pledged for Christian Education. What will we do about this?

A careful investigation shows that charges of every possible kind, in every section of the Conference, among every kind of people have succeeded. Others, exactly like them, have not done so well. What is the explanation? Is it not that the whole secret of success depends upon the leadership, the fidelity, the effort, the will-to-do-it? Why not be loyal to the program of the church?

The Methodist Educational Association will meet in Memphis, Tenn., from December 13th to the 15th. Questions of vital importance will be discussed.

ALBERT S. LUTZ.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE "COLLECTION WEEK," DEC. 11-18.

The Annual Conference at Amory named the week from the second Sunday in December until the third Sunday as Pay-Up Week, or Collection Week in the Christian Education Movement. This became necessary because the week including Nov. 1, when most subscriptions fall due, was just before the meeting of the Annual Conference.

It is confidently expected that every pastoral charge will make special efforts to collect all due subscriptions. We are under binding obligations to do so. We made immediate demands that all of our schools establish chairs of Religious Education. They have responded to the demand of the church on our "promise to pay." Our schools have been embarrassed for months because of lack of finances. Now, if we do not hasten to turn our promises into cash, they will be much more embarrassed, and so will we be who made demands on them and promised to back those demands with the necessary cash. There is no desire to press unduly, but we do desire that every subscriber be solicited.

There were many who deferred their subscriptions "until later." Do not fail to give them opportunity, NOW, to subscribe and to make cash contributions. We are "on the job," not to "worry" anybody, but to "put over" the task you have assigned us.

Yours for service,

J. H. HOLDER,

Conference Sec.-Treas.

New Albany, Miss., Dec. 1, 1921.

EXTRACTS FROM THE SERMON DELIVERED BY REV. J. R. COUNTISS, D.D., ON SUNDAY EVENING AT THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

"The great failure in America to-day is the home. If the homes go to pieces, the churches, schools, and government are gone."

"The children are going where the parents lead them."

"It nearly kills you when Mary is invited out to certain places—and it would kill you if she wasn't."

"If I could keep some girls away from their mothers, I could make women of them."

"O, but you say, 'this is a new age, and things are going fast.' I am trying to slow them down a little."

"God meant that the child should have the care of a hothouse plant."

"It is a mighty poor success a man has when he makes $100,000 and leaves a 15c boy. It would be better to leave 15c and a $100,000 boy."

"The biggest job in the world is being a father."

"Old David was a grand statesman, great warrior—great in many things—but he was a mighty poor father."

"It takes a man and a woman—a father and a mother—to make a home."

"When a man gets too dignified to lie down on the floor and roll and frolic around with boys, he ought to lie down and die."

"Another thing wrong with our American life is that we have too many hotels, apartments, and boarding-houses."

"All big business men have the wrong idea about business. They have their eye on skyscrapers, etc., and ought to have it on the home."

"Some of you women who are the best bridge-players in town—what kind of mothers are you?"

"When you strike a dagger in the American home, it is good-bye church, good-bye State, good-bye government, because you have struck the vital spot."

"Our forefathers were called a generation of discoverers. I call you a generation of un-coverers."

"God give us homes!"

CENTENARY CONFERENCE IN DETROIT.

By John S. Chadwick.

Secretary, Department of Publicity, Missionary Centenary, M. E. Church, South.

There was held at Detroit, Mich., November 15-17, the National Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, this Conference to give consideration to the Centenary interests of that church and the general program of advance for the second half of the Centenary period. The writer was one of several representatives of our own church invited to attend this meeting, and some of the things there heard are passed on to Southern Methodists.

There were present at the Detroit Conference the bishops of the M. E. Church, connectional officers, members of various connectional boards (these boards holding their annual meetings at Detroit following the Conference sessions), the district superintendents of the church, and a certain number of pastors and laymen from each Annual Conference. It was a representative gathering in that it represented every department of the church's activities. It was national in that every State of the Union was represented.

One outstanding feature of that Conference was that it was to give consideration to advance movements. That was the spirit of the Conference—no "knocking" of the work already done, and no thought but that bigger things are ahead. The Episcopal Church has on a big program and results worth while are being secured in the extension of its field of activities in the homeland and in the foreign countries. In the main the speakers were from the field, and their messages dealt with actual conditions—the work already done and the plans for the future. These speakers were bishops, who reported their fields; pastors of country charges and of city mission enterprises; workers on the frontiers, in industrial communities, and among foreigners; district superintendents, evangelists and workers in every other field. Without exception these speakers declared that the work done would not have been possible without the Centenary.

Some of the financial achievements of the Centenary in the Methodist Church were reported as follows: Six general boards of the church have each received their apportionments in full for three successive years, and larger amounts than ever before. In the quadrennium 1912-16 the total receipts of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension from all sources was $1,495,826. For 1920-21 the receipts were $5,317,812, or $3,821,986 more in one year than for the total quadrennium preceding. For the Board of Foreign Missions total receipts for the four years 1912-16 were $6,311,261, while for the present year receipts are $6,612,593, or $300,000 more than for the whole quadrennium preceding. For the fiscal year just closed Centenary collections totaled $14,290,792, or seventy per cent of the amount due. This is below the 1920 record, but, in the face of "hard times," is a showing that does credit to the church.

It was well worth while to come in touch with the leaders of our sister Methodism and to hear the story of the Centenary in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the face of world opportunities and world needs that church is sending its reinforcements into well-nigh every field. Reports were that the revival fires were burning in the homeland and in every foreign mission. We must keep step with this other great Methodist army if we prove our right to live and grow.

RE-ENFORCEMENTS IN FOREIGN FIELDS.

Since January, 1919, our church has sent to foreign fields 162 new missionaries. These reinforcements have gone to the following fields: China, 31; Japan, 17; Korea, 21; Brazil, 18; Mexico, 19; Cuba, 11; Africa, 17; Europe, 25. Until the coming of the Centenary there had been, for at least several years, practically no increase in the number of our missionaries in foreign fields. Our workers in foreign lands faced a situation more serious than any in the homeland could know. We had to send reinforcements or quit the field. The Centenary saved the day for our work in those lands and for our church. In the face of a situation such as the world of to-day presents, Southern Methodism would have been helpless but for such increased financial resources as the Centenary has brought. And, yet some are asking whether the Centenary has been worth while.

If the prosperity of the world is to be restored, it will be because we are all willing to work harder and to put more of ourselves into our work.—President Richmond of Union College.

Not by self-restraint would I be made pure, but rather by restraint. I will not pray, "Bind my hands, that I hurt not my brother;" my cry will be, "Loose my hands, that I may serve Him."—George Matheson

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church:

Whereas, In the wisdom of our Heavenly Father, Sister ROBERTA REXIE SEVIER has been called from our midst to her Eternal Home, having passed away on Saturday evening, the 5th day of November, 1931; and whereas in the death of Sister Sevier, her family loses a devoted wife and an affectionate, prayerful mother; our Sunday School, an efficient, earnest worker; our church a faithful, zealous member; our Ladies' Aid an enthusiastic, tireless leader, and our community a noble, Christian woman;

Therefore, be it resolved, by the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church of Tallulah, that in expressing these words of tribute, we desire to convey to the husband and kindred, our sincere sympathy in their bereavement.

It is resolved furthermore, that these resolutions be presented to the family of our deceased sister, also that a copy be published in the Madison Journal, that one be sent to the Christian Advocate, and that the same be entered in the minutes of the Ladies' Aid.

Signed by: Mrs. Charles Coltharp, Miss Cora McClellan, Mrs. Jas. R. Linton, Committee.

RUSSIAN FAMINE RELIEF.

This appeal is not for money but for personal service.

The American Government has, we learn, huge stocks of surplus textiles, foodstuffs, drugs, etc., which it is understood are in danger of deteriorating. It is proposed that these be donated by the American Government to appropriate distributing agencies in Russia and the Near East. BILLS have been introduced into Congress making this proposal.

American citizens can render a great service in the cause of humanity if on December 3, 4, 5 or 7, they will spend 50 cents for a telegram, or 2 cents for a postage stamp and send their urgent message to their Senators and Representatives, calling for the immediate passage of a suitable bill along the lines indicated.

Whoever is interested in relieving the famine sufferers of Russia can at least do this much to show their sympathy and their practical interest.

JOHN H. FINLEY, Chairman,
SIDNEY L. GULICK, Secretary,
Committee on Works of Mercy and Relief Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

DR. GRAFTON'S MESSAGE.

"What I Am, I Carry With Me."
"What I Have, I Leave Behind."

This is a general law and is deduced from a verse in Revelation and from another from King Solomon.

A lion was captured in Africa and transported to Omaha. He carried with him his fierce nature; he left behind him his honess, his young lions, his den and the sand deserts. What he WAS he carried with him; what he HAD he left behind.

A savage chief was captured in Africa and sent to Jamaica. He carried with him his bitter hatred of his enemies, his fierce instincts and wild passions. He left behind his wife, children, friends, his hut and everything else he had. What he WAS, he carried with him; what he HAD, he left behind.

A baby is born and carries along with it all through life all the instincts and passions which make up himself. Also he takes all the instincts of his nature to the world beyond. Everything else he leaves behind. He is under the law expressed so tersely: what I AM, I carry with me; What I HAVE, I leave behind.

Then, too, my happiness depends on what I am, my wretchedness also. What I have, whether much or little, does not make me happy or miserable.

What, then, am I? Who can tell me? Shall my mother or teacher or preacher tell me what I am? Alas, they do not know me thoroughly and I don't know myself. But in his Word, God tells me what I am. Repeatedly He says that I am unclean by nature and filled with the germs of all evil.

He says that man goeth astray from his mother's womb, speaking lies. He says that the human heart is full of adultery, fornication, withcraft, hatred, variance, wrath, strife, seditions, envying, heresies, murders, drunkenness, reveling and such like. Everything that was in Nero on the throne was germinally in Nero the babe. A babe is an undeveloped man. A man is a developed babe. According to the Scriptures such is what I am; and what I am, I carry with me.

I may possess gold and silver, but I leave all this behind me. What I AM, I carry with me; what I HAVE, I leave behind. Question: Am I willing to be an everlasting sinner? No man or angel can ever change me.

But here comes the gospel to our relief and when God changes me I AM a new creature and the same law prevails with the new man; what I AM, I carry with me. God offers to make a new creature of me in this life. In the next world he makes no changes. Therefore he makes the gospel call, saying, "Come unto Me." How thrilling the truth. What I AM, I carry with me, and what I HAVE, I leave behind.

A traveler in the next world may fall in with Job. He will tell you that he carried with him all he was: his bloody nature, his selfish disposition; while all he had he left behind. Some one may meet Paul across the flood. Paul will tell him, "What I WAS, I brought with me; what I HAD, I left behind." As you read these words, think deeply and think long—The Mississippi Visitor.

WHAT ONE INVESTMENT YIELDED.

By Garfield Evans.

A nineteen-year-old boy was at work in a brick yard in California. A Methodist pastor asked him if he would like to go to college. He further told him that a business man had promised, through him, that if the boy would go to college he would allow him $2000 a year to meet his expenses. Of course, the boy wanted to go. The pastor knew his worth and the business man wanted to make his money count.

When college opened in the Fall of 1910, the boy enrolled at ——— College. During the summer months he worked and was enabled to cut down the allowance of his benefactor. He graduated in 1915 as a trained Christian man and entered business in San Francisco. He soon was able to pay back the funds loaned by his benefactor.

for and in turn began to assist other young men and women through college.

Besides the success of his own business and influence, his daughter is the principal of an industrial school in Japan, two sons are in college preparing for the ministry and a third is a student volunteer. All his investments he considers that money he has used in helping young men and women through college—has yielded the largest returns.

Several young men and women need assistance this year and there are no funds available.

CHRISTIANITY'S CLAIM UPON MY MONEY.

By Bishop F. J. McConnell.

In the first place, Christianity asks me to give up money because money gives control over consumption capital. It asks me to consume less so that my less favored brother may consume a little more. If we are to interpret Christianity by the spirit of Jesus, the appeal is in harmony with the very essence of Christianity. Christianity means a chance for life.

But money gives control over production capital, as well. It puts tools under my control. Christianity comes to its adherents with the call: "Let me have your money that I may have power over tools—that I may have hospital and surgical instruments and schoolhouses and books and churches for the revelation of the Gospel. Instead of using all your income for the purchase of more property, let me have an instrument that will teach a young Chinaman a trade, or that will cure sickness in India, or print the truth in Mexico."

But money is more than all this. It is control over men. Money makes it possible to bring the best types of Christian life into brotherly contact with non-Christians. And the world will finally be won to Christ through Christly contacts. Money makes it possible to put the Christian and the non-Christian side by side. Once together, the foundations of mutual respect and sympathy are laid on which it is possible to build those fine friendships which mean the most for the spread of Christianity. In just making it possible for the Christian to live among non-Christians, money does its mightiest for the advancement of the Kingdom.—Missionary Voice.

CLEAN-UP DAY.

By Mrs. W. N. Vernon.

There are great numbers of small towns that do not have a clean-up day once in ten years.

Any individual, Sunday school class or Missionary Society might render a splendid service to the community in this way.

Name a certain day, some two weeks beforehand, and advertise it well. Have a tin can contest, in which the boy who collects the largest pile of cans receives a small prize.

The merchants of the town would be glad to furnish a dray to carry off all rubbish.—Missionary Voice.

THOSE WHO LIVE BY WAR.

Just now the forces and the interests that live and profit by war are dazed and reeling from the tremendous impact of the American proposals. The white-hot enthusiasm with which the world is welcoming the proposed destruction of existing armadas and the ten-year building truce has cowed the selfish. They have bowed to the whirlwind that swept out of Washington Saturday, but—

These proposals of America strike at jobs and careers, at dividends and industrial dreams; at great plants and winters on the Riviera and at mighty yards and mills and shops and at private yachts drifting under Caribbean moons. They will wipe out men's future and dwindle fortunes made or in the making. In them there will be a far-reaching adjustment of many of the world's greatest industries and the disturbance of ancient and vested interests. For these proposals will cut through one of the oldest, thickest, and deepest of the taproots of war. Carried through to their logical end, they will make old institutions and ancient crafts no more than a song that is sung or a tale that is told.

These vested interests and their allies will fight. If the more impressive and powerful machinery of war at sea is to vanish, it will go because the vested interests of war cannot hinder its going. The men who lay keels, forge rifles, roll armor plate, and hammer out gun turrets cannot be expected to welcome the ending of their day. Nor can the men who point these guns and command these ships.

The mingled forces of reaction, selfish and unselfish, are many, and they are strong enough to make themselves felt. It will not be long until their countermines are exploded and their poison gas attacks begin to roll in upon the conference. In ways direct, and indirect tipped with venom and directed by greed, fear, and hatred, they will take their course.

The friends of arms limitation, of peace, and of that disarmament that is beginning to loom upon the horizon must be ready, anxious, even eager to meet and shatter these attacks and arguments and choke these certain intrigues. It may as well be fought out now. There never was a better hour and place for the Armageddon of armaments than to-day in Washington.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

THE SNARLERS AND FAULT FINDERS.

How many a child's happiness has been spoiled, the future turned away from a good life, by nagging by the old folks at home, particularly by the father, sometimes even by the mother.

Think of Byron as an example. His club feet made him self-conscious to start with and the number of times he was reminded of it as a child in his own home turned him against the world with a bitterness that at times made him almost a devil. He rushed into excesses—and we cannot hold him altogether to blame.

Some children are brought up on "Don't." It does not take them many years to find or at least to think they find, their real friends out in the alley. And the graduates of the alley make our hoodlums, desperadoes and criminals.

What coldness, mere morality, fault finding do is to just turn the switch—a little act, but it may send the train over the precipice.

A question: What makes you find fault anyway? Is it your hard row in business, your experience with others, or is it some malicious determination to pull others down that you may pose as being at least as good as they are supposed to be? Do you nag the child because you have the legal right to do it, because you are its parent, for example? Is it because you have a bad case of nerves? Is it because you are cold and selfish? Is it because you have not your self control?

Why not pray about it? Pray more and prey less.—Exchange.

WHO IS A CHRISTIAN?

Who then is a Christian according to the light which God hath vouchsafed to this people? He that, being "justified by faith, hath peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ;" and, at the same time, is "born again," "born from above," "born of the Spirit;" inwardly changed from the image of the devil, to that "image of God wherein he was created;" he that finds the love of God shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost which is given unto him; and whom this love sweetly constrains to love his neighbor, every man, as himself: he that has learned of his Lord to be meek and lowly in heart, and in every state to be content; he in whom is that whole mind, all those tempers, which were also in Christ Jesus: he that abstains from all appearance of evil, in his actions; and that offends not with his tongue; he that walks in all the commandments of God, and in all his ordinances, blameless; he that, in all his intercourse with men, does to others as he would they should do to him; and in his whole life and conversation, whether he eats or drinks, or whatsoever he doeth, doeth all to the glory of God.—John Wesley.

When Evangeline Booth was asked the secret of success of the Salvation Army's work overseas she replied: "The Salvation Army has been successful in its work overseas because that work has the magic of the human touch! We have always done our work in great and crowded cities. That is why our workers can appeal to any sort of man. They know how to reach him on his own ground."—Record of Christian Work.

Aches and Pains Of Rheumatism

Sometimes They Are Unbearable.

There are weather conditions that make rheumatism worse. They are not the same in the cases of all persons. Some rheumatics suffer more in dry, warm weather than in moist, cold weather, but all suffer more or less all the time.

The cause of rheumatism is an excess of uric acid in the blood, affecting the muscles and joints, causing aches and pains. Hence the blood must have attention for permanent results in the treatment of this disease.

THE COMMON FAULT.

A professor in a Western college has been making tests in connection with his classes in psychology to find out what is the most general fault among his students—that is, a habit which could not be classed as a sin or a crime or a misdemeanor, but a failure in the sum total of characteristics that mark a successful man or woman.

What do you think he found? Thoughtlessness. His tests were very simple, and even childish.

He left a book lying on the floor where every student saw it as he came into the classroom. Seven students stepped over the book without trying to pick it up. The eighth kicked it a little farther along the aisle. Four students stepped on the book, evidently not seeing it. The twentieth student picked up the book and put it on the professor's table.

There were three pictures on the walls of the classroom. The professor hung these askew, and a week went by before any one appeared to notice it, and then no one straightened out the picture, but one of the students asked the teacher if they ought not to be hung even.

One of the commonest excuses that men make after some harm has been done to some one or something is: "I'm sorry; I didn't think." A man runs into another car with his, and causes a smash-up or perhaps a tragedy. He is sorry. He did not think he was in any danger. The man fails to be on time for his appointment, wasting valuable time for the man waiting. "So sorry! I did not think it was so late!"

And so it goes all along the line of thoughtlessness. Perhaps the professor was right in his final conclusions.

"Thoughtlessness is not a fault of habit. It is a sin and a crime combined, for it leads almost always to both."—Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, in Christian Herald.

GIVING SIGHT TO THE BLIND.

Mrs. J. B. Ross, Wonsan, Korea.

One of the Bible women from down the coast brings us an interesting account of one of our former patients who was operated on for cataract and whose sight was restored. She is a strong Christian now and is wielding a good influence over those about her. She came to us some time ago with a cataract over both eyes and had been unable to see for a number of years. Dr. Ross removed the cataract from one eye and after a time of careful treatment the bandage was removed and she could see. You can imagine how grateful she was! She wanted the other eye operated on immediately, but Dr. Ross advised her to wait. She came back in a few months and when she left the hospital she was rejoicing over the restored sight to both eyes. Another woman in the same village who had the same trouble heard her story and has made application for admission to the hospital.—Missionary Voice.

Not Bad Cook But Bad Stomach.

The word dyspepsia means literally bad cook, but it will not be fair for many people to lay the blame on the cook if they begin the Christmas Dinner with little appetite and end it with distress or nausea.

It may not be fair for any to do that—let us hope so for the sake of the cook! The disease, dyspepsia, indicates a bad stomach, that is a weak stomach, rather than a bad cook, and for a weak stomach we know of nothing else equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. This digestive and tonic medicine helps the stomach, gives it vigor and tone, relieves dyspepsia, creates an appetite, and makes eating the pleasure it should be.

The biliousness and constipation found in so many cases of dyspepsia are gently and thoroughly relieved by Hood's Pills, which act in perfect harmony with Hood's Sarsaparilla.—Adv.

REV. AND MRS. J. M. SMITH HONORED.

On Thanksgiving night the spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Collins of Union, Mississippi, was thrown open to entertain the pastor, his wife and entire family with a surprise Thanksgiving party. Brother and Mrs. Smith were met at the door and escorted into the large receiving hall where refreshments were being served by the girls of the Young People's Missionary Society; they were then carried into the parlors where seats of honor were waiting for them and the membership of the church were waiting to greet them. The house was profusely and elegantly decorated with autumn leaves and ferns and Thanksgiving emblems everywhere.

After an attractive program was rendered, Mr. L. Q. C. Williams, president of the Board of Stewards, made a beautiful talk upon the consecrated and useful lives of both Brother and Mrs. Smith, bidding them Godspeed in all they might undertake to do in God's Kingdom. Mrs. J. S. Grady, president of the Woman's Missionary Society, then paid a beautiful tribute to the pastor and entire family; this was followed by a talk from the president of the Y. P. M. S., telling of the love and devotion shown by Mrs. Smith to the Young People of the church. Then came in two little girls dressed as fairies pulling two gaily decorated wagons laden with gifts from the entire church as a token of their love and appreciation of the noble work done among them by Brother and Mrs. Smith; after this a song composed by a member of the local congregation was sung.

The program was completed by all singing together "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" and a fervent prayer of thanksgiving by the pastor.

A MEMORIAL FROM THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TO THE ALABAMA AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES.

We recommend that the Superintendents of the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Conferences be requested to make all necessary arrangements, outlining the program, selecting the faculty, and arranging for speakers.

PLAN YOUR WORK.

There are two rules of success for the average man. One of them is, "Plan your work." To be sure, the element of system is not always to be found in the work that reaches farthest and has most stimulating influence. There are men and women of genius whose very energy defies the element of plan. It is often refreshing to touch such lives, which give us the impression of unique, unharnessed power, independent of system, unbound by any plan. Yet the vast majority of men make good in the various realms of life because they have learned to make plans which organize their lives and direct the flow of their energies into definite channels. A man's plan for his work is in itself the tribute of his soul to his importance. He who sees in his daily round his most immediate opportunity to express his deepest self and make his contribution to the kingdom of God will be concerned about the use of each day's every hour. So a Christian's plan of work will have in it two elements. There will be first a program for each day. He will enter into each day's work with its hours thought through in relation to all that he should accomplish. His plan of work will thus have the element of urgency about it because it relates to the immediate, pressing tasks of to-day.

But there is another element in this first rule of success. Alongside of a plan for each day there will be in the Christian's mind a plan for his whole life. There is no finer steady force in life than a plan that reaches through the years and that can be realized only slowly and progressively, the work of each day and year fitting into the whole plan as its necessary and indispensable parts. How far ahead does your life plan look? Are you caught in the meshes of to-day? The impression we get of so many lives is that they are moving, sometimes with dizzy rapidity; but they seem to say in their feverish haste, "We don't know where we're going, but we're on our way."—Dr. E. A. Leslie.

THE WESLEYAN DANCE.

It reads somewhat like an extract from one of the "funny" papers, but it is said to be a veritable fact that the American Dancing Masters' Association, in an endeavor to win over the Methodists from their official opposition to dancing, have launched a new dance, which is called "the Wesleyan dance." All objectionable features are said to have been eliminated, and the posture and movements of dancers made entirely correct. Of course, the whole thing has been met with ridicule by the Methodist papers, and it is now said that the association has withdrawn its new dance in umbrage, being unable to understand the coldness of the Methodist leaders. Funny, isn't it? Imagine John Wesley leading off in the dance bearing his name! One cannot help wondering if the dancing masters were quite serious, or whether they were trying to "put something over" on the Methodists. — Watchman-Examiner (Baptist).

We are convinced that the problems of the increase of the ministry, a deeper loyalty and devotion in reference to the public services of the church, and a stronger sense of personal responsibility with reference to the mission of the church, will all be solved in large measure if the church can succeed in leading her membership to rebuild the family altar and make it the center and source of daily inspiration and strength.—Southern Churchman (Episcopal).

A weak body is the assassin of a strong mind.—T. Tilton.

CENTENARY NOTES.

There have been some criticisms of the Centenary program as regards "overhead" expense. It is a fact, as all well understand, that no big enterprise of the church or of the business world can be carried through without some "overhead" expense, and in the case of the Centenary the percentage of expense does not approach that of the average commercial concern handling a like amount of business. And our people should keep in mind this fact, delayed payments always add to the expense of the collection program. On the same expense incurred in the collection of $12,000,000 could have been collected $22,000,000—the amount due. It is not the fault of the headquarters and field forces that the percentage of expense to amount collected to date is practically one hundred per cent higher than would be if pledges were paid to date. It is with the people who have made the pledges to the Centenary to reduce the percentage of "overhead" expense. But, as a matter of fact, the headquarters and field expense for 1920 was 80 per cent of the 1919 figures (not including campaign expense in 1919); this expense for 1921 is about 82 per cent of the 1920 figures, and the 1922 program guarantees even a larger decrease.

has paid 70 per cent of the Centenary pledge due for 1921. This is not up to the 1920 standard, but it is better than the record our own church has made. Southern Methodists ought to do as well, and we can do it even yet if we will make the extra effort during December that the situation demands. It will call for sacrifices on the part of some to bring their pledges to the 100 per cent standard during December. But it is in sacrificial giving that we come into experiences of real fellowship with our Lord.

We are a little more than midway in the Centenary period. Two and one-half years after the Centenary drive the church reports $12,057,151 for missions—all of this "new money." It is a record such as none of us would have thought possible a few years ago. Some mistakes have been made, as in all great enterprises of the church or the nation, and to some the mistakes made in any movement loom larger than the worth while achievements. But taking account of all mistakes, and giving to those even an exaggerated importance, it is yet true that our church is doing bigger things than ever before in its history. Let us thank God, take courage, and press on.

Our force of workers in foreign fields increased by nearly two hundred since January, 1919, is no small achievement. That increase is in no measure beyond what pressing demands upon our church called for in every foreign field, and but for the Centenary we would have been unable to answer the call of God in this hour of world need. And yet, there are some who ask whether the Centenary has been worth while. But for the larger service to the world that the Centenary has made possible, what right would we have as a church to claim the guidance of our Lord and his blessings upon us?

A special effort is being made in a number of the Annual Conferences to come during December to the 60 per cent paid standard. This goal should be reached in every Conference, whether or not "Pay-Up Week" campaigns are on. It cannot be done except as the individual subscriber makes it possible—unless individual pledges are paid to date. Will you help to guarantee success in this effort to pay all Centenary obligations before January 1?

The Sunday schools of Southern Methodism have made a great record in Centenary giving during eleven months of 1921. Let's make it even better by bringing every Sunday school pledge to date during December. See that the pledge of your school is paid in full and that the amount is sent not later than December 26 to Col. John E. Edgerton, Treasurer, Centenary Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

THE SUCCESS OF "PAY-UP WEEK" RESTS WITH THE INDIVIDUAL SUBSCRIBER TO THE CENTENARY. WILL YOU DO YOUR PART?

FROM GUNTOWN, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I was appointed at the late session of the North Mississippi Conference by Bishop McMurtry to the Guntown charge. I went home and got things together and moved in Saturday following the adjournment of the Conference. We were met at the train by quite a number of the people and brought to the parsonage where quite a number of ladies were in waiting for us. The table was ready and dinner was on it and all we had to do was to sit down and help ourselves. They had also enough to do for Sunday at dinner and Mrs. Baley did not have to cook until Monday morning.

They had also filled the larder with good things and we are provided for quite a while. The reception given us was very cordial and we feel sure the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places. Sunday was a great day with us and we preached to good crowds both morning and evening.

This is a new charge as the work was divided at Conference and two charges were made by the addition of some other churches to both ends of the work. The prospects are good for a good year in the work of the church here. C. WESLEY BAILEY, P. C.

FROM NATCHITOCHES, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Our second year starts off well at Natchitoches. Our people seem eager for the conflict, and we hope to have a really great year.

Last Wednesday evening we were surprised when we went to prayer meeting, to find instead of the regular mid-week prayer service that there was to be a reception for the pastor and his wife. Quite a few made talks of appreciation and welcome. After the speeches, refreshments were liberally served. A large number of people were present. It is needless to say that while we felt very unworthy of many of the kind things said, still we were very appreciative of the kindness.

We have had three accessions by vows since coming back from Conference.

We are not unmindful of the importance of the work here. So many of our young teachers are in training in the normal school at this place, and their influence will be felt throughout the whole State either for good or bad. The best that we can do, we will do, by the grace of God, for these young people.

We want to again offer our services to those who have sons or daughters in the school here. We will be glad to get their names so we can get in direct touch with them. There are one hundred and eighty-one Methodist young people in the school here and we only have about half of this number enrolled in the Sunday school.

You can see from this that we are not in touch with quite a few. You that read these lines and are interested, help us to get acquainted with every Methodist young person here.

With best wishes to you and the Advocate readers, I am,

Fraternally yours,

HENRY T. YOUNG.

Orange, Cal.—"I always feel very grateful to you, as some twenty years ago three doctors said I had to have a serious operation. I had a tumor, and ulcers which would gather and break. I had displacement so badly that I could hardly sit down at times, and it seemed as if I suffered everything that a woman could suffer. Then some one advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I used it until I was cured and saved from the operation. I have told women of your wonderful medicine times without number, and I am willing that you should use these facts and my name if you like. I also used your Compound during the change, and I can do all my own work out the heavy part, and can walk miles every day as I help my husband in the office."

A CORRECTION AND AN APPEAL.

By Rev. P. L. Cobb.

In a recent letter from Bishop Ainsworth, giving an itemized statement of his office and travel expense, there is a suggestion that for the sake of accuracy a statement be made in regard to an allowance for expense of bishops.

This I am glad to do, and in order to have the exact facts I felt justified in asking Dr. Lamar for a statement that could be published.

From this it will appear that the amount for office is $1,200; for travel there is no limit. Expense funds are paid out only on bills presented.

The average expense for travel is $299.86 and for office expense something over $50 per month.

The letter is as follows:

"Referring to your request that I furnish you with the facts regarding the salaries and office and travel expense of our bishops, beg leave to state:

"The salary of each active bishop is $5,000 per annum, which is paid in monthly or quarterly installments, as the individual bishop concerned prefers.

"The allowance made by the General Conference of 1918 and now in force for the office expense of a bishop must not exceed $100 per month. Each bishop sends to the Treasurers each month a statement of his office expense for the month, for which the Treasurers send him their check. The cases in which office expense amounts to $100 are rare, as shown by our books. The average is nearer $50 than the full $100.

"Upon the traveling expenses of a bishop the General Conference placed no limit, simply directing that the Treasurers pay that expense each month. Each bishop (except in rare cases when there has been no traveling expense) sends the Treasurers a monthly statement of the amount he has expended during the month for travel while in the discharge of his official duties, which is paid and the statement filed as a voucher.

"Looking over the itemized accounts of the bishops for the last fiscal year, ending April 20, 1921, we find that our bishops were paid for traveling expenses for the year amounts ranging from $41.30 to $741.90 each, an average for each bishop of $299.86 and a fraction of a cent for the year.

"I believe I have given herein the information you requested.

A. J. LAMAR."

This gives me the opportunity to say what I have wanted to for some time.

What the church does for the bishops should be done for the presiding elders and pastors by districts and charges respectively. An expense fund based on a reasonable estimate should be made for such expense as is made necessary by the duties of the position. This fund should be held by a treasurer and disbursed on bills presented.

Recently I talked with a presiding elder whose district had provided liberally for his salary and had added a fund of $1,000 for expense of office and travel.

My attention was called to the expense of traveling a circuit by an article in the Christian Advocate. This expense reduces the average salary of $1,630 to about $1,400. This should not be. Over and above the meager circuit salary a generous and appreciative people should provide the expense of a conveyance, which would greatly increase the pastor's efficiency. As a presiding elder my heart has been sore as I have seen circuit pastors walking as much as twenty-five miles to their appointments.

One such pastor who had just bought and paid for a new Ford said he did as much pastoral work in one day now as he could do in five before. But out of his salary of $1,200 he could not really afford to buy and keep a car, but for the sake of the kingdom he was making a sacrifice.

We have hundreds and hundreds of country pastors who are doing the same thing.

The station preacher whose membership is scattered, and it usually is, also needs a car and in very few instances can afford one.

The salesman who travels the same territory as these pastors in country and city is provided a car by his house, and all expenses incurred. Can a church fail to do the same and look the world in the face?

Surely if our business men desire the greatest possible efficiency, and they do, they will make it possible by seeing to it that the servants of the church are provided with an equipment which would compare favorably with the outlay and equipment which the business man considers an absolute necessity in his own business.—Christian Advocate.

Eternity is crying out to you louder and louder as you near its brink. Rise, be going. Count your resources; learn what you are not fit for, and give up wishing for it; learn what you can do, and do it with the energy of a man.—Selected.

A sparkling new volume by John Paul on God and Christ and Inspiration and Atonement. A constructive answer, in classical plainness, to new theology and evolutionary criticism, entitled,

EDITORIAL COMMENT

MAKE THIS A GREAT YEAR.

Our three patronizing Conferences have now been held, our pastors and people are settled in their relationships for another year, and the time is at hand for us to enter upon our work—all of us—with the determination to make this the greatest period in our history for the accomplishment of good and the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God. The past may not have been just what we should like for it to have been—it probably is not—but we shall be very unwise to waste precious time and energy in bemoaning the past when we have the opportunity of doing better in the future. This is a good time for us to read, re-read, and meditate deeply upon the words of the great apostle: "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." If we are in earnest about our professions, there is enough before us to call us on to the mightiest effort we have ever made really to do God's will. Two things above all we should do—cultivate our own spiritual lives that we may grow in grace and in knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and give ourselves unreservedly to the work of helping save lost men and women. Let us make this a great year.

WHAT DO LAWS MEAN?

As is well known, the recently-adopted Constitution of the State of Louisiana declares that gambling is a vice, and the Legislature shall pass laws to suppress it. It was supposed that laws looking to that end had been passed, and there was more or less effort on the part of the police authorities in New Orleans to enforce them. But now, according to newspaper reports, the district attorney's office has rendered a decision which makes it practically impossible to arrest those who are accused of peddling racing "dope" in the city. One of the greatest evils connected with racing in the city is the operation of "handbooks"—downtown gambling outfits—by means of which people who never go to the race track can place bets in small amounts on the outcome of the daily races. It is charged, evidently on good authority, that thousands of people, including young men and young women, make such bets every day, and the eradication of these "handbooks" is necessary if the gambling evil is to be kept from destroying many young lives. Heretofore, the mere possession of gambling paraphernalia has been taken as prima facie evidence of guilt; but the recent decision is to the effect that no arrest can be made unless the making of the bet is actually witnessed. As in many other cases, it seems that the making of laws is one thing, and interpreting and enforcing them is altogether another. We are reminded of a cartoon we saw in "Character Sketches" years ago—good people pouring water on one side of a fire and the devil pouring oil on the other side. Some of these days we are going to have anti-gambling laws in Louisiana that will accomplish that whereunto they were intended.

MAKING PROGRESS.

There is every reason to be gratified over the results obtained thus far in the proceedings of the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments. In view of the many delicate and complex problems with which the Conference has to deal, it could not be expected that it would, overnight, reach conclusions that would forever settle the questions that nations have been fighting about for centuries; but it is evident that substantial progress has already been made. The draft of a proposed treaty between the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan has been submitted which paves the way for the acceptance of the program of naval disarmament proposed by the United States, and the spirit of the representatives of the various nations represented is such as to lead to the belief that we are entering upon a new era of international comity. All Christian people should continue to pray for divine guidance for the Conference.

MARSHAL FOCH IN NEW ORLEANS.

On Thursday of last week, Marshal Ferdinand Foch, the distinguished commander of the Allied forces in the World War, visited New Orleans. Unfortunately, the weather was execrable and many of those who would have delighted to do him honor were unable so much as to catch a glimpse of him. As was to be expected, he was shown every possible official courtesy, and he expressed himself, through the daily newspapers, as delighted with his visit to the city that has so much to remind him of his own beloved France. We would detract nothing from the honor the great man received; we think it a little unfortunate, however, that so much of his stay in the city should have been taken up with functions under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church. Upon his arrival, he attended mass at the Cathedral, a little later he was entertained at breakfast by the Knights of Columbus, and still later he was the guest of Loyola University, where an honorary degree was conferred upon him. Protestantism might well learn a lesson from the organization that knows so well how to make capital of any event that may add to its prominence and prestige.

NATURAL-BORN FIGHTERS.

We have never professed to understand the situation in Ireland, but we have followed with much interest the efforts of Irish patriots to secure for themselves a form of government that would relieve them of the feeling that they were merely the vassals of England. When, therefore, press reports last week indicated that the representatives of Ireland and England had reached an agreement that seemed to be mutually satisfactory, we felt relieved to think that their troubles were over. But recent dispatches are to the effect that Mr. Eamonn de Valera, known as the president of the Irish Republic, who has led the fight for complete independence, has declared that he will oppose the ratification of the agreement, in spite of the fact that the great majority of his advisers and of the people of Ireland generally are in favor of it. Since one of the leading supporters of de Valera has declared that, under the present agreement, "Ireland is now free to live her own life without interference," it would seem that de Valera and his irreconcilable friends are natural-born fighters who never know when they have attained what they fight for. There are many such.

SHE OUGHT TO GET IT.

Not long ago we saw a news item to the effect that a woman had sued a man who was accused of selling bootlegged liquor to her husband, for $10,000 damages, her home having been broken up as the result of the drunken debauchery following the drinking bout. The amount asked would be very small compensation for a wrecked home, but if it should be awarded, it might put a stop to the nefarious business of those who prey upon the weakness of human nature by selling their vile concoctions purely for the sake of the money they can make by so doing. If the courts would inflict heavier fines for the violations of the law, their severity would help a little, too. The bootlegger likes a light fine better than he does a heavy license.

THE JOY OF LIFE.

If those who complain that somebody is always taking the joy out of life would devote more of their energy to putting joy into life, they would find that the world is a mighty pleasant place in which to live after all.

TRAVEL LETTERS FROM DR. AND MRS. I. W. COOPER.

S. S. Enipress of India.
Sept. 26, 1921.

Dear Dr. Carley: As promised in our last letter, the topic of this writing is to be the religion of Mohamed (or Mohammed, as it is often spelled), as it appeared to us on our journey through the East. The statements and statistics here given are as correct as we could gather them from observation, from guide books and from our native guides. We shall endeavor to be fair and true, though we realize that we are but imperfect "authorities" on this subject.

The outward evidences of Mohammedanism are everywhere visible in the East. The mosque seems to rear itself from every valley and hillside and has even impressed its domelike architecture upon the most common dwellings. By the way, the two characteristic features of the mosque—the dome and the minaret—do not belong together, according to the rules of art, but here, we always find them side by side. In the city of Cairo, alone, there are something over five hundred mosques. Two of these we visited and found them beautiful and imposing. One, the Gamia Sultan Hasan, is said to be the grandest edifice in Egypt. It stands on a "rocky shelf" opposite the Citadel—which is now occupied by an English garrison. On the same hill that we find the Citadel, is the Gamia Mohammed Ali, called the "alabaster mosque" because most of the building materials used in it are of alabaster, from one of the smaller pyramids. The "Sanctuary" of this mosque is remarkably fine. It is a domed Byzantine hall, grandly proportioned and beautifully lighted.

But of all the mosques we visited by far the most interesting was the mosque of Omar, in Jerusalem. It is built on the site of Solomon's temple. For this reason, and because it stands in a very large court, kept free of other buildings, the approach to it is much more impressive than that of others. The building itself is very large—is an octagon of fifty yards in diameter. Its architecture is a mixture of Roman and Byzantine and the resultant is supposed to be the most beautiful mosque in the East. It is certainly unique—at least, we found nothing like it elsewhere, but it seemed too ornate—almost fantastic in its style—to be classed as beautiful. Even the exterior is a conglomerate of marble, glass-mosaics and porcelain tiles. Within, it is ornamented with wood-carvings, gems, marbles, and all kinds of mosaics. Its wonderful proportions and glorious windows are its greatest assets. The temple of Solomon was probably not so costly as this structure.

Mosques are, however, not the only constant reminder of Mohammedanism. In another letter we spoke of how the muezzin, or Mohammedan priest, climbed the minaret five times a day and called all the "faithful" to prayer. If it is not possible for a man to go each time to the mosque, to say his prayers, he is at least supposed to turn his face toward Mecca and pray for a few minutes, and he should answer at least one of these calls by going to the mosque for worship. The muezzin is faithful enough about his part of the program, so the stranger, as well as the native, is reminded five times a day of the "Prophet"—but, as far as we could see, very few of the Mohammedans who were on the streets at times of prayer answered the call.

Mohammedan women are not supposed to go to the mosques. They must pray at home. Women are seen on the streets, but not women of the better class—and a virtuous woman must never walk on the streets with a man, not even with her husband. If it becomes necessary for a woman of "the faith" to appear on the street, she must wear black and a veil over the lower part of her face, almost to her eyes. The eyes which showed above the mosque-like veils, and the entire faces of those women who were unveiled looked very sad to us, and we did not wonder that their countenances should reflect something of the tragedy of their existence.

Most of the Mohammedan men wear the red Turkish "fez." Knowing that none of these countries were now under Turkish rule, we supposed that this head-dress had something to do with their religion, but our guide told us it did not. He said that the Turks required all male subjects to wear this head-dress and that many of them considered it so "handsome" that they now continued to use it—in other words, it was still "the style." Men, as well as women, in these Eastern countries, wear long robes. These are of different color and material, though, as a rule, the poorer classes dress in dark colors while the men of the upper classes, financially, wear the natural-colored pongee silk.

When we arrived in Cairo, we found that the next day was to be a great festive occasion in the city. They called it Holy Carpet Day. To the Mohammedan world it is the most important day of the year. Annually four great Mohammedan cities, Cairo, Constantinople, Damascus and Algeria, make and present, each one-fourth of a tapestry carpet to be placed over Mohammed's tomb, at Mecca. These four parts of the carpet are joined together, in Mecca, before they are put in place. The carpet, as thus completed, remains on the prophet's tomb for a year, after which time it is again divided and the parts given to chosen mosques throughout the Mohammedan world, while a new carpet takes the place of the old one—on the tomb. But the day before "the carpet" sets out for Mecca is a gala day for each one of the four cities named. In Cairo, the carpet starts from the alabaster mosque of Mohammed Ali.

Since we had heard some of the above facts and had been told that there would be a great procession, we were anxious to see the spectacle to the greatest advantage, so we did not go with the party, but hired a special carriage and a native guide, who told us many things about this custom.

Our guide thought it best for us to drive down near the "encampment," where the procession would end and the carpet remain until the next day, when it would be taken to Mecca. So we drove through crowded streets which reminded us somewhat of the thronged streets of New Orleans on Mardi Gras day; the crowd was just as motley and just as strangely dressed. The procession, when it finally came, was well worth seeing. Four bands of what was supposed to be "music" marched in the parade. The city guards, national guards, Mohammedan state officials—all were there in full regalia. Between these dignitaries were interspersed civilians of all classes and conditions. Some rode camels, some donkeys; others walked or danced along shouting with excitement and enthusiasm. Finally, the carpet passed, borne on a kind of pavilion on the back of a richly bedecked camel. This particular carpet is said to have cost approximately $65,000. It was crimson satin embroidered all over with threads of gold. Our guide said that this embroidery represented events in the life of Mohammed, or in the history of their religion.

This reminds us to say that in the procession, just in front of the carpet, there passed a large camel with a young date palm tree on its back. Before the camel danced two men with tambourines and water bottles of skin, which they twirled as they danced. Our guide told us that this represented a time in Mohammed's life when he was lost in the desert and almost dying of hunger and thirst. An angel appeared and brought him dates and a bottle of water. So he enjoined upon his followers that they must feed the hungry and give water to the thirsty.

The day after this great procession, one hundred "saints"—all rich Mohammedans who had paid for the privilege—and one thousand soldiers set out for Mecca with the carpet. The guide told us that they often met great hardships in crossing the Arabian Desert, but they always craved the honor of going.

All of what we have written shows the spectacular side of this religion, but there is a much darker side to the picture—the social, domestic and moral aspects of Mohammedanism.

Polygamy is, of course, one of its worst teachings—and practices. Inquiry showed that a man is allowed to marry as many as four wives in one day and to have as many wives as he is able to support. The Khedive is said to have nineteen wives. The matter of supporting the family is not looked at from our point of view, for often a man wishes to have a large family in order that he may have many wives and children to help him till his fields, or labor at whatever occupation he may follow. He has a perfect right to whip his wife or treat her in any way that he may see fit. The divorce laws are all on his side. A woman can never get a divorce, but a man may get one on any pretext.

At the pyramids, we had a guide who was very talkative. He told us that a man has to pay the equivalent of fifty dollars to his father-in-law when he marries, but if his wife has any money and likes him, she will pay this sum back to him. He said that he had at one time two wives, but he found that they were very jealous of each other. They would quarrel and fight and then "take it out on him" by not giving him his "cheese," when he came home. (Cheese seemed to mean his meals.) He divorced one wife and now he gets plenty of cheese.

Their religion is full of superstition. We had two outstanding illustrations of this in Jerusalem. In the Mosque of Omar we found an immense stone, said to weigh one hundred tons. This they call the "Sacred Rock" and declare that it is suspended in the air—has no support beneath. It rises about four feet above the mosaic pavement of the floor, but it is impossible for an outsider to say upon what it rests as there is a high network of wood-carving all around the rock, reaching to such a height that one can only see the top of the rock through the lattice work. From the top of this rock Mohammed is said to have been translated to heaven on his miraculous steed, Burak. The rock started to go to heaven with him but the angel Gabriel put out his hand and detained the rock. The interested visitor is shown, through a space in the wood-carving, an indenture on the rock which by a wild flight of imagination may be said to resemble the print of a hand. The guide also tells you that this rock was the scene of Abraham's sacrifice and the site of the Jewish altar of burnt-offering. Still further, they declare that this "Sacred Rock" is the place where the throne of God will be erected on the Day of Judgment.

Between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives stretches the Valley of Jehosaphat for a distance of two or three miles. The Mosque of Omar overlooks this valley and the Mohammedans claim that when Jehovah erects his throne on the Sacred Rock all the inhabitants of the earth, for all ages, will be collected in this valley. Across the valley will be stretched three hairs from Mohammed's beard. (These hairs are kept in a treasure chest within the Mosque of Omar, but are not exhibited to the public.) All true Mohammedans will be able to walk across on these hairs—from the Mount of Olives to the Throne. Those who make the journey in safety will be received into bliss, but those who fall off while making the crossing will go to the bottomless pit.

Since they are superstitious, it is not surprising that they are very fatalistic, and this in turn leads to a lack of ambition and a want of progress. On the other hand, it brings with it a species of content and reverence.

Indeed their specific practices are usually bad, but their general teachings are often good. For instance, they have very strict rules against the use of intoxicating drinks and they teach generosity in making gifts to their mosques.

Taking this religion as a whole, it seemed to us far more dangerous than the teachings of many heathen people, for its intermixture of truth with error makes it very difficult to fight against it. Another difficulty is that they claim all good teaching as their own. They even go so far as to claim Christ himself. He was just an earlier and a lesser prophet than Mohammed. This accounts, perhaps, for the fact that they live so peaceably with the Roman Catholics—but it makes them all the harder to reach, for they can not see that Christianity can do anything for them. It is one of the saddest situations we have ever met! How long will it be, we wonder, before this pall of darkness is lifted from the Orient?

Sincerely your friends,

MR. and MRS. I. W. COOPER.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Conference is here again. Another year is added to the list of the many. The mystery of the unknown is nearer the time of its unveiling. Some whom we loved and with whom we walked in fellowship "know even as they are known;" here a little child, about whose tiny form were hearts entwined; then, anon, a wife, friend, mother; a great-heart shepherd and bishop of souls immortal, of every clime, a very prince in the household of God, and one from our own company, whose manly form enshrined a soul, tender as a woman's and as knightly as any who followed the train of Arthur. Their places will be hard to fill and the world is lonelier without them.

"Such is life, and such is death.

We run about the green earth's

Patient breast—our little race

At set of sun, creep into her bosom,

And rest."

Sometime, beyond where the life which is touched and is merged into the fulness of the life to come I think there will a sunburst of glory like unto that which fell on the Damascus road, and we shall be changed.

After thirty-four years I am again amid the scenes and among friends of the past. As I arose in the pulpit on last Sunday morning, such a flood of memories rushed upon me that for a time utterance was scarcely given. Rich indeed are the lessons which the garnered years bring into the vast storehouse of memory. The true wealth of life lies here. The glory of the past pours its crystal stream into the present, and, like commingling waters, are lost in the sea of life. Memory to me is a pledge and promise of immortality. Some spirit perennial presides and abides while the years flow onward. The outer man wears away day by day and is renewed, for the keeper of the house watches the repair work until promoted to other building—a place in God's keeping.

People are getting—no, are—altogether too critical and exacting about their preachers. If a minister is wise and ignores the differences of the community and resolutely refuses to engage in the civil, ecclesiastical, or educational strifes, he is accused of being a superior being, or treating said community with contempt. If he is faithful to his ministry and rebukes meanness, selfishness, and narrow views of the kingdom, he is sure to be criticised by the busy minority who too often fancy themselves representatives of the public at large. But it is right difficult to damage the character of a faithful, efficient Methodist preacher. He is too well known and the itinerant circle in which he moves is too extensive. He is as sensitive to opposition as a waterfowl to coming storm, and can scent a move six months ahead of time. After all, moving is the saving grace of our system. If you don't believe this, ask the bishop and counsellors of the Louisiana Conference. I do not mean the P. E.'s alone. They are officers and get their full share of this unholy criticism, but the appointing power runs all along the line, and many are fingering the keys.

Aristides—was it?—was called the just, and men will ever remember him as such. Justice, fair play, righteous judgment, belong to the Christian life, but unholy, unfair criticism, not unfrequently based upon ignorance and prejudice, is of the devil.

Coushatta, La.

EVEN BETTER THINGS!

By Rev. Ben P. Jacob.

One reason why our recent Conference was a better one, is that it unanimously resolved that, after much cultivation and careful organization of each church by pastors and Centenary cabinets, there should be made a thorough personal canvass of every person for payment of Centenary pledges, beginning January 1 and continuing until all have been earnestly appealed to. The Conference desired that in each church there should be made a careful and complete statement covering all points as to need for, use, amount paid in, etc., of Centenary money.

The reason this is even better, is that out of the money collected, one-tenth comes back to this Conference and is being used to help mission preachers and charges in this Conference; and, further, that these men and charges will suffer unless we collect our pledges so as to get money to help them. If every person would pay up to date on his pledge in this Conference, the one-tenth that would be paid back to us for mission preachers would amount to twenty-six thousand dollars, or over five hundred dollars each for our mission pastors. Better things! What better thing could we preachers who get our salaries in full, pastors and presiding elders, do than go to work now and raise all Centenary pledges so these men in hard places may have what is theirs? "He that hath this world's goods and seeth his brother in need, and shutteth the bowels of his compassion against him, how dwelleth the love of God in him," is the way the Bible states the case.

We can not only do even better things, but we can do these things even better. In a few days there will come to pastors and treasurers a bulletin showing what has been paid by each church, and what is due. Let this be presented to the whole official board, and, after a careful consideration, let them organize for and make the canvass of all members. If you want information, literature, or any help I can render, write me. If the bulletin does not give the correct amount paid by your church, please let me know. I have asked all elders, pastors, and treasurers from one to three times to help me get an audit so as to correct all accounts. Only a few have replied.

I wish for you all a merry Christmas and happy New Year! Let us make it a full Christmas and plentiful new year for these mission pastors by raising the Centenary pledges and paying these men what we owe them.

PREACHERS AND MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The following is a part of the report adopted by the Mississippi Conference held at Jackson, Miss., November 30-December 5:

5. As our people are behind on the first payment, we recommend that the third week in January be set aside as the time for securing payments of the balance on these subscriptions.

6. That, if the church collectors in any charge or charges have not been appointed, they should be elected by the first quarterly conference of the ensuing year.

7. That where the original pledge cards have not been sent in to the Education Secretary, the pastor to arrange to have them sent in at an early date.

8. That we stress the necessity of securing a subscription from each member, old or young, of the church.

9. That J. M. Morse be appointed Conference Educational Secretary. Signed:

I. W. COOPER, President.

II. WALTER FEATHERSTUN, Sec'y.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Our church is doing bigger things educationally than ever before in our history. Let us thank God, take courage, and press on.

Individual subscribers can make it possible for us to reach our "goal" during Pay-Up Week, January 8 to 15, by paying their pledges up to date. Let many of those who feel able pay out in full.

It will call for sacrifices on the part of some to pay their pledges this year. But it is in sacrificial giving that we come into experiences of real fellowship with our Lord. Why not let the Educational campaign lead to a great revival in our giving for the Kingdom?

Our people should keep in mind this fact: delayed payments always add to the expense of the collection program. Therefore, now is the accepted time to do with our might what our hands find to do. Let us do our very best to reach the full quota at the appointed time.

ALBERT S. LUTZ,

Conference Secretary of Education.

THE MYSTERY OF THE SEALS.

Where do the fur-seals go in winter? It is one of Nature's secrets—a mystery as strange to-day as when the herd numbered several millions and before the demands of fashion took the merciless and excessive toll. But the depleted seal herd to-day in the great waters of the Pacific do the same as their forbears, though under closer guard and observation.

In Alaskan waters, about the first of May, the seals arrive at the islands of St. Paul and St. George and for the next four months they may be accounted for. On a day in early September, without sign or signal recognized by man, they all slip off into the ocean and disappear to parts unknown. For two-thirds of the year, they are gone on the long cruise. The prying eyes of the curious have not discovered their whereabouts, nor can the scientist tell you definitely where they go. Theirs is a mysterious itinerary, and it must be a happy voyage for them in contrast with that shorter but disastrous season when they come in contact with supposedly civilized man. In Our Dumb Animals.

Considerations of blood and not dollars should dictate the immigration policy of our country. In the long run the eugenic policy will prove the most valuable economically as well. Professor Holmes, "The Trend of the Race."

BE A SANTA CLAUS THIS CHRISTMAS.

By Luther E. Todd, Secretary.

You have been writing down the names of all the people whom you would like to remember this Christmas. Perhaps your list appears to you bigger than your purse, and you are now seeking to reduce it by erasing some of the names. An eraser is very good for some things, but when it is used to remove Christmas cheer it is in bad business. I entreat you by all that is pure and good not to rub out the "Forgotten Man." No member of your immediate family, or personal friend of any circle, is more deserving a Christmas gift from you than the superannuated preachers and widows of preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

An Ear Full For Santa. The nearly 1,000 living superannuated preachers, whom you are about to forget this holy season, built 4,000 of our churches—maybe you are pastor of one of these churches, or else a member there. They erected 1,500 parsonages—and perhaps you will have your family Christmas tree in one of these parsonages. They united in marriage 263,000 couples—did one of them tie your love knot? They conducted 410,000 funerals—was it your loved one dead? They christened 322,000 children—was your baby in the number? They led 1,000,000 souls to Christ and into His church—do you remember who performed this service for you? They went day and night visiting people who were sick or in great perplexity—do you recall the time when one of them prayed at your bedside or helped you untangle your problems? They made towns and caused business to grow therein because they organized churches and were faithful pastors to them—are you one who profited by the zeal of these prophets? You must acknowledge that these old heroes served you well. And yet you are not planning to help them this Christmas. How can you be so ungrateful? You were nearly in the act of rubbing the "Forgotten Man" from your gift list! And some of you had not even thought to put him down. If you have to forget somebody this Christmas, forget yourself.

A Heart Full For Santa. May I remind you of the conditions now existing among the nearly one thousand "Forgotten Men" whose cause I am pleading? There are 400 of them with such poor sight that they may be considered practically blind. There are 470 of them with such impaired hearing that they may be thought of as practically deaf. There are 440 of them so confined to their canes, crutches, wheelchairs, and beds, that they may be listed as practically invalids. There are 170 of them constantly shut within doors, unable to leave the bedside of some dependent invalid for more than a brief period any day. There are scores of them with their backs to the wall fighting desperately to keep their humble cottage homes from the maws of heavy mortgages. There are hundreds of them who yield their feeble and pain-racked bodies to the toil of odd jobs in order to meet high rents for poor houses and to pay unreasonable prices for insufficient food. And, withal, the church actually owes them a total of $3,000,000 salary deficit while they were active preachers in her service. Surely the God of justice and love led me to your door with this—just as you were about to scratch the "Forgotten Man" from your Christmas list, or in the nick of time to remind you that you had forgotten to put him on.

When Santa Claus Comes. Come Christmas morning, and there will be an easy stepping at your house. Nobody sleeps late. Everybody is up for breakfast—and what comes after. No cross words are spoken. The eyes of all sparkle and every face beams. Baby boy and baby girl; sons and daughters wise and otherwise, father and mother, the houseman and housegirl, everybody about the place—all quietly await that glorious thrill which riotously races through loving hearts on a Christmas morning. Daddy, I can see you when it happens, with your plumb bald head flirting with a hair or two, trying not to lose your everlasting poise in the midst of joys tingling in every nerve—even in your hair. And mother dear, never have you looked so beautiful or smiled so sweetly. And the children—but what's the use of trying to picture a lot of "kids" when it's Christmas? Breakfast over, and Santa Claus walks in. Then for two hours there is a jolly riot of good cheer, gift-making and gift-taking. It would be terrible for any member of this happy group to feel through it all a nagging pain at the heart because he failed to include the "Forgotten Man" in his Christmas list.

How To Be A Santa Claus! You are saying: "O me, what shall I do?" Do? Why man, woman, the thing to do is to remember the "Forgotten Man" this Christmas! How? Write a check for whatever amount you are able, and send it right away quick to the Board of Finance, 510-13 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., for the cause of the Superannuates. You say you are a preacher yourself. Then I know what you are—you are broke. But, my dear brother, there will be many people in your congregation Christmas Sunday who will gladly make a free-will offering for this Cause, if you will only give them the chance. Why not try it, and send the amount of the offering to the Board as stated. Maybe you are a Sunday school Superintendent—Fine! Are you near-sighted or long-seeing? What if the thought came knocking at your mind's door: "Request all the members of your school to bring a special offering on Christmas Sunday for the 'Forgotten Man' of our Methodism?" What would you do about it? Member of an Organized Sunday School Class, I'm giving you a hint—did you notice it? Epworth Leaguer, what a chance for you to get your League to do a nice thing for Christmas. Come on, folks, let us make this Christmas a real Big Joy Time.

Send all gifts and communications to the Board of Finance, 510-13 Security Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

REV. RICHMOND POLK GOAR.

Richmond Polk Goar, son of R. B. and Mary C. Goar, was born in Choctaw County, Mississippi, June 6, 1844, and died at Pittsboro, Miss., November 15, 1921. He was educated in the common schools, attaining a fair English training. He was converted at Ebenezer Camp Ground and was licensed to preach at Mt. Nebo in 1871. He was ordained as a local deacon by Bishop Doggett at Aberdeen in November, 1874, and ordained local elder by Bishop Kavanaugh at Water Valley in November, 1879. He was admitted on trial in the North Mississippi Conference at Columbus in 1880 and served the following appointments in the same Conference: 1881, Benela; 1882-3, Pittsboro; 1884-7, Mt. Vernon; 1888, Charleston; 1889-90, Horn Lake; 1891-2, Arkabutla; 1893, Mt. Vernon; 1894-7, Chester; 1898, Pleasant Grove; 1899, Paris; 1900-01, Pleasant Hill; 1902-3, Cockrum; 1904-7, Pittsboro; 1908, Bounds; 1909, Vardaman; 1910-11, Derma; 1912-13, superannuated, but served Toccoola the latter year and also in 1914; 1915, Palestine; 1916-17, Algoma. At the close of 1917 he went on the retired roll and so remained till his death.

Brother Goar was twice married, his first wife being Miss Sallie Naron, whom he married in 1866. In 1899 he was happily married to Miss Georgia Coggin, who carefully kept the home in his absence, tenderly ministered to him in his long affliction, and now survives with six of their children, mourning the absence of her beloved husband. A son and daughter of the first marriage also survive.

He was a minister of the old school, soundly converted, deeply pious, gifted in earnest exhortation and in preaching the great doctrines of salvation. He was never so happy as when engaged in holding a revival meeting, and great numbers were converted and added to the church under his ministry. Of stalwart frame and rugged and unfaltering courage, he traveled large circuits and made his way in the face of obstacles which would have discouraged a timid soul. He was a zealous and popular pastor and was returned the second and even the third period to some of his charges.

Decided and positive in his convictions, his position was never in doubt. His utmost best was esteemed none too good for the cause in which he enlisted. At the age of seventeen, he joined the Confederate army and fought through four years, suffering a severe wound at the battle of Shiloh. Though ever a lover of the "Lost Cause," he was a loyal citizen and stood for all that is best in our National life. He was diligent and thrifty, making always careful provision for his large family and leaving them at the end a neat cottage on a small tract of land which he spent his last years in developing and cultivating.

The last year of his life was one of great suffering. Attacked by acute rheumatism, he was often in great agony. He bore his affliction with Christian fortitude, anxious to depart and be with Christ, yet resigned to wait the Father's own good time for the summons. It was a benediction to visit his bedside and receive his blessing as he talked of heaven and sent his love to the absent brethren. God giveth his beloved sleep and his toilers rest. At midnight on November 15, just as his comrades of North Mississippi were gathering in their annual session at Amory for roll call, he heard and answered in the roster of the skies, and was gathered with the saints in glory everlasting. May those who miss him here so live as to meet him yonder!

J. R. COUNTESS.

PAY THOSE PLEDGES.

The future of our Louisiana Methodism depends upon our attitude to the Christian Education Movement. Our church must educate her youth or be relegated to the rear and play an uncertain part in the progress of the world's civilization.

The world's thought must be dominated by ideals that are shot through with Christianity. We need strong leaders in the pulpit, in the pew, and in the mission field. Our hope is in the Christian college. The largest per cent of our outstanding Christian leaders come from these institutions. It becomes us, then, as true, loyal Americans, to rally to our schools and pledge ourselves that Christian Education shall not perish from the earth.

Our colleges are crowded to the utmost limit of capacity. They are pressed by soaring prices and outstanding claims upon them. The question with us is: "Shall we meet our Christian Education pledge?" The first installment on nearly all the subscriptions is now due. Let the payments be made to your local church collector; or send a check to your Conference Secretary of Education, payable to the Board of Education, M. E. Church, South. We are anxious for every church to pay out in full. Yours for Centenary and Mansfield.

ALBERT S. LUTZ.

Conference Secretary of Education.

THE BOYS WE LIKE.

The Home Circle

WHEN A LAD IS DOWN.

By Willie C. Page

If you meet such a boy, give him a hand-shake of joy.

There is good in him still, if you seek his goodwill;

Just lend him a hand, and help him to stand—
Be a friend to a lad when he is down.

He may a stranger roam from his mother and home,

And be met only by cold looks and frowns;
O, don't be afraid, go at once to his aid—
Be a friend to a lad when he is down.

If for the money you've spent and the aid you've lent,

Do not place any stars in your crown,
Don't let him go wrong and be lost in the throng—
Be a friend to a lad when he is down.

He may be down and out, and gossipped about.
There is in him yet, if you will forgive and forget;

If others scorn and deride, you stand by his side—
Be a friend to a lad when he is down.

A BIG FUSS OVER NOTHING.

By Margaret Brown Elms.

Little Dorothy Mayhew had just gone to school, and the dolls were left alone in the nursery to amuse themselves. During school hours, they talked over their joys and sorrows, in their own language, and always came to the conclusion that they were one of the happiest and most fortunate doll families in existence.

On this particular morning, Priscilla, the beautiful French doll, was very much disturbed. Although she had lived in the nursery nearly two years, she was almost as good as new, because Mother Dorothy had been especially careful of her. Her long brown curls as pretty as ever; her dress was clean and not a bit shabby, and her hat was not at all mussed or faded.

In spite of all this, Priscilla was in a much distorted frame of mind this morning, and just because she had lost the bow belonging to one of her blue slippers.

"O dear!" she complained, in the doll language, "I was sure something dreadful would happen. I knew it wouldn't be long before I'd have much worse troubles than the rest of you."

"What's the matter?" inquired Eliza Jane, the doll who could really and truly say "Papa" and "Mamma."

"Matter enough!" exclaimed Priscilla. "I've lost the bow from one of my French slippers. Now, there's no use in any one telling me that Mother Dorothy can get me a new bow or another pair of slippers," she declared, as she glanced at Eliza Jane, who had already started to say something. "She can buy slippers, I'll admit, but they wouldn't be as good as these. When I was dressed in the French Shop in New York City, they were very particular about having my shoes and stockings match my dress and hat. So, Eliza Jane, if I should get a new pair, they would not be the right shade. Besides, I'd rather have these, for several reasons."

"I wouldn't worry about it, Priscilla, if I were you," Eliza Jane replied, in her quiet way. "You may be right, but I feel positive that Mother Dorothy can buy another pair of slippers just like those. And there is a possibility of our finding that bow, anyway."

"What does a 'pos-si-bil-ity' look like?" asked Priscilla, in a discouraged tone. "I never saw one."

Some dolls would have laughed at poor Priscilla's mistake, but Eliza Jane did nothing of the kind. "I mean that there is a chance of our finding it," she explained very graciously; "that it is possible that the bow is not lost at all."

"Well, if there is a 'possibility,' it's a very small one," Priscilla declared, in a much grieved tone.

"Let's look around," suggested Eliza Jane, as she glanced under the dolls' bed-hammock. "I feel positive that that bow is safely tucked away somewhere, and that we shall soon see it on darling Priscilla's slipper again."

"You always look on the bright side, Eliza Jane," Priscilla remarked. "How do you manage to do it?"

"I try to do so, but I'm sorry to say that I don't always succeed," Eliza Jane admitted. "But what is the use of worrying about a thing until it happens? Can you tell me?"

"But this thing has really happened! I guess if you had lost a nice bow off one of your stylish slippers, and you were miles and miles away from New York City, you'd be worried, too," replied Priscilla.

"Oh, maybe, but let's hunt for it right away," Eliza Jane proposed. "We'll never find it sitting here and worrying about it, that's sure. And while we are looking, let's be cheerful and happy, and think that we are going to succeed."

Priscilla tried in vain to smile, as she looked under the chairs and in the bureau drawers. She could not see the bright side at all—she was sure that her slipper was spoiled, and that it would never be any different.

Suddenly Eliza Jane exclaimed: "Oh, there is Mother Dorothy! She will be so sorry for Priscilla! Let's see if we can't find that bow before she gets here."

Almost immediately every doll in the nursery was scampering about trying to follow Eliza Jane's suggestion.

Then Mother Dorothy appeared in the doorway. "Oh, you darling Priscilla!" she exclaimed. "No wonder my children could not find your lost bow! I had it in my pocket all the time. You see, it came off your slippers last night, just before I went to bed, so I couldn't sew it on. But I shall do so at once," she promised, as she sat down with a needle and thread in her plump little hand.

In a minute or two, the bow was sewed carefully in place, and Priscilla's troubles were over.

Eliza Jane said nothing, but smiled very sweetly. She was so glad that everybody was happy again, and that dear Priscilla had nothing to worry about!

After Mother Dorothy left the room, Priscilla turned to Eliza Jane and said: "It seems that you are always right. Hereafter, I'm going to try not to worry about anything until I have something really to worry about."

"That's right," agreed Eliza Jane. "It doesn't do any good to worry. And besides, things usually are not half so bad as they appear to be."—In Zion's Herald.

THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.

An Allegory.

Mankind was one day wildly pursuing a beautiful, untamed horse, when he chanced upon Unselfishness sitting by the wayside.

"You seem in a great hurry," said Unselfishness.

"Yes, I am," replied Mankind. "Life tells me that I may have that beautiful horse, whose name is Happiness, for my own if I can but catch it. Once or twice I have seemed on the point of doing so, but it always eludes me. A little while ago I met Selfishness, and he told me that if I persevered I was certain to catch it in the end."

"You have been deceived," said Unselfishness. "And you have not got the name of the horse quite correctly, either. That horse is Individual Happiness, and the more you pursue it the farther it gallops away from you."

"Then I shall never catch it," said Mankind, sadly.

"There is a way," replied Unselfishness, thoughtfully.

"Oh, tell me, please tell me," pleaded Mankind, eagerly.

"You see that building over there on your right?" asked Unselfishness.

"Yes," Mankind replied, wonderingly.

"That is a stable," said Unselfishness. "It is called 'The Happiness of Others,' and it is the place where that horse belongs. The faster you run after it, the farther you are frightening it away from its rightful place."

"Then what am I to do?" asked Mankind.

"Go into that stable," replied Unselfishness, "and settle yourself down there; and in a very short time you will find that the untamed animal will come of its own accord and eat out of your hand."

And it was even as Unselfishness had said.—C. M. S., Free Christian Evangelist.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. W. Perry has been cordially received on the Rochelle-Standard charge, Louisiana Conference, and he finds a promising field for a good year's work.

A note from the presiding elder, Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., informs us that the work is beginning well on the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, for another year.

We have received a neat card announcing the birth, on Friday, Nov. 25, of a daughter to Rev. and Mrs. A. J. Martin, St. Martinsville, La. Blessings upon the little one!

The good people of Jonestown, Miss., began "pounding" their new pastor, Rev. A. R. Beasley, as soon as he arrived, which indicates that the new Conference year is beginning most auspiciously on that charge.

Rev. J. W. York and family, of the North Mississippi Conference, found a warm supper awaiting them on their arrival at their new home, New Albany, Miss., and they are greatly pleased with the outlook for the year.

Rev. A. C. McCorkle was warmly received on his return for another year by the good people of Como, Miss. The pastor's salary has been increased $200, and large congregations are attending the services of the church.

Rev. D. R. McDougal has been most kindly received on the Corinth circuit, to which he was appointed at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference. He serves a noble people, and the outlook for the year is encouraging.

We learn through a friend that Rev. O. W. Bradley, recently transferred from the North Mississippi Conference and appointed to Alexandria, La., has been cordially received on his new charge, and that the year's work is beginning most auspiciously.

On account of the amount of space required for reporting the proceedings of the Annual Conferences, several communications will appear in the Advocate later than would have been the case otherwise. We will do our best to get back to normal as soon as possible.

Rev. W. A. Mangum has made a fine beginning on the work of the new Conference year at Queensborough Methodist Church, Shreveport, La. Four new members have been received since Conference, and the forces of the church are organized for aggressive work.

It is nearly always difficult to select a Christmas present for some friend or loved one whom we have in mind to be remembered at this happy season. A subscription to the New Orleans Christian Advocate at $2 a year would be a happy solution of the problem in many cases.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives has issued a statement to the effect that of the four hundred and thirty-five members of the House, only six answered to every roll call during the extra session of Congress just brought to a close. Two of these were from Mississippi—Quin and Rankin.

Our church at Como, Miss., recently suffered a great loss in the death of Mr. W. B. Taylor, one of its most influential members. For many years he was a steward, serving in that capacity until forced by ill-health to give up active work. We extend sincere sympathy to those who are in sorrow because of his going away.

A note from Rev. S. L. Pope, presiding elder of the Greenwood District, North Mississippi Conference, informs us that his daughter, Eloise, had recently been brought home from Martha Washington College, Abingdon, Va., to undergo an operation at the Memphis Methodist Hospital. She was resting well at the time the note was written, and we earnestly pray that she may soon be restored to health.

Rapid progress is being made on the tabernacle being erected for the Gypsy Smith meeting to be held in New Orleans during January, and all arrangements are being perfected for what is expected to be a great revival campaign. The building will seat about 6000 people, and it is most conveniently located on Clio Street, between Prytania Street and St. Charles Avenue. A choir of 1500 voices is being organized for service during the meeting.

Announcement has been made that the building committee of the Court Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., which was recently destroyed by fire, has bought a lot at the corner of Court Street and Southern Avenue. The parsonage will be moved from its present site to the new location, and the work of rebuilding the new church will be begun as soon as practicable. A larger structure than the old one will be erected in order to meet the requirements of the growing congregation.

Rev. R. H. Harper, the efficient Secretary of the Louisiana Annual Conference, laid on our desk, on last Saturday, a copy of the Annual of the Louisiana Conference, just from the press. At the recent session of the Conference the Secretary was made editor of the Annual, and was requested by the Conference to arrange for its publication as early as practicable. How well he has served the Conference is attested by the above statement. The Annual is most conveniently arranged, and splendidly printed, and it is a credit to the painstaking and accurate Secretary. Congratulations!

A royal welcome was accorded Rev. J. L. Greenway upon his return from the Conference at Jackson to the Mount Olive and Magee charge for the second year. He was met at the train by a delegation of his people with automobiles and taken to the parsonage, where a bountiful supper was spread, and the pantry generously supplied with good things to eat for days to come. A most enjoyable evening was spent and pastor and people rejoiced together. This kind regard on the part of this people opens the way for a good year, as it unites the hearts of pastor and people. The outlook for the year is full of promise.

Rev. C. F. Smith, of the Texas Conference, writes: "The first church paper I read when a boy was the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Though I have been for three dozen years out of its territory, I have continued to read it. Through its columns I have kept up with things and people dear to me in early life." Brother Smith has many friends in Mississippi who still count him as one of their "very own." At the recent session of the Texas Conference he was changed from Lufkin to Pittsboro, one of the strong charge of the Conference, having a most excellent church building, a splendid parsonage, and a membership of about seven hundred.

We are glad to be able to report that Rev. Ellis Smith, pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, who was painfully injured in an automobile accident on Nov. 30, is gradually recovering from the effects of his injuries and that he will probably be able to leave the Touro Infirmary this week. His pulpit was filled last Sunday morning by Rev. Robt. W. Vaughan, Superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, and in the evening by Rev. W. C. Childress, Superintendent of City Missions.

Through the kindness of Brother A. M. Mayo, of Lake Charles, La., we received recently a copy of the "Building Edition" of the Lake Charles American-Press. It was full of interesting information concerning the splendid city which it so creditably represents. Much space was given in this special edition to the church interests of the city, the work of our own church being treated at length. A cut of the proposed new church building shows that it will be one of the most imposing and attractive in the State.

The editor of the Advocate had the pleasure of spending several hours last Sunday with Dr. A. J. Weeks, editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, who was passing through the city en route to Lakeland, Florida, to attend the annual meeting of the Southern Methodist Press Association. He also had the pleasure of a conversation over the telephone with Dr. W. H. Nelson, editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, who was likewise en route to Lakeland. The editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will not be able to attend the meeting of the Press Association on account of the serious illness of his mother.

At the recent sessions of our patronizing Conferences, in response to statements concerning the business affairs of the Advocate made by members of the Publishing Committee, the following pledges were made of subscriptions to be secured as early in the new Conference year as possible: Louisiana Conference, 1701; North Mississippi Conference, 1258; Mississippi Conference, 1300. These pledges were made with every show of earnestness and evident determination to carry them into effect immediately. Already some of the brethren have sent in lists to be counted on their quotas, and we are sure that the Advocate will soon begin its weekly visits to many new homes. That it will be a blessing to those homes we confidently believe.

Henry Leon, the indispensable colored man connected with the Advocate office, whom many of our friends have had occasion to observe diligently at work in mailing the paper and otherwise assisting in keeping things in order, had the misfortune last week to lose practically all his household effects by a fire that destroyed the house in which he was living. He has been working for the Advocate management sixteen years, and he has an unblemished record of faithfulness and trustworthiness. Without knowledge on his part that we are doing any such thing, we are venturing to suggest that perhaps some of the readers of the Advocate would be glad to make a cash contribution to this faithful workman to help him refurbish his home. The editor will be glad to receive and turn over to Henry all such contributions.

The tract, "Why I Am a Methodist," written and compiled by Rev. H. H. Smith, our pastor at Atlee, Va., is now in the sixth edition, more than 100,000 copies having been sold during the past five years. It may be had of the author for 5 cents a copy, or $4 per hundred, postpaid.

Rev. R. S. Lawson has reached his new charge, Sturgis, Miss., and has entered hopefully upon his work.

Rev. W. J. Wood and family met with a kind reception on arrival at their new home, Oakland, Miss., the ladies giving them a "pounding" and showing them many marks of appreciation.

Rev. R. V. Fulton was kindly received on his return for the second year to the Farmerville charge, Louisiana Conference. He writes that the prospect is good for substantial progress this year.

Rev. M. A. Burns writes from Macon, Miss., that he has been cordially received on the Macon circuit, and that the good people are showing him many marks of kindness. The outlook is encouraging.

Rev. Henry P. Lewis, our pastor at Booneville, Miss., in a personal note to the editor, speaks most kindly of the good people among whom he has been appointed to labor, their reception of him having been a royal one. The outlook for the year is bright.

Rev. A. M. Shaw, writing of his new appointment, Oakdale, La., says: "I have spent one week—two delightful Sundays—with the Oakdale people. The church is in good shape; all organizations functioning efficiently; outlook excellent, and every prospect pleases."

A note from Rev. J. C. Price, our newly-appointed pastor at Jonesboro, La., brings us the distressing news that Rev. J. H. Brown, an honored superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference, suffered a stroke of paralysis on Nov. 30, as a result of which he is totally disabled on his left side from the waist down. He is not suffering, and is cheerful under his affliction. He is greatly beloved in the community. Brother Brown will have the sympathy and prayers of his brethren in his misfortune.

Rev. J. C. Price has been cordially received on his new charge, Jonesboro, La., and the work of the new year starts off nicely. He writes that he will secure as quickly as possible the twenty subscriptions pledged by him at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference. Knowing his record in other places, we are sure he will reach his goal.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

C. A. Battle, presiding elder of the Lake Charles District of the Louisiana Conference, has surrendered his credentials, and withdrawn from the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Rev. J. Bloss Williams, pastor at Rayne, La., has been appointed presiding elder of the Lake Charles District.

Rev. J. B. Douglass, who has been the efficient assistant at First Church, Shreveport, for several months, has been appointed pastor of the church at Rayne, La.

Bishop in Charge.

THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER HONORED BY THE CHURCH.

By Rev. E. O. Watson,
Secretary of the Washington Committee of the Federal Council of Churches.

When "the Unknown Soldier" lay in solemn state in the rotunda of the National Capitol on November 10, while his fellow-countrymen and the representatives of the great powers of the world were paying him such honor as emperor and princes seldom know, the first tribute was paid by the churches of America.

Through the courtesy of government officials, the Federal Council of the Churches, in behalf of thirty Protestant denominations, was assigned the first place in the program of the day in honor of the heroic dead. A brief service was held at the bier at 8 o'clock, attended by a delegation from the Washington Committee of the Federal Council and the churches of the city. Thus it fittingly happened that the first floral offering, the first words of prayer and the first tribute of honor were tendered in the name of the Christian church. The delegation left as its floral tribute an American flag of immortelles surmounted by a white cross of carnations. This offering was presented by Rev. Gaylord S. White and Rev. F. Paul Langhorne, Secretary and Associate Secretary of the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains during the war.

The prayer by Bishop William F. McDowell, the Chairman of the Washington Committee of the Federal Council, expressed in exalted language the spirit of the church in the momentous hour which we now face. Through this petition the whole voice of the church to-day seemed to be heard. He said in part:

"Almighty God, the Father of men and nations, we give Thee praise and thanks for all those who have bravely lived, nobly died, and offered the last, full measure of devotion to human welfare. We thank Thee most of all for the life and death of thy Son Jesus Christ in behalf of mankind. In His name we gratefully bless Thee for this soldier of the Republic, this representative of all the 'Unknown dead,' whose names we cannot speak but whose imperishable valor and heroic sacrifice written on high can never be forgotten.

"And help us, oh God, our Father, to 'carry on' for the world's peace and redemption. May our devotion be no less than his whom the nation to-day highly honors. May the churches of Christ, which did not fail in time of war, not falter now in their effort for peace.

"In memory of this 'Unknown Soldier,' may we firmly resolve that the purpose of his death shall not fail in the earth; and in the tragedy of his death and the death of other millions like him, may we resolve that war among men shall be no more.

"Guide the Council now to meet that it may perfectly fulfill the highest purpose for which this man and his comrades have given their precious lives."

The address was made by Rev. William Adams Brown, who rendered such notable service as Secretary of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches. His remarks brought new meaning to the verse: "As unknown, and yet well-known, as dying and behold we live." Dr. Brown spoke in part as follows:

"In the spirit of unity and faith, grateful to God for past guidance and protection, we, representatives of the Protestant Christians of America, bring to this historic spot our tribute of affection and pride. Center and symbol of our national life, this place is consecrated anew by the valor and devotion of our beloved dead, whom this unknown soldier represents.

"In this solemn hour deep calls to deep; patriotism is answered by religion. Gratefully will we cherish, resolutely will we guard this well loved land, our spiritual mother, home of the patriots to whose vigilant courage and unstinted sacrifice we owe our liberty as a nation.

"But we dare not forget, least of all at this hour and in this place, that patriotism alone is not enough. Servants of the Prince of Peace, we are called to a wider citizenship, a fellowship in which all the peoples of mankind may share.

"In the Kingdom of God, which is the brotherhood of men of good-will of every land and race, those who were once enemies may find in work for the common weal, reconciliation and peace.

"In this faith we welcome those who have come to us from across the sea, to join with us in seeking a better way. To this larger service, this higher patriotism, we now rededicate ourselves, in the unconquerable hope that in spite of every obstacle we shall attain at last the goal for which these heroes gave their lives—a warless world.

God forbid that we should fail them in this hour of our opportunity."

At the conclusion of the address the delegations spontaneously began singing "America," in which the general public, which had now begun to throng the rotunda, joined.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES.

January 1-January 7, 1922.

To the Churches of Christ in America:

In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, we again invite you to unite in the fellowship of prayer and intercession during the first week (January 1 to 7) of 1922.

A world situation of great complexity still must be faced. A new world is being born. East and West the nations of the earth are in turmoil and trouble. There is deep social unrest, severe economic difficulties and widespread distress. Nation has risen against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; there have been famines and earthquakes in divers places.

At such a time we need to come very humbly to our Lord with the petition that He will "teach us how to pray." We cannot be content with words and forms; we need the right spirit and the gift of power. It has been sorrowfully said, not by an enemy, but by a friend, "The church has not yet discovered, still less begun to realize, the limitless possibilities of intercession." Can we pray as Elijah did on Carmel, or our Lord in the Garden? Can we pray so that Heaven is opened, the Holy Ghost descends, and the voice of God is heard? Let us not be content until we have discovered the secret of prevailing prayer.

During the past year there has been world-wide enquiry amongst the disciples of Christ as to the possibility of closer outward and visible unity. We have found that many practical difficulties beset the path of those who are most anxious to find the right way, but prayer will be answered.

Meanwhile we rejoice that we can unite wholeheartedly in bowing at the Throne of Grace. We remember that special promises are given with respect to united prayer. We live busy lives, but careful husbandry of our time will give us full opportunity not only for secret waiting on God, but for coming together with one heart and one mind to make our requests known to Him. On all such assemblies in the Name of Christ, whether large or small, in whatever land, may the power of the Holy Spirit be richly poured forth.

Yours in the fellowship of Christ,

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA.

GOD LOVES US.

God loves us all even when we are very bad. There would be no hope for us if he did not. He loves us just because we are human beings, and his children. A man named "Davidson" was once convicted and ordered transported. Before he was sent away from England, his mother, who lived at Dundee, in Scotland, tramped five hundred and seventy miles, living on a pennyworth of potatoes a day, to see him in prison. On her awful journey she sold all the little things she had; but she managed to keep one present, which he had asked for, a Testament. She arrived nearly dead with exhaustion, but she kissed him and comforted him and gave him his present. God loves us more than any mother.—Selected.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. H. J. Boltz, Simsboro, La., 2; Rev. W. M. Young, Leland, Miss., 4; Rev. Leland Clegg, Logansport, La., 2; Rev. W. A. Mangum, Shreveport, La., 2; Rev. T. W. Lewis, Memphis, Tenn., 2; Rev. W. H. Lane, Lauderdale, Miss., 3; Rev. I. T. Reames, Vivian, La., 14; Rev. B. B. Jacob, Winona, Miss., 6; Rev. R. V. Fulton, Farmerville, La., 2; Rev. P. M. Caraway, Sicily Island, 2; Rev. S. H. Caffey, Macon, Miss., 2.

Obituaries

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

On November 23, 1920, in the quietness of the early morning hours, from the home of her only daughter, Mrs. John T. Clark, Columbus, Mississippi, there went home to Heaven one of earth's sweetest saints, Mrs. CORNELIA BRYAN AUST. She was born in Kemper County, Mississippi, at the old Bryan home, south of Binnsville, May 19, 1852. In the year 1872, she was married to Robert Andrew (Tanny) Moore. To this union was born one daughter, Mrs. John T. Clark, of Columbus, Miss. Her husband died in 1880. In the autumn of 1882, she was married to Mr. S. J. Aust, who died in July, 1917. She joined the old Chapman Methodist Church when just a girl. She was a pure, sweet, consecrated Christian. She was kind, gentle and affectionate. She was doing little acts of service for her loved ones and friends. She was a true and tried friend and a good neighbor. The sweet smile on her face and the touch of her gentle hand made her loved ones realize their welcome more than any number of words could have done. She had only one child of her own, but she was a mother to Ernest Aust, a nephew of her second husband, who was left an orphan when a little boy. She loved Ernest and he loved her. She loved her home. Her child, her grandchildren with a devotion that was beautiful. Her love for her son-in-law was quite unusual. They were devoted to each other. Her loved ones missed the opportunity of nursing her just before she went away, as she was taken home without being sick; but her loved ones know that she is waiting at the beautiful gate for every one of us. She is one more link in the beautiful golden chain that is binding us more firmly to the heavenly home.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

ALBERT S. COLTHARP.

This most worthy citizen, after a lingering illness, passed from amongst us at an early hour Tuesday morning. Mr. Coltharp was born some 70 years ago at Rocky Spring, Miss. He came to Madison Parish about 1871, and at once took a prominent place among its citizens, engaging in planting and the mercantile business. He was President of the Fifth District Levee Board for more than 20 years. He was a just, honest and upright man, would rather give than take, was one of nature's noblemen, and many, both white and black, have cause to remember him. What was mortal was laid to rest at 3:30 p.m., Tuesday, followed by his loved ones and many sorrowing friends, who will miss his happy greetings. The funeral was conducted from the residence by Rev. Mr. Harrel. He leaves surviving him his wife, Mrs. Lelia Coltharp (nee Downs), two brothers, Mr. Chas. Coltharp, of Tallulah, and Mr. M. H. Coltharp, of Oklahoma, and sister, Mrs. J. T. Dale, of Tallulah, who have the sympathy of many friends.—Madison (La.) Journal.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas it has pleased God in his unending wisdom to call unto himself AUBREY YOUNGBLOOD, the president of our class, and whereas we are thankful for the memory of his willingness to assist us, therefore

Be it resolved, by the Intermediate Class of the Nebo Sunday School, that we are sorely bereaved in the loss of our friend and associate;

That his life, though cut off before he had reached the age of maturity, was a joy to his class and the younger boys of the Sunday school;

That we desire to assure the family of our deepest sympathy.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to his parents, and one presented to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

FROM KENTWOOD, LA.

Dear Advocate: We received our appointment with the other brethren Sunday night, and arrived in our new home the following Thursday. We found the good women in the parsonage, with a nicely cooked supper and everything as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. We have been kindly received. It seems to us the outlook for a "Good year, Bishop," is promising. Have had large congregations at every service since coming here.

Last Sunday we observed the Sacrament and had a "Children's Service."

At this hour we baptized fifteen children. Four of the largest children and a young married man united with the church. We have the promise of fifteen more for another children's service in the near future. The house was decorated and there was special music for the occasion.

We have a prosperous League and Missionary Society; one hundred and seven were in the Sunday school last Sunday.

We feel the "lines have fallen to us in pleasant places."

Greetings to the brethren. Pray for us.

EMORY UNIVERSITY CLUB.

The former students of Emory University, in the Mississippi Annual Conference, met during the session of the Conference at Jackson, Miss., and formed themselves into a club, for the purpose of promoting fellowship among themselves, increasing interest in Emory University, and encouraging those who attend the University from the Mississippi Conference to return to their home Conference to labor.

The officers of the club are: J. W. Chisholm, President; J. L. Ferguson, Chairman, Executive Committee; J. H. Jolly, Vice-President; J. L. Carter, Recording Secretary; J. W. O'Neil, Corresponding Secretary; J. B. Stringer, Treasurer.

J. W. O'NEIL,

Corresponding Secretary.

SPIRIT OF FRATERNITY.

Rev. J. A. Hall has returned from Amory, where he attended the North Mississippi Conference, which convened in that city. Brother Hall had rounded out his second year's pastorate in this city, not only in high favor and esteem with his own people, but with people generally, of the city.

He occupies the position of dean in the pastors' union in the city and the members of the various churches are very much pleased over the spirit of love and harmony prevailing among the denominations.

The return of Brother Hall to the pastorate of the First Methodist Church has found high favor with the people and the outlook for continued growth, efficiency and fraternity is encouraging.—Tupelo (Miss.) Review.

THE RETIREMENT OF DR. BULLA.

Dr. Charles D. Bulla, who for eleven years has been one of the most useful and influential of our Sunday school workers, gave up his office as Corresponding Secretary of the General Sunday School Board the first of October in order to take work under Bishop DuBose in the Pacific Conference. His going is a great loss to our Sunday school force. He was loved and honored by all of his co-workers. Perhaps, however, there is no other among them by whom he will be so sorely missed as by the Sunday School Editor, to whom through all the years of their association in service he has been a tender and loving friend and a wise counselor.

Dr. Bulla did not leave the Sunday school work because he did not love it or regard it as of the very highest importance, but solely because he believes there is a great need and a great opportunity for service in the West. He spent a part of his youth in California, and his thoughts have ever turned toward that land of romantic associations. He goes back to it in the full strength of his manhood in the spirit of a true missionary to give to it the benefit of the wisdom and experience he has gathered in these years of faithful service. He will still give a part of his time to the promotion of Sunday school work.

Blessings upon him in his new field!

Attention, Auxiliaries!

At your December meeting you elected new officers for 1922.

What is the next step?

First—Send a complete list of the names of your officers, with the correct post-office and street addresses, to your district secretary and to the Conference Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, 7926 Elm Street, New Orleans, La.

Third—Send the name of your Superintendent of Mission Study to Mrs.

If Your Trouble Is Scrofula

As Often Acquired as Inherited,

You have eruptions and sores, and perhaps enlarged glands of the neck. This blood disease affects the internal organs, especially the lungs, and if neglected may develop into consumption.

It causes many troubles, and is aggravated by impure air, unwholesome food, bad water, too much heat or cold, and want of proper exercise.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the blood-purifying medicine that has been used with so much satisfaction by three generations, is wonderfully successful in the treatment of scrofula. Give it a trial.

If a cathartic or laxative is needed, take Hood's Pills.

OLD AT 30 OR YOUNG AT 60?

The choice is largely up to you. If your blood lacks red corpuscles, you're going to be fagged and dragged out, you're going to lack "pep," to look sallow and unhealthy, to grow old before your time.

DR. MILES' TONIC

actually increases the number of red corpuscles in the blood. It makes the cheeks plump and rosy, stimulates the digestive organs, creates a healthy appetite, and leads to increased vigor and vitality. First bottle guaranteed to help you or money refunded.

ASK YOUR DRUGGIST

W. T. Cunningham, Natchitoches, La., that she may send you the Bulletin.

Fourth—Send the name of your Superintendent of Young People to Mrs. B. F. Key, 2607 Highlands, Shreveport, La.; and your Superintendent of Children's Work to Mrs. Elma Drew, Mansfield, La.

Fifth—Send the name of your Superintendent of Social Service to Mrs. W. W. Holmes, Lake Charles, La.

Sixth—Send the name of your Superintendent of Supplies to Mrs. H. L. Baker, Plattenville, La.

Seventh—Send the name of your Treasurer to Mrs. C. C. Carver, Rayne, La.

MISS DAISY DAVIES IN CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

A letter from Mrs. Collyer, from Prague, states that Miss Daisy Davies, who has been doing relief and evangelistic work in Poland and Czechoslovakia for some months, has organized in Prague the first Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church in that country. This society has a membership of three hundred women. The Polish evangelist, Rev. Joseph Dobes, writes of Miss Davies: "Her address was a great inspiration to our women. She is a real prophetess of the Lord. Her message is scriptural, simple, enlightening, practical. She has been a great blessing to our organization."

No woman of our church has meant more to the organized woman's work than Miss Davies, and we are happy to give the Methodist women of this far-away country the benefit of her wonderfully helpful presence.—Bulletin.

MRS. C. T. COLLYER IN PRAGUE.

Mrs. C. T. Collyer, formerly Miss Arrena Carroll, a missionary of the Woman's Missionary Council in Korea, now of Prague, Czechoslovakia, has accepted the responsibility of translating the literature of the Woman's Missionary Council into the Czech language for the newly organized auxiliaries of that country.

While in Korea Mrs. Collyer rendered invaluable service in the preparation of the program material for the missionary society of Korea, and we rejoice to hear that she is to continue this helpful work in the new field.—Bulletin.

MISS WYNN IN CUBA.

Miss Norwood E. Wynn, evangelistic missionary to Mexico, has been allocated for two months to Cuba, at the request of the Cuba Mission. Miss Wynn is visiting the educational institutions in our work on the island and is organizing Student Volunteer Bands. She is also organizing Woman's Missionary Societies in some of the congregations.—Bulletin.

THE WOMEN OF JAPAN DO NOT WANT WAR.

Madam K. Yakima, the President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Japan, came all the way to Washington with a petition signed by 12,000 women saying that the women of Japan do not want war. What are you doing for disarmament?—Council Bulletin.

CRISES IN THE COLLEGES.

In an Annual Conference which met recently, it was found that one of our most worthy institutions of learning faced immediate death. It had behind it a half a century of honorable service, but it had not been able to weather the severe storms of the past year of high prices.

Without a president, burdened with debt, struggling in vain against poverty, it had reached the point of extinction. Yet there was no lack of students, no dearth of need. Indeed, the unanimous sentiment of the whole Conference is that this one college is an absolute necessity to our church in that section.

Desperate efforts were made to save it. The preachers themselves paid enough money to run it through this year, and a commission was created to ascertain if there might be a method of staving off the final tragedy. But even the members of this commission have little hope.

This Conference raised but one-third of its quota in the Christian Education Movement. The money that was pledged has not yet been paid. Consequently the noble college—the only one in this Conference—must die. Here is ample proof that the Christian Education Movement means life or death to the institutions of the church, for there is not a Conference in which a similar situation does not pertain.

The time is at hand when the first installment of the pledges of this great Movement must be paid. Everywhere the schools have kept themselves alive by dint of extreme sacrifice, waiting for this time to come. If the promised funds are immediately forthcoming, they will be saved. Otherwise, the tragedy in the Conference we have mentioned will be repeated all over the church.

What will our Methodist people do about it? There can be but one answer to such a question. It is inconceivable that they will permit, by delay or remissness, the closing of colleges which have produced the men who made Methodism what it is. We have pledged our sacred word of honor. We have consecrated a portion of our funds to the sacred cause of Christian Education. Now let us all with one accord perform the promises we have made and come to the immediate rescue of our schools so sorely pressed.—Christian Education Commission.

Christian faith is a grand cathedral with dimly pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory, nor can possibly imagine any; standing within, every ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakable splendors.—Hawthorne.

Contentment, unalloyed happiness, and perfect peace is in the end the never-failing legacy of a strict obedience to the voice of conscience.—Exchange.

Ends Stubborn Coughs in a Hurry

For real effectiveness, this old home-made remedy has no equal.
Easily and cheaply prepared.

You'll never know how quickly a bad cough can be conquered, until you try this famous old home-made remedy. Anyone who has coughed all day and all night, will say that the immediate relief given is almost like magic. It is very easily prepared, and there is nothing better for coughs.

Into a pint bottle, put 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, the full pint saves about two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, and gives you a more positive, effective remedy. It keeps perfectly, and tastes pleasant—children like it.

You can feel this take hold instantly, soothing and healing the membranes in all the air passages. It promptly loosens a dry, tight cough, and soon you will notice the phlegm thin out and disappear. A day's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and it is also splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness, and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, the most reliable remedy for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

WHAT WILL LOUISIANA METHODISTS DO?

The Centenary "Pay-Up Campaign" should result in the Louisiana Conference going to, at least, near the head of the list of Conferences in percentage of its Centenary pledge paid. To December 1 the Louisiana Conference had paid on individual pledges to the Centenary $249,083.83. Including Sunday school and Epworth League payments, the total is nearly $270,000. The Conference has paid 33 per cent of its pledge, as against 60 per cent due. Louisiana Conference Methodists will not be satisfied to let this low percentage stand. They have their opportunity to bring this percentage to nearly the figure that will mean "100 per cent paid" that is to reach the 60 per cent standard.

It is not too late to have some share in making "Pay-Up Week" what it ought to be. If you cannot pay the full amount due on your pledge, make the largest payment possible. Help your local church, your Conference, the church to which you belong, to make a showing that will do credit to Southern Methodism. Better still, help forward the great missionary enterprises that wait on the payment of Centenary pledges.

FROM LAUDERDALE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: The good Bishop saw fit to send us back to this charge for 1922, and the good people gave us a warm reception. They met us with kind words and handshakes, and, as a token of their kindness, they sent to the parsonage flour, meat, lard, coffee, sugar, rice and many other good things to eat. They placed a nice six-eye cooking stove just before Conference (I would have told you about the stove before Conference, but I knew some other preacher's wife would want to come to this charge). Blessed are the people who furnish their pastor's wife with a good cooking stove! And blessed are the people who furnish the pastor's wife with plenty to cook!

We have started out with renewed energy to do more for the salvation of the unsaved and the upbuilding of God's Kingdom. This is a nice work now. We have just Lauderdale and Electric Mills, and a finer people cannot be found anywhere. Pray for us that we may do a great work for the church of God this year.

W. H. LANE, P. C.

FROM CRAWFORD, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We arrived in Crawford, our new home, last Wednesday. We found a nice, warm room ready for us at the parsonage. As we drove up, several of the good ladies met us at the door, saying, "Welcome to the parsonage." They invited us in and showed us over the house. When we reached the dining room, we found a large table, piled high with good things to eat, such as sugar, coffee, rice, eggs, butter, milk, preserves, etc., too numerous to mention. We have tried to thank them, but words are not at our command to express our appreciation for such kindness. After viewing the house, we were invited to the home of Brother G. P. Waller for dinner, where we spent a very pleasant hour before returning to the parsonage.

We have a live Sunday school and a fine people. Please change my paper from Rienzi, Miss., to Crawford, Miss., as I do not want to miss a single copy.

Fraternally,

R. G. A. CARLISLE.

CARD OF THANKS.

Through your paper we want to express our gratitude to the members and friends of the Methodist Church at South Side for the shower they gave us the night of the 7th. About 7 o'clock, a number of people met at the parsonage, where we had a very pleasant time socially for an hour or two. After they left, we took an invoice and found there were more good things to eat, such as sugar, coffee, flour, fruit, canned goods, and a number of other things too numerous to mention, than this preacher had seen in a long, long time, for which we want to express our sincere thanks; and we pray the blessings of the Master on each one of you.

Sincerely yours,

J. D. BOGGS and WIFE.

Good Looks Follow Good Health

Saratoga, Texas—"A year ago I tried several different medicines, but kept getting worse, and felt that I never would have good health again. I became so poor and weak I could hardly do my housework. I suffered from loss of appetite, headache, constipation, shortness of breath, also functional disturbances. Sometimes I would have spells of indigestion and weak sick spells and thought I would die. I never expected to be well any more. At last I wrote to Dr. Pierce and he advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Pellets (sold by druggists) and now I can truthfully say I am in better health than I have been for several years. I advise all women suffering as I did to take Dr. Pierce's medicines. If there are any medicines on earth that will help women who are broken-down in health, these will."—Mrs. Winnie Comer.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The reports of the preachers show we had an increase of 5000 in our Sunday schools the past year. Let us reach out for as many more the coming year. Organize your adult and young peoples' classes for this purpose and the work will be done. When we enroll as many people in our Sunday schools, as we have church members, we can say, "A good year, Bishop," and tell the truth. Unless we care for all our people, we are poor shepherds. The reports further show that 1878 were received into the church from the Sunday schools. The schools raised $7000 on the Centenary fund. For the benefit of our own children, on Sunday School Day we raised about $1500. For all purposes the schools raised more than $52,000. The offering on Sunday School Day ought to be double the amount contributed the past year, and it will be.

Leave off the work of teaching and training the Sunday schools are doing, and what will become of the church in ten years? On the other hand, reach every man, woman, and child that we ought to reach and see the progress we shall make in establishing the kingdom of God. Think of it, men, we are teaching only 36 per cent of the people in Mississippi in our Sunday schools. What kind of teaching are those who are not in our schools receiving? We have a right to rejoice over what has been done; but we ought to weep over and pray much over what is to be done.

The last session of our Conference passed a resolution, at the request of the Sunday School Board, asking for the entire offering from all the Sunday schools the fifth Sunday in January. The Conference was not willing to increase the small assessment for our Sunday school work; we must therefore call upon the schools to help us go forward. The offering is to be used in the districts where it is raised. It is to be used in establishing the Four-Times-a-Year circuit institutes, teacher-training classes, and district teacher-training schools, and the district organization. The offering is to be sent to Rev. J. E. Stephens, Treasurer, Grenada, Miss.

The church at Sardis has taken a forward step. The expense of the school is put in the budget for the year. The school is left free to contribute to all the enterprises of the church. Thus the entire church will be taught that the offering is a means of worship, what the assessments are for; definite information will be given. It is not poverty that keeps some churches from paying what they owe the Lord, they have not been taught their duty. To use a hard, plain word, it is ignorance that makes them withhold their dues.

Below is a list of Centenary Specials available for Sunday schools, classes, or individuals. Write to C. R. Porter, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., and ask for the one you want.

Chapel Building, Realengo, Brazil, $380 for one year, $1900 five years; Seaman's Home, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, $400 one year, $2000 five years; Primary school, building and land, Chulwon, Korea, $300 one year, $1500 five years; Native Parsonage, Seoul District, $50 for one year, $250 for five years; Dormitory, Mary Helm School, Songdo, Korea, $360 for one year, $1800 for five years; Grounds, Araxa, Brazil, one year $100, five years $500; Native Parsonage, Nanzing Circuit, China, $100 one year, $500 five years; parsonage and land, Seoul, Korea, $100, one year; $600, five years; equipment, primary school, Seoul, Korea, $100 one year, $500 five years; travel and outfit, nurse, Korea, $100 one year, $500 for five years; balance on salaries of three missionaries, $100 each for one year.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The Annual Conference is over and I feel that every one got a blessing out of it. It was to me a spiritual feast.

I heard one man say that he wanted those two boys who sang him nearly up to heaven to come back and finish the job. Good for Wells and Nelson.

I trust and pray that each one of us will have a passionate passion for souls; that this passion will drive us out and keep us on our knees. The revival will be here then.

The Capitol Street Church appreciated the Conference and I heard from numbers that the Conference was like a revival. Many said the preachers being in their homes brought blessings. Thank God for this.

Our Sunday school work showed a gain in everything but teacher-training classes and Sunday School Day offering. I do not think we had a loss in teacher-training classes. I have not seen an itemized statement as yet, but I feel that we really made a gain.

Only 169 take the Church School. I had a hurry call for a Christmas program. I got the material for it out of this issue of the Church School. This is a magazine for all Sunday school workers, on the circuits and other places, too. Subscribe for it and let it bring blessings to your charge.

I want five circuits in each district to put in training classes this year. Who will be the first to ask for one? I would like the same number of stations to do this also.

Above all, pray for the work and workers. Plan for large things. Trust in God. Pray.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

THE CENTENARY RECORD TO DECEMBER 1.

To December 1st payments on individual pledges to the Missionary Centenary were $11,412,844. Including Sunday school and Epworth League payments, the total is approximately $12,500,000. This is no small achievement by Southern Methodism, even in face of the fact that we are not up to the standard fixed in the Centenary program and in our pledges. Sixty per cent of our pledge is due and the church has paid about 33 per cent of the total pledge. We will make a far better showing by January first provided every Methodist who has a Centenary pledge will make the special effort to bring that pledge to date during December.

In percentage of pledge paid the first ten Conferences are: Missouri, Kentucky, Baltimore, Northwest Texas, Virginia, Denver, Mississippi, Illinois. In total amount paid Virginia leads all the rest, with $1,042,000 on individual pledges. Next in order, including only payments on individual pledges are: North Carolina, $614,537; North Georgia, $539,822; Tennessee, $521,239; Western North Carolina, $497,597; South Georgia, $479,700; Baltimore, $477,276; South Carolina, $466,860; Holston, $430,250; Central Texas, $402,255.

To date we have paid on individual pledges to the Centenary $5.12 per member. For the two and one-half years of the Centenary period we have paid $2.05 per member per year. Of course many of our people have made payments far larger than this average. Many, no doubt, have made payments that represent real sacrifice. But the fact stands that as a church we are paying but little more than two dollars per member a year to carry through the big Centenary program. Can we do less than this and meet our obligations in this day of world need? — Bulletin.

The grave is the common treasury to which we must all be taxed.—Burke.

A MISSISSIPPI BOY IN CHINA
REPORTS.

By Rev. Ben P. Jaco.

The fine boy that grew up at Winona, Miss., was always appreciated. When he came to manhood, his people put him into their High School as principal, and his church licensed him to preach and heard him preach with much interest. When he was accepted as a missionary, his home church offered to support him. It is no surprise to learn that in his work in Soochow University, Rev. R. T. Henry, "Timmmons" as we love to call him, is making a large and influential place for himself. No doubt this sphere will widen until he shall be felt in a national way. The following report from him concerning a great revival in Soochow will be read with interest. The spirit of evangelism seems to overshadow everything else.

"The Christians of Soochow have just closed a week of union meeting in which all the denominations joined. There were seven hundred or more conversions and the motto of the meeting was 'Soochow for Christ.' The Christians raised all the funds for the work themselves. They put over one of the most successful pieces of advertising that has been done. One of the Y. M. C. A. Secretaries said he thought that they could advertise, but the Chinese Christians surely beat them. There was not a street or a telephone in all the city but carried some message of the meeting, and these were changed every three days. When you see people take hold and do the things that these folks did, you realize that the Chinese are fast coming to the point where they can begin to do many things for themselves. This meeting opened on Sunday, September 25, and the first meeting was addressed by our able presiding elder, Z. T. Kaung. It had been planned that large delegations were to come from all the churches throughout the city and meet for a short service at the tent. After this meeting, the people marched out carrying banners telling about the meeting and also carrying a message for the day. It was surely an inspiring sight as we stood and watched more than two thousand pass by. Among these were students as fine as any American student, and with as bright faces. We are hoping from this effort to have such meetings at least three times each year. It has been suggested that if the place of meeting could be changed from time to time, gradually we could extend the influence of Christianity until all the lump is leavened. The work must not stop. Think! Over seven hundred in one week and then interested enough in the new belief to come the second week to get instruction. Pray that even a greater awakening may come."

NOTES FROM REV. S. W. MILLER

Dear Brother Carley: I was interested in Dr. J. W. Boswell's write-up of the first North Mississippi Conference, and, with your permission, I will relate a few things that occurred. It being my second Conference, I saw some things that amused me.

The first was on reaching our home, a mile east of town. In company with I. R. Hicks, H. C. Morehead, and J. J. Brooks. We entered a palatial residence, and our host, an old-style Englishman, welcomed us kindly. Entering the parlor, we found to our surprise on the center table decanters of wine, whiskey, and brandy, with sugar, glasses, and water, so we were invited to make ourselves at home, and told to help ourselves at any time to them. Of course we respectfully excused ourselves. Otherwise we had an excellent home and fared sumptuously, for they both gave us good beds and plenty to eat.

The next thing was Dr. R. A. Young's describing to me his experience as his car came uncoupled passing over a long hill, leaving the passenger car and sleeper just over the slope sufficient to move down the hill. As they separated, it rang the bell, and the conductor thought it a signal to stop; but by the time he got stopped they were several hundred yards apart, and the further they went the faster they got so he gripped the front seat and with rigid nerve held on till they came together, when he went over the seat and landed in the seat just in front. Imagine a seven-footer, weighing three hundred pounds, making such a sacrifice. Dr. Young was, to my mind, a great character.

On Saturday night, Rev. J. B. McFerrin was to make the missionary address and take a collection to pay off our old missionary debt from the Civil War. Rev. Philip Tuggle made the opening speech and introduced Dr. McFerrin as the "prince of beggars," so when Dr. McFerrin was making his speech, he asked how much it would be per member to raise the amount, and Brother Tuggle said "fifteen cents."

Dr. McFerrin said, "fifteen cents! Give me that stick," and he held up the stick and said, "Here is a brother with a gold-headed cane worth fifty dollars, talking of giving fifteen cents to the missionary cause!" Brother Tuggle said to me he wished that stick had been at home.

On Sunday morning I and Enus Foust were crossing the foot-bridge going to the Presbyterian church to hear the bishop, when an old rooster ran out in front of us. We said, "Run, the preachers are after you," just for fun. The next morning there was a cartoon with two preachers and an old rooster running for dear life. The editor was a fine cartoonist and was always on his job.

I never let anything pass unread from the pen of Dr. Boswell, whom I have known since '58, a junior preacher on the Oxford circuit.

Yours in Christ,

S. W. MILLER.

LOUISIANA EPWORTH LEAGUE
SECRETARY READY TO WORK.

Dear Brother Carley: In answer to the large number of calls which have come from our Methodist pastors, asking that I come and help them in a meeting, doing the singing and special work among the Leaguers, which requests I have not been able to comply with up to the present, I am very glad to announce at this time that I will be in a position to enter the field and assist in such meetings where I can do special Epworth League work, immediately after the first of the year.

I request the pastors who are interesting along this line to write me early, in order that I may make my program without conflicts.

Yours for a greater church.

A REAL SACRIFICE

Many touching stories are coming to this country concerning the unselfishness of the children of the Junior Red Cross of Czechoslovakia. Perhaps it is because these children have so little to give that they find such happiness in the luxury of giving. The children of Czechoslovakia found so much happiness in playing health games and in doing the many things which the representatives of the Junior American Red Cross suggested for their benefit, that they organized a Junior Red Cross of their own last spring and now they are engaged in doing their utmost to relieve the suffering of the children of Russia.

A few months after the Czech Juniors were organized, they launched their effort to provide food and clothing for the ragged and hungry children of Russia, an effort which calls, among other things, for doing without all fats one day in each week in order to save this important food element to be sent to those more hungry than themselves. The representative of the Junior American Red Cross was greatly impressed by the seriousness of the Czech children when she went to her office in Prague one morning to begin her day's work. Standing before the door was a bedraggled little child whose moist fists clutched 600 dirty Czech kronen. These the child presented with many flutterings of excitement, and the announcement that the money had been raised for Russian refugee children by means of a small entertainment given by the girls and boys in a neighboring orphanage. Those parentless children had caught the spirit of the Junior Red Cross, and although their means were pitifully small they were not to be denied the joy of unselfish service for others.—Bulletin.

AN OPEN LETTER TO WOMENMrs. Little Tells How She Suffered and How Finally Cured

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was not able to do my housework and had to lie down most of the time and felt bad in my left side. My monthly periods were irregular, sometimes five or seven months apart and when they did appear would last for two weeks and were very painful. I was sick for about a year and a half and doctored but without any improvement.

A neighbor recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me, and the second day after I started taking it I began to feel better and I kept on taking it for seven months. Now I keep house and perform all my household duties. You can use these facts as you please and I will recommend Vegetable Compound to everyone who suffers as I did." — Mrs. J. S. LITTLE, 3455 Livingston St., Philadelphia, Pa.

How much harder the daily tasks of a woman become when she suffers from such distressing symptoms and weakness as did Mrs. Little. No woman should allow herself to get into such a condition because such troubles may be speedily overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which for more than forty years has been restoring American women to health.

A BLESSED WIND-UP.

Not being able to get away from Gloster before Sunday, Dec. 11, we had services that morning, and I was at the Epworth League service at 2:30 p.m. At this service four Juniors joined the church on profession of faith. This was, indeed, a solemn and blessed service. They were all boys. There being no service at night, a citizen of the town, with two boys, made their way to the parsonage and united with the church on profession of faith. It was one of the most impressive services I ever attended. The good Lord, in the old-time blessedness and power, was manifestly present, for which we are so thankful! May I ask for a continuation of intercessory prayer for us? We need them so bad!

Brother Jasper Smith will cast his lot among a loyal crowd of Methodists here in Gloster. God grant to bless both pastor and people abundantly during the next Conference year!

POLITICAL CONDITIONS IMPROVING IN KOREA.

By Dr. O. R. Avison, in Missionary Voice.

Conditions on the whole are quiet. In a general way it may be said that while the Koreans have not given up the idea of independence, they do not look for it so soon as they did a couple of years ago, and they are beginning to realize the fact that the provisional government at Shanghai can do little more than conduct propaganda. They are consequently trying to work out their own salvation by turning their attention to education, to participating in the rather limited measure of local self-government

If you are in doubt as to where to send your daughter, write us for information regarding prices and curricula. We will have several desirable vacancies in our dormitories after the Christmas holidays, and if you will write us at once, we will be able to take your daughter. You will be pleased with our Specials—our Piano Department, our Domestic Science and Art Departments—and you will be especially delighted with our up-to-date gymnasium and swimming-pool, which, under the capable supervision of our Physical Instructress, do a great deal for the all-round development of our girls. We have a very good faculty, and enough on the force to make a large family of our girls; giving a homelike atmosphere which is not true of all schools.

What Of This For
A Christmas Present?

A sparkling new volume by John Paul on God and Christ and Inspiration and Atonement. A constructive answer, in classical plainness, to new theology and evolutionary criticism, entitled,

"What Is New Theology?"

Scores of expositors recommend it. The Indian Witness of Lucknow says: "Such a reply to the so-called new theology is much needed at this time, when all authority is questioned, even that of revealed religion."

It is a pleasure to testify to the more cordial feeling shown by the government officials as a whole towards the missionary body. The Governor General, Baron Saito, has invited the writer and other missionaries to his home several times. The Seoul Press announced that the policy of weeding out undesirable elements in the police force was being carried out, and we do know that certain hostile officials have been removed or dismissed.

The government is also to be congratulated upon its appointment of Mr. Hirai, a Christian, as head of the Department of Education and Religion for the province in which Pyengyang is located, since Pyengyang is a large center of Christianity in Korea. Mr. Hirai addressed the annual meeting of the Northern Presbyterian Mission at length in splendid English, and the cordiality, sympathy and insight of his words were finer even than his diction. He said it was his purpose to put a New Testament in the pocket of every policeman in the province, in order that the police might study Christianity and know what it is.

It is much to be hoped that the government will continue its good work in removing abuses in the police system, in giving the municipal councils more power and the right to meet as frequently as similar bodies do in Japan, and in giving employment to as many Koreans as possible in the various government services.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

It is a happy coincidence that Christmas comes on Sunday this year, because the religious significance of the great event commemorated by this day of days will be likely to receive more attention than it would if it came on a week day. As it is usually observed, Christmas Day is far removed from the spirit that characterized it when the Christ Child made His advent and that should characterize it always. From looking upon it as a day that brings "good tidings of great joy," too many people think of it as a time of worry, confusion, excitement, financial stress, and social dissipation entirely removed from the holy joy that should mark so signal an event. It almost appears that the season has only a commercial significance. For weeks beforehand the newspapers are filled with advertisements the sole purpose of which is to take advantage of the season to increase the year's profits; the streets are crowded with people anxiously hurrying to and fro as if their very lives depended upon their doing the impossible before nightfall; the places of trade are filled with surging masses of purchasers fingering gewgaws and feverishly trying to make a few saved dollars do service in providing useless gifts for other people who are likewise at their wit's end to provide presents for those from whom they expect to receive gifts; the night before Christmas is more like pandemonium than the peaceful and holy quiet that we associate with the birthday of the world's Redeemer. The best observance of Christmas that we could possibly make this year would be for us to give ourselves to Him who gave for our redemption His Son, Jesus Christ.

CREATING THE SPIRIT OF PEACE.

In an interview granted to the Federal Council of the Churches, Lord Riddell, press liaison officer of the British delegation to the Conference on Limitation of Armament, made the following significant statement: "There is only one way to stop war—the people of the world must determine that they will have peace. If they do, we won't have any more wars; unless they do, we will not be able to prevent war. It is very foolish to think you are going to change the world all at once. One thing to do is to create the spirit of peace among the coming generations. Teach the children so that when they grow up they will not want war. The trouble with peace movements in the past and the many attempts to put a stop to wars has been that they have started at the wrong place." The especially significant part of the foregoing statement is in the emphasis placed upon the necessity of educating the children of the coming generations to want peace. Just as the German nation educated a generation to believe in war and to want war, so now the nations of the world must begin at the source and inculcate those principles of righteousness in the youth of the world that will make wars impossible and unthinkable. Begin with the children—that is the place to begin with every great forward movement.

A DIVIDEND ON MISSIONS.

Dr. Sao Ke Alfred Sze, Chinese Minister to the United States and a member of the Chinese delegation to the Conference on Limitation of Armament, recently bore testimony to the value of missionary work in China in such terms as ought to convince even the most skeptical that such work is infinitely worth while. Among other things, he said: "The educational work conducted in China through direct contact, by the various educational and missionary bodies of this country, has been of such great benefit to China that it is beyond mere words to express. I refer especially to the many institutions of higher education maintained in China by the missionary organizations and to the medical education work being conducted by the Rockefeller Institute at Peking. These are the elements of Western culture which have given China a real insight into Western civilization and have shown us that Western scientific advancement means more than guns and battleships and engines of destruction. As I have said, the churches have done a great deal for China and the Chinese people. Of the three principal delegates sent to the Washington Conference, Dr. Wang, who is a Christian, Dr. Koo, and myself have attended St. John's College at Shanghai, an institution maintained and managed by American missionaries. And so personally all of us have a good idea of the influence of the church in China." Such testimony is a dividend on missionary investments that ought to make us rejoice that we have had a part in ministering to the great Chinese people. The Centenary money is not a drain upon the church, but a gain to the church.

GOOD PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

In a remarkably strong address delivered on December 6 by Honorable Guy D. Goff, assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, before the National Law Enforcement Convention, are to be found many sentiments that strike a responsive chord in every patriotic breast. The following characterization of the cowardly and dishonest official ought to be framed and hung in the office of every public official in the country: "Our Government and our Constitution embody the wisdom of the ages, and they are not to be overthrown by the whims or the depravity of those who speculate in public justice and view it as an article of personal favor. The parasites that fatten on crime and live on human sin shall not be permitted to traffic in our liberties and, vulture-like, sink their gorging beaks into our Constitutions and our laws. I do not believe that men are inherently bad; it is only when the temptations are strong, and men have not strength enough to resist, that they violate the moral and statute laws. But the man who cannot obey the law, the man who cannot fearlessly enforce the law and, with the courage of his convictions, bring before our judicial tribunals every dastardly and contemptible crook, no matter how high his rank, has no place in our system. Such a man fosters disrespect for the law by feeble enforcement, and, lacking in courage, he fails in the prime requirements of his obligations and undertakings. Many such an official also takes refuge in a too great discretion, and in the interpretation of statutes clothes himself with the unwarranted prerogatives of legislative and executive powers."

THE DIAGNOSIS AND THE TREATMENT.

We suppose there are plenty of people who are able to tell what is the matter with the world—at least we judge so from the many diagnoses we run across. Judging both from experience and observation, we would say that the average man, given pencil and paper, feels himself well qualified to trace all our present evils to their origin, explain their development and symptoms, and prescribe their appropriate remedies. The weakness of most of us is that, having made the diagnosis, we leave it to somebody else to apply the treatment. We would not capriciously find fault with the one, but we would insist that we are, perhaps, long on diagnosis and short on treatment. No one of us may be able to do much, but each one of us could do something—and the time seems to have arrived for us to get busy. It is of little worth to spend all our days detailing the innumerable things that ought to be done—and then never do one of them. It is barely possible that some of our gravest afflictions would give way to the simplest treatment—if we would only apply the treatment; and it is likewise possible that some of our greatest problems are waiting for solution only upon some one who will simply go to work. Anyway, preaching without practice will never get us very far along the road to the millenium.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON THE CONSTITUTION.

By Bishop Collins Denny.

Were it not so common, it would be amazing that so many matters of slight importance receive patient attention and are subjected to careful discussion, while many things fundamental are almost wholly neglected. Nothing that affects the means adopted by the church for the accomplishment of its mission to proclaim to the world the gospel of our Lord can be more important, more fundamental, than the question of its constitution.

Many times has Episcopal Methodism officially appointed Commissions to investigate the constitution and to report the findings. The last General Conference of our church appointed a Commission for this purpose, and the report has been published. Is this report to receive from the church no careful consideration, to be read and not to be discussed? Does it not deserve, does it not demand most careful consideration and discussion? Is the study, the sifting of so vital a question a waste of time? To state the question is to answer it.

The Commission was appointed "to consider the matter of the status of our Constitution," and to answer two questions: "1. What is the Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South? 2. What changes in it should be initiated by the General Conference of 1922?"

It will be noted that on the Commission was laid the duty "to consider," and then to ascertain a fact. The Commission is not made responsible for the fact it finds. It may have wished the fact had been different, but it must report that fact as found in the exercise of its considered judgment.

The report of the fact found by the Commission is different, widely different, from the findings of every other Commission in the history of American Episcopal Methodism. Our Commission found that the Constitution of the Church is contained in two paragraphs of the Discipline relating solely to the General Conference; that and that alone, according to our Commission, is the Constitution of the church.

If the Commission be correct, it has done the church an inestimable service, for it shows how utterly helpless is the church, and thus gives possible opportunity for needed defense and correction. If the Commission be correct, there is in our church no constitutional determination even of the qualifications of the electorate of the delegates to the General Conference. What is an "Annual Conference," who are its "members?" If this be the Constitution, no preacher or layman has any constitutional rights in an Annual Conference, nor has any layman a constitutional right to be a delegate to the General Conference, or to any other Conference. The next General Conference, under this reported Constitution, can declare that superannuates shall not be members of an Annual Conference, or that all the members of the church, preachers and laymen, shall be members. The point is not what the General Conference is likely to do, but what it has the power to do. Possession of power tempts to its use. Those whose privileges depend on the will of others have no rights, all they hold is by sufferance. Few if any preachers in our church have heretofore supposed that the fiat of the General Conference could deprive them of all voice in the government of the church. Yet if our Commission be correct, except for the right of petition, that is the fact. When the men of 1808 adopted the Constitution of the General Conference they did not understand, according to their oft-expressed statements, that they had given all power in the church to the delegates in General Conference assembled, and had stripped themselves of all reserved rights. On the contrary, till 1832, they reserved to the Annual Conferences, and to them alone, the right to initiate any change in that Constitution. In 1832 they agreed to share that right of initiation with the delegates they should elect, and at the same time made it easier for themselves to amend the Constitution they had adopted. Our Methodism is not now and never has been an unlimited legislative autocracy, as this report would make it.

In the light of this report the time for action, positive action, has come, for here is a "supreme and all-controlling" General Conference beyond the dreams of any branch of Episcopal Methodism.

It is to be regretted that the Commission did not give the reasons for its findings. We might have been told why the sole organic law of the church is that affecting the General Conference, why the General Conference is greater than the Annual Conferences which elect its delegates, actually greater than the church. The Commission does not answer definitely the question it was appointed to answer. Instead of reporting what is the Constitution, it leaves the church wholly in the dark by the organic answer that "the Constitution of the church is contained in Paragraphs 42 and 43, as printed in the Discipline of 1918." I frankly admit that I do not know what that means. What else is contained in those paragraphs, and what part of the content is the Constitution? Does it mean that only the portions of those paragraphs adopted in 1808 are the Constitution? Possibly that is the meaning, because the Commission speaks of the action of the General and Annual Conferences in making women eligible by the Constitutional process to all Conferences, Boards and lay offices of the church as an interpretation of Restrictive Rule No. 2. Why not an interpretation of paragraphs not included in the Constitution according to this report, e.g., our paragraphs 32, 33, 34, 35, 44? If that were an "interpretation," what provision passed by the requisite majority of General and Annual Conferences is a constitutional amendment? It would be interesting, illuminating and instructing to be shown in the entire history of our church a single instance of an interpretation of law given by two-thirds of the General Conference and three-fourths of the members of the several Annual Conferences. Analogy may help: Does it take "two-thirds of both Houses of Congress" and "three-fourths of the Legislature of the several States or Conventions in three-fourths thereof" to interpret the Constitution of the United States? When those bodies by that majority act, they do not interpret the Constitution, they amend it. When lay representation was introduced in 1866 the action of the General and Annual Conferences did not change a single word in our present paragraphs 42 and 43. All the changes were in other paragraphs. Not till 1878 did the General and Annual Conferences put into paragraphs 42 and 43 the word "lay," and that in an action changing other parts of the Chapter on the General Conference.

Since, according to the Commission, the General Conference by its Constitution is limited only by the Restrictive Rules, and since no Restrictive Rule prohibits that Conference from dealing with an interpretation, can the next General Conference exclude the women elected to membership?

Has the Commission found the Constitution?

1. Not in the understanding of the men who were present in 1808 and who after long debate adopted the Constitution of the General Conference.

Henry Smith, a member of that General Conference, speaks of "our Constitution and our Restrictive Rules." (Recollections, p. 277.)

McKendree, elected bishop in 1898, in his "Essays on our Church Government," "carefully written by him," says Paine, states: "The Constitution says one of the General Superintendents shall preside in the General Conference." (2 Paine's McKendree, p. 370.) This duty is not contained in the paragraphs mentioned by our Commission.

2. Not according to the study and findings of a Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1888 the General Conference of that church appointed a Commission of seventeen on the Constitution. (Journal 1888, p. 168.) That Commission spent, not one, but twelve days, in the study of the question, and reported on "the organic law of the M. E. Church," and also on "the constitution of the General Conference, which latter included most of the entire chapter on the General Conference," and the amendments thereto." (Daily Advocate, 1892, p. 20.) In explaining the report its Chairman, Bishop Merrill, a recognized master of the law of his church, says: "The Commission reached the conclusion that the organic law of the church, and the Constitution of the General Conference are not the same, that they differ very considerably. * * * There is a Constitution of the General Conference outside of or beyond the Restrictive Rules. We are surprised to find that there are yet living here, there and yonder, individuals who believe that the whole Constitution of the General Conference is found in these restrictions. I thought they were all translated. The view we take of the matter is this: if we assume that those six restrictions are the only Constitution, you may just as well obliterate the rest of the chapter. Suppose you had to organize a General Conference on those six restrictions? How would you go about it? Restrictions to what? On whom? On the power given to a General Conference previously described. What General Conference is that previously described? Not any General Conference or assembly of people that may call themselves a General Conference. This General Conference previously described and provided for, a General Conference consisting of just so many delegates as is described, of just such qualifications as are therein found, forming a quorum as therein described, meeting at just the time and place therein provided for, under just such a presidency as therein provided for—then that General Conference and no other has conferred upon it, not by itself, but by the whole church at large, through this instrument which we call a Constitution—that particular General Conference and no other has conferred upon it power, sole power, to make rules and regulations for the church under these limitations and restrictions. We thought that which constitutes is a Constitution. That which organizes is organic. That which does for the General Conference precisely what a Constitution is intended to do is a Constitution. It describes its membership, the qualifications for membership, the mode of election, the quorum, the presidency, power and limitation all in one instrument." (Op. cit. p. 75.) But our Commission seems to have found the Constitution of the church in these six restrictions.

3. Not according to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for that body, after a debate extending through three days, adopted a report setting forth: "The action of the General Conference in the Discipline of 1808 and adopted by the General Conference of 1808 has the nature and force of a Constitution. That section, together with such modifications as have been adopted since that time in accordance with the provisions for amendment, is the present Constitution." (Op. cit. p. 76).

4. Not according to our own General Conference of 1878 whose action was ratified by the Annual Conferences.

Our General Conference in one report, at the same time, by one vote, amended paragraphs 32, 33, 34, and 42, as numbered in the Discipline of 1918, and the several Annual Conferences voted on the report covering those four paragraphs as a unit, and adopted them as a unit. (Journal 1878 pp. 235f).

On what principle is one part of that unit contained in the Constitution and the other parts excluded from it?

5. Not according to the report of the Commission on the Constitution appointed by our General Conference of 1898.

That Commission did not report to the General Conference, but it sent to each delegate-elect to the General Conference of 1902 a printed copy of its report. That Commission says: "That the answers to question 2, Section 3, Chapter I. of the Discipline of 1808 as adopted by the General Conference of 1808, creating a delegated General Conference and defining its powers and the first paragraph in the report of the special committee on lay representation in the General Conference of 1865, adopted by concurrent votes in the General and Annual Conferences, providing for the introduction of lay representatives into the Annual Conference and defining their powers—have the nature and force of constitutional provisions. That said instrument, with such alterations thereof and additions thereto as have since been adopted in accordance with the provisions for amendment therein contained, form the present Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." (Report, p. 2.)

6. Not according to the unanimous official action of our bishops in three instances.

In 1894 the bishops pronounced unconstitutional an action of the General Conference affecting a matter not contained in paragraphs 42 or 43, but since that matter had received the requisite vote in the General and Annual Conferences, they declared it "became thereby a constitutional provision, which cannot be invaded or changed by any mere ruling, or resolution, or statutory action of the General Conference." (Journal 1894, p. 333f.)

In 1910 the bishops pronounced unconstitutional the attempt of the General Conference by a majority vote to change the name of the church, because "the name is a part of the organic law of the church," and the name is not found in paragraphs 42 or 43. (Journal 1910, p. 290.)

In 1914 the bishops unanimously reported to the General Conference that "the law of our church not only does not regard the Restrictive Rules as our only Constitutional principles, it does not regard the entire Chapter II of our present Discipline, entitled 'Of the General Conference,' as adopted by the undelegated General Conference of 1808, and the amendments thereto validly adopted from time to time, as our only Constitutional principles." (Journal 1914, p. 470.)

7. Not according to the Louisville Convention.

That Convention, by a vote of 90 to 2, adopted the following: "It is confidently, although most unaccountably maintained, that the six short Restrictive Rules which were adopted in 1808 are in fact the true and only constitution of the Church.... It must be seen at once that the position leaves many of the organic laws and most important institutions of the church entirely unprotected and at the mercy of a mere and even fluctuating majority of the General Conference.... So far as the Restrictive Rules are concerned, the Annual Conferences are without protection, and might also be destroyed by the General Conference at any time.... This theory assumes the self-refuted absurdity, that the General Conference is in fact the government of the church, if not the church itself. With no other constitution than these mere restrictions upon the powers and rights of the General Conference, the government of the Methodist Episcopal Church as a system of organized laws and well-adjusted instrumentalities for the spread of the Gospel and the diffusion of piety, and whose living principles of energy and action have so long commanded the admiration of the world, would soon cease even to exist." (History of the Organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, pp. 222, 199.)

These are but a few of the reasons why some of us cannot agree with the Commission's report. Richmond, Va., Nov. 30, 1921.

A JOURNEY TO THE ORIENT—KOREA.

By Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker, D.D.

V.

As the railroad and all its service by which I journeyed to Seoul is Japanese, my first acquaintance with Korea was in the capital city, Seoul. After the thrills of a drive through crowded, tortuous, malodorous streets the ample spaces and sweet air of the Mission compound were like water to the thirsty or sleep to the weary or anything else in this earth that approaches heaven for comfort and relief. Now that I have been in the Far East for two months I have learned to recognize this feeling as a specialized experience. The missionary compound is a bit of heaven, typical of the "holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven;" "in it is no unclean thing," but without is every abomination. Is it purely a matter of contrasts? Or do we have in the missionary compound a community within a community, a city within a city, a "tabernacle of God with men," while the surrounding camp is composed of habitations of the profane, the sensual, the materialistic? Possibly the absence of such violent contrasts in a community in our own land in part accounts for the uniqueness of the experience; but in the missionary compound there are a homogeneity and definiteness of Christian character and culture of an entire, though limited, community that do make it highly specialized.

In Korea all our compounds are located upon hills and possess ample grounds. The buildings are modern American and usually roomy. Within the surrounding wall, which intensifies the effect of segregation, are grouped the residences of the missionaries and their native servants, and intelligent effort to increase the home-like beauty of the situation by landscape gardening is always evident. From the front porch of the residence of Dr. Hardie I looked out upon the city below, composed mainly of thatched houses so close together that the effect was as the scales on a monster tortoise's back. But in several directions were the tiled and tip-tilted corner roofs of groups of superior one-story buildings within walled areas. These are palaces, of which there are more in Seoul than the present royalty of the world could economically use. In the old days of the kingdom his Majesty had several and the princes were also palace-housed. The Central Evangelistic Plant recently purchased by the Woman's Council at an expense of $100,000 was the palace of one of the favorite concubines of a king or prince, afterwards a restaurant of the usual evil fame of such institutions in Korea, now devoted to building up what it was wont to destroy. But not far off, in the foreground of a palace once used as the audience chamber of the king, is rising the new capitol, a structure of reinforced concrete veneered with native stone, which will cost about seven million dollars. This is a part of the promise of the new day for Korea politically and the streets of this part of the city will be remade and broadened, much to the advantage of the inhabitants. Beyond the level of thatch roofs, a surrounding rim of blue and grey and purple, rise the mountains. I suppose like those round about Jerusalem, but here they have no holy association with the great and devout thought of God's providence over his people. How barren of the highest conceptions is even the most susceptible soul without the revelation of God! Through nature to God may be granted as a theological postulate, but where has it ever been realized in a practical way?

On Friday, September 9, the day after my arrival in Seoul, the opening session of the Korea Mission was held. Every one felt the absence of Bishop Lambuth but all with good courage urged by a letter dictated from his sickbed in the hospital in Yokohama, took up the important duties of this meeting. Dr. W. G. Crain was elected Chairman and Mc. J. O. J. Taylor, Secretary. Then began an examination of the work and status of the Mission as thorough and as inclusive as that I had observed in Japan. There is this difference: in Japan one Mission is the only organization of our workers in the field, as the churches are under the immediate control of the Japan Methodist Church and the appointments are made by the Bishop of that church; even the appointments of our own missionaries when they are to churches being subject to the approval of the Bishop of the Japan church; while in Korea we have both the Mission meeting and a regularly organized Annual Conference, in which our missionary ministers hold membership together with the Korean ministers. In the Mission meeting all missionaries on the field, including the wives of missionaries, are members. Questions of polity, property, education, finance and the Centenary forward movement were discussed. The year past had been one of great evangelistic successes and consequent heavy responsibilities for the souls of the people who had taken the initial steps into the kingdom. More than sixteen thousand new believers and one hundred and forty-seven groups were reported by the presiding elders and the Centenary Secretary, Mr. J. S. Ryang. These are persons who have responded to the appeals of the preachers by giving in their names as those who desire to become Christians. They are then organized into bands very much resembling the original societies into which Wesley's converts in England were grouped, but differing in the background of religious belief and the definiteness of experience that the early Methodists enjoyed. The evangelistic advance has been carried out in apostolic manner by companies of evangelists and the conservation of the fruits of their labors is being similarly effected. A preacher, a lay leader, a Bible woman, a colporter, and a singer constitute a conservation band, by whom the groups of new believers are visited, instructed and strengthened in faith. The lady have been brought largely into this work both of evangelism and conservation, else it could not have been accomplished. But it is impossible for our small force of missionaries personally to visit all these bands, save at long intervals, and many must fall away for lack of the work of the ministry for "the perfecting of the saints." A clarion call for missionaries, both men and women, for evangelists and teachers and physicians ought to be sounded throughout the church. Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, colleges and high schools should be visited and made to hear the call for "more reapers for white harvest fields, more laborers for the Lord."

In connection with the great evangelistic success of the Korea Mission and the peril growing out of the insufficiency of trained leaders, the Mission took up the subject of ministerial education. The same conflict of interests that we have so often felt in the home field had here produced the same unfortunate and wasteful results. Untrained young men had been prematurely thrust out into the work of the ministry because the need was urgent; but their usefulness had thereby been diminished from the start and their period of growth so shortened as to deprive the church of the leadership that is now demanded. A different policy has been strongly insisted upon by Bishop Lambuth and adopted by the Mission. The Union Methodist Seminary, under the presidency of Dr. Hardie, affords opportunities for the training of a ministry. For entrance, two years in the Pierson Memorial Bible School, or its equivalent are required, and the course, now lengthened to three years, the last to be given in English, is nearly equal to that given in the seminaries at home, except that Greek and Hebrew are not offered, the time being used for courses in the Bible. A promise ing plan, known as the Centenary Institute, has been devised for partly answering both the immediate need and the ultimate call for a trained ministry. Thirty young men selected by the presiding elders will be sent to the Seminary each year for an intensive course adapted to such educational preparation as they may have. At the end of their nine months' course, they will be appointed to work for one year, at the end of which they will return for a second year of study in the Seminary, while the second year's group is working in the field.

It was later my privilege to give a course of lectures at the Seminary in Christian Doctrine based upon the Epistle to the Romans. I had opportunity of becoming acquainted with the student body composed of the regular matriculants and the Centenary students and some of the young ladies from the Girls' Bible School. All together they numbered above ninety. It was a sight that inspired hope for the future leadership of the Korean church. But I sadly remember that the majority of the regular seminary students are from the Methodist Episcopal Church. The benefits that have accrued to our own church from the Seminary have not been in proportion to the facilities afforded by that excellent institution, but a higher appreciation and a larger use of its advantages are indicated by the present attitude of the Mission.

In looking over my notes of the Mission meeting I find many interesting facts, but I cannot use nearly all of them in a letter; so I will venture in conclusion upon a few generalizations.

In Korea medical work is still of very great importance both because there are not nearly enough Government hospitals and educated Korean physicians and because in the Korean mind there seems to be an indissoluble association of the work of the church and healing. The Hospitals, are frequently spoken of as Jesus hospitals. In Seoul our church joins in the support of Severance Hospital and Medical College; in all our other stations, except Chul Wun, we have hospitals owned and operated by our church. But the need for American doctors is great. Dr. Reed at Ivy Hospital, Songdo, has had the assistance of only Korean doctors for some time, but is now happy in the prospect of an early re-enforcement from America. At Won San, Dr. Ross has been holding the fort alone and at Choon Chun Dr. Hill has been doing the same thing. At Chul Wun there should be an early enterprising of a hospital with at least one American physician and nurses. The need in other missions is perhaps greater than in our own. At this time there are four Presbyterian hospitals closed because physicians cannot be had. In the course of time Severance will turn out well trained physicians in sufficient number to meet these needs, but in the meantime, cruel Korean practice goes on; suffering is not alleviated and pestilence easily spreads for lack of instruction in sanitation. Infant mortality reaches an appalling percentage and even our own missionaries are compelled to risk their life and health for lack of accessible medical attention. It rests upon every young Christian physician in America to show cause why he should choose to remain at home, where medical attention is easily obtained, instead of coming to the foreign field where men and women must suffer and die for want of that which he alone can give. Korea, the hermit kingdom, was opened by a physician; may the work thus begun be carried to its happy conclusion by the aid of the same agency of mercy. Jesus went about into all the cities of Galilee preaching and teaching and healing. His church has had committed to it his work, which included the ministry of healing, and we are not obedient to our mission if we omit any one of the great departments of his work.

In each of our mission stations in Korea there is at least a good beginning in educational work. In Seoul the women are operating the Carolina Institute, which carries girls through the middle school grades, or about as high as the second year of our high schools; and there are great enterprises in which our church unites with other churches. The Shosen Christian College is a real college; the Pierson Memorial Bible School is a union institution that does a certain preparatory work leading to Seminary entrance; and the Girls' Bible School, also a union enterprise, has a similar and perhaps wider function for girls. There are also grammar schools conducted in connection with the churches. In Songdo we have no union work, as the entire city is given over to the work of our own church; and well have we improved our opportunity. The Anglo-Korean School, founded by Mr. T. H. Yun, with its primary, middle and higher school departments, housed in massive granite buildings, with chapel and industrial department and mill; Holston Institute, with its kindergarten, its Mary Helm Dormitory for older women and married girls, with courses of the same grade as Carolina in Seoul, and the primary schools constitute an admirable system. At Chul Wun there is only a primary school; at Choon Chun the same; at Won San is the Lucy Cunningham School for girls, of grade with Carolina and Holston; and a boys' school, so ill-housed as to be in violation of the law of the land, but so popular that numbers are turned away; and a night school that may easily be developed to the proportions and usefulness of Palmore Institute, Kobe. In connection with most of our churches we have primary schools, which give four or five years of instruction, and in accordance with the new school laws will give six grades. I have not mentioned all our educational work, but enough to give some idea of its completeness, if inadequacy. It is the policy in Korea to have the school go with the church. Unquestionably the evangelizing and conserving results are great; in fact, it is out here necessary to the very life of the mission.

In March, 1918, occurred the Independence Movement in Korea, which had results so unhappy in the lives of many leaders and created some embarrassments for the missionaries and their work. Many of the ministers in all the churches and many leading lay members were imprisoned. It was in our Conference no infrequent thing to have a presiding elder answer to the call of a minister's name: "Nothing against him; he is in prison." This Movement in Korea was a part of the world ferment that democratic ideals have caused; but it was more, it was the attempt of a newly gained national consciousness to become in some way articulate. It would seem that there is no hope in the minds of leading Koreans of accomplishing anything by revolution, but there is a turning toward education with passion and hope such as no other people have ever before experienced. Koreans have suspected that the difference between themselves and the Japanese is mainly one of education and are eager to make themselves equal to their political masters. Their traditions are those of a nation whose ideal has been that of scholarship, but the many have never benefited thereby; now comes an education that carries with it all other values; its advantages are for all, therefore they are eager for the new education. The Japanese Government, under the liberal and magnanimous Saito, has promised Korea an educational system equal to that of Japan as soon as it becomes financially possible, and doubtless the promise will be fulfilled. It could now be made good, were the army of policemen reduced and the amount expended given to school purposes. The lesson for the churches to learn is taught by the history of missions in Japan. A generation ago there was an opportunity to Christianize the educational system of Japan, but we did not see it, or if we saw we did not heed it. The same thing is more true of Korea to-day. Japanese education was Prussianized; shall Korean education be Christianized? Answer, young men and women who are equipped to teach.

THE NEW PREACHER FOLLOWING THE OLD PASTOR.

By Rev. D. Scarborough.

I read in a recent issue of the Texas Christian Advocate a timely article by Rev. E. Hightower on "Receiving the New Pastor." His purpose was to admonish the members of those churches where changes would be made this fall to receive in the right spirit and manner the men who would be assigned to them for next year. He made it very clear that the way in which a congregation receives the new pastor has a great deal to do with his year's work and I heartily endorse what Brother Hightower had to say on the subject.

It occurs to us that something might be said on the other side. We preachers sometimes need to be admonished as well as the people. Our attitude towards one another as predecessor and successor will have a lot to do with each other's success in the work. If the new preacher should be received by the people in a generous, loyal, and brotherly way, certainly he should have and show the Christ-like spirit towards his predecessor. We preachers, like all other men, are imperfect and often make mistakes. The best of men fall short at some point in their work, and those of us who were moved at Conference can be sure that our successors will be able to criticize us for some things which we did or did not do. Bearing this in mind, we should discourage all unkind remarks by the people about the former pastor. Certainly we should not criticize him ourselves, for whenever a new preacher speaks disparagingly of his predecessor, he always belittles himself in the estimation of his new people. I think the Methodist itinerancy is the greatest brotherhood in the world, and the fellowship of Methodist preachers surpasses that of all other men. How we should love one another! We ought to be mutually concerned for each other's happiness and welfare, and should always be too big and brotherly to say an unkind thing about another preacher—certainly about a predecessor in the work. It is unthinkable in a Methodist preacher that he would try to build up and establish himself among his people at the expense of the one who has gone before him. The former pastor may be unpopular because he was true to God and cried out against the sins of the people. If his successor condones and gives silent consent to the unkind criticisms of him by the people, he can expect nothing else but the curse of God upon his own ministry. Brother pastor, listen! If the people show a mean spirit towards the man who labored and suffered before you, they will dissect your character when you are gone from that charge. They will think more of you if you have the manly courage to take the part of the absent brother when they unkindly criticize him.

Now if this should be our attitude towards our predecessors, how should we feel and act towards our successors? The answer to this question may be arrived at by quoting the Golden Rule. It is possible for an outgoing pastor very seriously to interfere with his successor—especially if he was popular with the people. He may get in the way of his successor by frequently visiting and indiscreetly corresponding with his former parishioners—by holding on to the people and cultivating their friendship and forgetting the fact that his relation and his obligation to them as a pastor are ended. No preacher should ever go back to a former charge to bury the dead and marry the living without an understanding that the pastor have part with him in such services. It is simply a crime for a congregation to discount and ignore their pastor in their fondness for some other man who has served them in the past, and no preacher can afford to be a party to such unfairness. Now I want to be understood. To be sure, preachers, like everybody else, have a right to their friendships, and the judicious, thoughtful man knows how to exercise that right. No preacher who is big enough to be the pastor of a church will object to a former pastor's visiting his charge and corresponding with his people within the bounds of propriety. He is always willing for the Golden Rule to work both ways.

I would suggest, in conclusion, that every preacher who goes to a new charge should, as soon as possible, write to his predecessor and speak of the good things that were accomplished during his pastorate there and ask his prayers to the end that the work which he labored so hard to promote may go forward to the glory of God. It would be magnanimous to extend to him a cordial invitation to come back to see his many friends whenever he felt like it. On the other hand, every outgoing pastor should cut loose from the charge which he has left and give his successor a chance to get hold of the people and win their love.

Now that the Annual Conferences are over, it seems to me that it would be well for us to think on these things.

With love and best wishes to my friends and brethren in the Mississippi Conference, I am,

A SUPERANNUATE AT CONFERENCE.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

Another session of the Mississippi Conference has come and gone. The memory of it will stay with us for many years to come. The appointments made were about as usual—some wise and some otherwise. Some of our worthy and good men will find 1922 a very hard year because of painfully inadequate salaries. The "ravens" may have to feed them, and God may have to clothe them as He does the "lilies of the field."

I was entertained in the magnificent home of Sister I. C. Enochs. The hospitality was lavish, and the fellowship was all that heart could wish. Brothers L. A. Darsey and W. W. Hopper were my associates. We had a fine time. The family almost burdened us with their thoughtful ministrations. The prayers of all three of us will be for Heaven's richest blessings to rest upon that fine Christian home.

This was my first intimate association with Brother Darsey. I found him to be altogether as good as I had thought him to be. He is thoughtful and well-informed. I got something worth while from his store of knowledge during our waking hours, and at night he entertained me in my sleepless hours with some of the most musical snoring I have heard in many years. He is an expert in the art. Not being a musician, I could not understand all the notes he struck, but I feel sure that they were just right.

I have known Brother Hopper very intimately, since 1874. At the Conference of that year he and I were received on trial. We are the only ones in the Conference of that class. He and I have not always seen things just alike, but our hearts have been and are together. Thank God, little differences of opinion don't keep us from loving each other. Brother Hopper is a holy and good man. It did me good to have this intimate association with him for six days. Montrose is fortunate in having him for pastor another year. Brother Hopper made diligent effort to help me—he gave me some good advice. He advised me to eat no supper, and to talk less politics. I am almost persuaded to take his advice. Don't you think it would help me, Henry?

The preaching, except on Sunday, was done by Dr. H. C. Morrison. This was a decided innovation. I do not think it was wise or good. I advise that we do not repeat this order. I think messages from several of God's messengers would have resulted in more good. I tried to hear Dr. Morrison twice, but his voice, the acoustics of the building, and my ears did not harmonize. I got but little—not enough to help me very much. There was entirely too much levity. This never goes well with me. God's house is too holy a place to be profaned by snickerings and guffaws.

On Sunday I deliberately chose to hear men whom I had heard many times. I knew what to expect, and I got what I wanted. Their preaching was free from everything that excites the risibles. At 11 o'clock I worshiped at Rankin Street Church. Rev. J. E. Williams preached a sermon that did me good. I heard every word, and followed him with close self-examination. "Be ye also ready, for at a time ye think not the Son of Man cometh." This was the text of his sermon. Williams gave us a fine analysis of the text. The sermon was good to the use of edifying. There was a small congregation. I was the only Conference visitor. I was sorry more of the brethren were not there to hear this excellent sermon.

At 7:30 p.m. I heard Rev. H. A. Gatlin at the Central Presbyterian Church. The sermon met every demand. I was glad to see so many of the congregation give evidence of their pleasure in hearing Brother Gatlin's splendid sermon. Only two of our preachers heard him. There were unoccupied seats enough to accommodate comfortably fifty who were crowded into the overcrowded church just across the street. Would it not have been better for them to relieve the jam at the one place and fill the pews at the other? I think it would have been better for them, and for the cause. I find it a means of grace to go where I am most needed.

Jim Campbell was appointed to preach to the Negroes. I made up my mind to hear him, but when I got to the church I found that it was not the M. E. Negroes, but Episcopal Negroes. When I found the "lay of the land," I left Jim in the chaperonage of Ed Coker and went elsewhere. I didn't want to see Jim Campbell perform in a "gown."

This was the most "gabulous" conference I ever saw. My! how the brethren did talk. I was fully persuaded that several of them were "dead in love" with their own voices. They loved to talk far better than we did to listen. My, how bore-some to us some of this talk was! If some of the guilty ones could have heard some things said about them, they wouldn't have been shouting happy. Modesty—what a virtue thou art! I move that the brethren who talked so much at this Conference be requested to keep quiet at the next Conference, and give us who got no chance to talk this time an opportunity to show what fine voices we have. The brethren know that some of the rest of us can speak—and beat the band at it, too. If my motion should fail, then I would advise every one to take a gas-mask with him to Crystal Springs—we will certainly be in danger. If I cannot buy me a mask, I am going to fill my pockets with cotton. I'll pack it into my ears.

To me the most satisfactory work of the Conference was the splendid memorials sent to the General Conference. I hope that body may have the good sense to adopt every one of them. If preachers will write and preach German rationalism, let them be honest enough to quit the Methodist Church. They ought not to accept Methodist money to support them while they, by their teachings, are bringing confusion and destruction to the Methodist Church. No, by no means! Let our Publishing House beware of lending itself to this hurtful propaganda. We don't need money so much as to be willing to see the "higher critics" exploit the church and public by using our Publishing House. If our preachers or our laymen want to inform themselves as to the vagaries of modern theological thought, let them get the books from other publishing houses. Let us absolve ourselves from all guilt of handling them just to make some money. Let's cut them out, and keep our skirts clean.

The Mississippi Conference is on safe ground. We don't want any "higher criticism," nor do we want any unification of any kind whatever. Amen! and Amen!

A VISITOR'S IMPRESSION OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. J. A. Poe.

The historic Mississippi Conference met in its one hundredth and eighth session in the beautiful Capital City of Mississippi, November 30, 1921. The splendid, spacious, ornate Capitol Street Church furnished ample accommodations for that august body; and the wide-awake, popular pastor, Dr. Tolle, with his efficient committee on entertainment, did the act of host that could not be excelled. The good ladies served noon luncheon at the old Capitol Street Church, just across the street from the church now occupied by a splendid congregation. This humble little church "of ye good old days of long ago" stands as a silent, forceful witness of the mighty growth and progress of our present day.

The personnel of the members of the Conference was up to a high average, and the spiritual atmosphere was truly inspiring. The writer noted less smoking, less lobbying and loitering than is usual to see at an Annual Conference. The early prayer meetings held in an "upper room" at eight o'clock were a veritable feast.

The visit and luncheon at the Orphans' Home was an occasion long to be recalled. That great institution of love and mercy, standing with outstretched arms to the unfortunate orphans of our State, bidding them come and find shelter, food, friends, foster parents, opportunities, and, best of all, a Father God, commands the fullest co-operation, most loyal support of every pastor, church and family of Mississippi a great institution, with a great faculty, doing a great work. I'll never forget the many healthful-looking, cleanly-clad children of bright and happy faces that served the Conference and many visitors to a most delightful repast.

Did you say, "Were any North Mississippi preachers there?" Well, I should say—Meek, McIlwain, Tucker, Holder, Gladney, Rowlin, Shearer, Gregory, Bradley, Neblett, McKibbin, and maybe others for all I know, were there, looking over the Conference and attending to matters of connectional interest. And last, but not least our honored friend and hero of many a battle, Rev. J. H. Richey, came in gripped and knighted, a true and tried soldier of the Cross, a charger of many encounters, chafing the bit, anxious to be on the firing line. I asked him if he had a word; he replied, "Not yet," indicating that he was ready and waiting for the fifty-first appointment. He preached a semi-centennial sermon at the recent North Mississippi Conference. What a record! What a glory crowns his venerable head! May his mantle descend to many sons in the gospel of Christ.

The entire atmosphere of the gathering was brotherly and spiritual. One feature of this Conference was the evangelistic services conducted by Dr. H. C. Morrison, of Wilmore, Ky. Dr. Morrison is an old-time holiness Methodist evangelist, possessing the faith and fervor of a Bascom or a Whitefield. His sermons ring like silver bells on Regeneration, Justification, and Sanctification. His denunciations of Higher Criticism and all forms of unsound doctrine, are terrific. His style is dramatic, forceful. He holds his hearers with an unflinching grip.

Bishop McMurry presided over the Conference with his usual ease and dignity, and was the subject of many favorable comments.

Another pleasant feature of the Conference was the visit of the once esteemed citizen of Jackson, and the much beloved ex-president of Millsaps College, Bishop W. B. Murrah, who was gladly welcomed by all. The writer enjoyed the privilege of a short interview with this dignitary of our church, and extracted some sidelights on our approaching General Conference.

As we pass our connectional men—Bennett, Burgin, Todd, and the others—under review, and recall their ringing messages, we feel that we are living in a dynamic age surcharged with infinite possibilities. Will our church be equal to the task, or come to a full measure of her golden opportunity? To this end let every fiber of our being be laid on the altar of Him who alone is strength, and wisdom, righteousness and truth; the mighty God, the Prince of Peace.

BE A SANTA CLAUS THIS CHRISTMAS.

By Luther E. Todd, Secretary.

You have been writing down the names of all the people whom you would like to remember this Christmas. Perhaps your list appears to you bigger than your purse, and you are now seeking to reduce it by erasing some of the names. An eraser is very good for some things, but when it is used to remove Christmas cheer it is in bad business. I entreat you by all that is pure and good not to rub out the "Forgotten Man." No member of your immediate family, or personal friend of any circle, is more deserving a Christmas gift from you than the superannuated preachers and widows of preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

An Ear Full For Santa. The nearly 1,000 living superannuated preachers, whom you are about to forget this holy season, built 4,000 of our churches—maybe you are pastor of one of these churches, or else a member there. They erected 1,500 parsonages—and perhaps you will have your family Christmas tree in one of these parsonages. They united in marriage 263,000 couples—did one of them tie your love knot? They conducted 410,000 funerals—was it your loved one dead? They christened 322,000 children—was your baby in the number? They led 1,000,000 souls to Christ and into His Church—do you remember who performed this service for you? They went day and night visiting people who were sick or in great perplexity—do you recall the time when one of them prayed at your bedside or helped you untangle your problems? They made towns and caused business to grow therein because they organized churches and were faithful pastors to them—are you one who profited by the zeal of these prophets? You must acknowledge that these old heroes served you well. And yet you are not planning to help them this Christmas. How can you be so ungrateful? You were nearly in the act of rubbing the "Forgotten Man" from your gift list! And some of you had not even thought to put him down. If you have to forget somebody this Christmas, forget yourself.

A Heart Full For Santa. May I remind you of the conditions now existing among the nearly one thousand "Forgotten Men" whose cause I am pleading? There are 400 of them with such poor sight that they may be considered practically blind. There are 470 of them with such impaired hearing that they may be thought of as practically deaf. There are 440 of them so confined to their canes, crutches, wheelchairs, and beds, that they may be listed as practically invalids. There are 170 of them constantly shut within doors, unable to leave the bedside of some dependent invalid for more than a brief period any day. There are scores of them with their backs to the wall fighting desperately, to keep their humble cottage homes from the maws of heavy mortgages. There are hundreds of them who yield their feeble and pain-racked bodies to the toil of odd jobs in order to meet high rents for poor houses and to pay unreasonable prices for insufficient food. And, withal, the church actually owes them a total of $3,000,000 salary deficit while they were active preachers in her service. Surely the God of justice and love led me to your door with this—just as you were about to scratch the "Forgotten Man" from your Christmas list, or in the nick of time to remind you that you had forgotten to put him on.

When Santa Claus Comes. Come Christmas morning, and there will be an easy stepping at your house. Nobody sleeps late. Everybody is up for breakfast—and what comes after. No cross words are spoken. The eyes of all sparkle and every face beams. Baby boy and baby girl, sons and daughters wise and otherwise, father and mother, the houseman and housegirl, everybody about the place—all quietly await that glorious thrill which riotously races through loving hearts on a Christmas morning. Daddy, I can see you when it happens, with your plumb bald head flirting with a hair or two, trying not to lose your everlasting poise in the midst of joys tingling in every nerve—even in your hair. And mother dear, never have you looked so beautiful or smiled so sweetly. And the children—but what's the use of trying to picture a lot of "kids" when it's Christmas? Breakfast over, and Santa Claus walks in. Then for two hours there is a jolly riot of good cheer, gift-making and gift-taking. It would be terrible for any member of this happy group to feel through it all a nagging pain at the heart because he failed to include the "Forgotten Man" in his Christmas list.

How To Be A Santa Claus! You are saying: "O me, what shall I do?" Do? Why man, woman, the thing to do is to remember the "Forgotten Man" this Christmas! How? Write a check for whatever amount you are able, and send it right away quick to the Board of Finance, 510-13 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., for the cause of the Superannuates. You say you are a preacher yourself. Then I know what you are—you are broke. But, my dear brother, there will be many people in your congregation Christmas Sunday who will gladly make a free-will offering for this Cause, if you will only give them the chance. Why not try it, and send the amount of the offering to the Board as stated. Maybe you are a Sunday school Superintendent—Fine! Are you near-sighted or long-seeing? What if the thought came knocking at your mind's door: "Request all the members of your school to bring a special offering on Christmas Sunday for the 'Forgotten Man' of our Methodism?" What would you do about it? Member of an Organized Sunday School Class, I'm giving you a hint—did you notice it? Epworth Leaguer, what a chance for you to get your League to do a nice thing for Christmas. Come on, folks, let us make this Christmas a real Big Joy Time.

Send all gifts and communications to the Board of Finance, 510-13 Security Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

As I went on the way of Life, the Spirit of Wisdom met me, at the trying place where those who love the Truth meet.

It was a large place in the vast domain of the King. Its dome was the arching sky, where the golden sun ruled the day, and the glad stars on dark azure spaces watched and softened the night. The velvet grasses carpeted the sod, and anon fair flowers bloomed and laughed in joy. Fair and winsome were the women of this company and the men were like unto the sons of God, and there were many—very many.

And I spoke to Wisdom, for I fain would know the meaning of all this wondrous scene.

"Pray, tell me, Wise One, who are these and whence they come?"

"These are the chosen, the children of Truth, who seek to know and do the Will. This Will is the law of Life."

Again I spoke, "How may these know this Will?"

"Seest then the Book they hold and read, the Book whose pages glow and shine with lettering of living light? That is the light of Life and Truth. Furthermore, the King has given to each of these a witnessing spirit, which is the seal of the Interpreter."

"Is there yet more of all this marvel?"

"Yes, the Master has said, 'Ye shall know the Truth and the Truth shall make you free.'"

These words to me were of much comfort and assurance, and my joy were full.

Mississippi and Louisiana preachers have within the last three weeks received new appointments. Every appointment, whether a return to a former pastorate or transfer to another, is new. The new year brings new problems, new responsibilities and new enterprises. In fact, life is ever new to me; its charm, its novelty, its changes are of surpassing interest. I am glad of this and pray that the day may never come when life shall lose its attractiveness and fascination. It is a marvelous panorama of changing beauty. The new field of labor gives new zest and stimulus to the faithful preacher. The hand of God has much more to do with these appointments than many designing men think or believe. Men who may have the privilege of selecting their fields of labor do not make the brilliant success they anticipate.

Yes, brother, God is still with his church. He rules and overrules. He guides his children now, in this present wilderness, where ambition, greed, and selfishness abound, even as in that elder day.

Well, the critics have descended upon me, all on account of that signal I waved on ecclesiastical air concerning our friend, Dr. Rice. It is amusing to me to have my orthodoxy questioned and to be placed in the category of modernists. I, a plain Methodist preacher, who for thirty-five or more years have never declared aught of this gospel not in accord with the standard of our fathers! Because I read, and keep somewhat in touch with the great throbbing, pulsing life of the times, and feel a sense of brotherhood and sympathy with those who may not see things just as another sees them, am I anathema? Men who know me know better of me, and I am content. Christ valued men more than tradition. So, with a conscience confessed to him, and a conscious love and quest for Truth wherever found, I will say:

"With a smile for those who love me,
And a sigh for those who hate,
Whatever sky above me,
Here's a heart for any fate."

CHEATS HIMSELF.

If we look at a snowflake through a microscope, we discover that instead of being a shapeless speck, it has a regular geometric form and is fashioned as perfectly and as beautifully as if it were to last as long as the hills. If we study a flower in the same way, we find that the parts so tiny that the unaided eye cannot distinguish them are shaped as perfectly and colored as richly as if they were the most striking features of the flower.

"Oh, well, it won't be noticed!" we heard some one say regarding a clumsy piece of work. How many of us have taken comfort to ourselves because our mistakes would not show! Sometimes we have gone even farther, and come to the conclusion that it was a waste of time to take pains with anything, unless the effort expended would be plain to the most casual observer.

This is not the principle upon which the Master Builder has made the world. The snowflake is fashioned as carefully as the star. The great oak is no more perfect than the tiniest flower that grows. And those whose achievements have brought them honor have not been the ones who thought that trifles were beneath their notice. The one who slights whenever he can do so without attracting notice cheats himself, for conscientious and careful work is its own reward.—Selected.

MY WORK.

I didn't begin with askings, I took my job and stuck;

I took the chance they wouldn't, and now they're calling it luck.

And they asked me how I did it, and I gave 'em the Scripture text,

"You keep your light so shining a little in front o' the next!"

They copied all they could follow, but they couldn't copy my mind.

And I left 'em sweating and stealing, a year and a half behind.

LEAVES AT PLAY.

Scamper, little leaves, about
In the autumn sun;
I can hear the old Wind shout,
Laughing as you run,
And I haven't any doubt
That he likes the fun.

When you've run a month or so,
Very tired you'll get;
But the same old wind, I know,
Will be laughing yet
When he tucks you in your snow,
Downy coverlet.

So run on and have your play,
Romp with all your might;
Dance across the autumn day,
While the sun is bright.
Soon you'll hear the old wind say,
"Little leaves, good-night!"

THE STORY OF A CHRISTMAS TREE.

By Willie C. Page.

In the solitude of the forest, near the bank of a stream whose waters rippled and sang over the rocks, and filled the air with the sweet cadence of its music; there grew a tall holly tree.

This tree made a beautiful picture towering above the other trees of the forest that grew about it.

The leaves on all the surrounding trees had turned yellow and brown and had drifted down to the dark earth for their last long sleep.

The holly tree stood proudly erect, holding high its head and waving its glossy green leaves, and its wealth of scarlet berries, so that all might see and admire. The soft wind whispered its adoration; the birds paid homage to its beauty, and sought shelter in its bright foliage; the blue skies smiled down, and the sunbeams caressed its glowing branches.

By leaning over the limpid waters of the stream the holly tree saw its own reflection, and this made it only more haughty and vain.

"I am Winter's only child, and queen of the whole forest," boasted the proud tree.

"Lend us some of your green leaves," pleaded the oak tree, now brown and barren.

"Just a few glossy leaves to cover our heads," begged the elms and maples, shivering in the cold.

"Give us some berries to brighten our lives," sobbed the scrub oaks and elder bushes.

The holly tree only tossed its branches and deigned no reply.

The day was cold and still, the snowflakes drifted softly and covered the whole brown earth with a mantle of white. The north wind, which had been blowing an icy gale, had fallen asleep. There was a profound stillness over all the forest, all nature seemed to be dreaming.

"Here! here!" exclaimed two woodmen who were carrying axes, "this is the tree we have been searching for the whole day. It will make a beautiful Christmas tree."

A few sharp strokes the keen blades cut into the smooth trunk, and soon it was felled to the ground. Many of its graceful branches were ruthlessly cut away. It was then put on a truck and carried from the forest.

Finally it was placed in the center of a parlor of a lonely home. Three little children, May, Rupert, and Helen, their bright faces aglow with pleasure, exclaimed: "Oh, mother, come and see our pretty Christmas tree!"

Mother trimmed it with tinsel, with gold and silver stars, festooned it with red berries and lighted it with many colored candles. Its branches were laden with handsome gifts. The children, singing Christmas carols, danced and played about the tree in great delight.

Christmas came and went away with its excite-ments, its joys, and brightness and pleasures. The holly tree had been very proud and happy, having been praised to the highest, and having been the center of attraction for a whole week.

The children returned to school, the holly tree was stripped of its holiday trimmings and thrown into a back alley, and trampled on by the feet of the passers-by—alone and forgotten.

The wind sang a requiem through its dead, withered branches, its berries were faded and shattered, pressed underfoot. As it lay desolate, dying, it began to think of its old home in the forest, and wished it had been kinder to its companions.

It thought of the golden crescent moon, shining softly and making dim shadows; of the stars, high and white; of the wind singing, rustling, cool and refreshing; of the murmuring, happy song of the brook.

"Oh, night wind," it sobbed brokenly, "won't you carry a message for me to the companions of my old home? Tell them I am sorry I was not kinder and more loving. Tell them that the only thing worth while is our service to others. Now that the end is near, my life seems so useless. Ask them to forgive me."

Children, so it is with human lives. Often it takes sorrow and adversity to cause us to realize our mistakes and failures. While in your golden, happy youth, form the habit of being kind, helpful and loving, or, like the proud Christmas tree, you may have cause for regret.

Lexington, Miss.

FINDING THE MOUNTAINS.

Two small heads were bent over the open geography.

"Looks like a long woolly worm crawling up the map," said Claude to Billie, just as Miss Swanson passed down the aisle. Looking over their shoulders, the teacher saw Claude's stubby finger tracing the course of the Appalachians, and she smiled as she heard the matter-of-fact Billie say:

"But of course they are just rocks and trees and hills."

Then as she moved away she heard Claude say with a sigh:

"Wish I could see 'em real close."

Miss Swanson had taken it for granted that all of her pupils had rambled over the beautiful White Mountains which were less than thirty miles away, almost in sight of that little Vermont schoolhouse. When the class in geography was called, her questions soon revealed that only one of her pupils had ever been to the mountains.

That evening she talked with the chairman of the Junior American Red Cross school committee and a plan of action was speedily agreed upon. Miss Swanson's pupils were to have an outdoor geography lesson. They took the editor of the town paper into their confidence, and next day he published an appeal to owners of automobiles to bring their cars to Miss Swanson's school the next Friday and take the pupils to the mountains which they knew chiefly as "a woolly worm on the map."

On the appointed afternoon twenty automobiles drove up to the schoolhouse and 85 excited and happy youngsters piled in, many of them for their first ride in an auto. Each car was decked with a Red Cross flag, and when the toll bridge over the river was reached the keeper waved his hand and shouted:

"This bridge is free to the Red Cross. Go it, you kids!"

Soon Claude and Billie and the rest of the pupils were gazing in delight at the towering trees and splashing brooks, as the cars wound up the mountain road. When the top was reached, they piled out and gathered about Miss Swanson, who told them ever so many things that were not set down in their geographies about the mountains. Then suddenly there appeared from somewhere a real picnic lunch, and after that came the delightful ride home through the evening shadows. So successful was the excursion into the open that the Junior Red Cross arranged for other lessons with the sky, the trees, the hills, and the meadows for textbooks.

As tired Claude crept into bed that night, he whispered to his mother that he hadn't seen even one woolly worm on the whole mountain side.—Selected.

THE GYPSY SMITH MEETING IN NEW ORLEANS.

All plans of organization have been completed for the Evangelistic Campaign in New Orleans under the leadership of Gypsy Smith. The meetings are to be held under the auspices of the New Orleans Ministerial Union. Seven denominations, composed of 64 churches, are heartily co-operating. The evening services will be conducted in a newly constructed auditorium with a seating capacity of 5000. The Tabernacle is situated on Clio Street, between St. Charles Avenue and Prytania Street. The Shubert Theatre has been engaged for the noon meetings.

Mr. McEwan will have charge of the music, and he will be assisted by a choir of 500 voices. The American Red Cross has consented to take charge of the Emergency Room, furnishing nurses, doctors and first aid treatment. An usher corps of 280 is being trained to do effective work in handling the crowds.

Gypsy Smith will arrive in New Orleans Thursday, January 5, and will address the Chamber of Commerce at noon of the same day. In the afternoon of the same day a reception will be tendered the distinguished evangelist in the Patio of the St. Charles Hotel. Representative citizens of the city will be invited.

Meetings will begin on January 5 and continue through February 2. The citizens of New Orleans and all the people of the surrounding country are urged to pray for the spiritual success of the services.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. O. E. Goddard, of the General Board of Missions, was in New Orleans on Monday of this week in connection with the missionary enterprises of the city.

From the "Big Brother," Greenville, Miss., we learn that, by actual count, sixty-seven young people were present at the Epworth League service on a recent Sunday evening. That is fine, indeed!

Rev. H. W. Cudd requests us to state that his post office address is Waterproof, La., instead of Belcher, La., an exchange of appointments having been effected between him and Rev. A. S. J. Neill.

Rev. Ellis Smith, injured some three weeks ago in an automobile accident, was able to be removed from the Touro Infirmary to his home last week, and he is steadily, though slowly, regaining his strength.

Rev. Albert S. Lutz, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Education, attended the recent meeting of the Educational Association at Memphis, Tenn., as the representative of the Louisiana Conference Board of Education.

Rev. J. B. Mitchell, formerly of Mississippi and a distinguished graduate of Millsaps College, now a member of the Florida Conference, was elected a delegate to the General Conference at the recent session of that Conference.

The Executive Committee of the Reorganized International Sunday School Association officially announces that it will hold its sixteenth Quadrennial Convention in Kansas City, Mo., Wednesday to Tuesday, June 21-27, both days inclusive, in the year 1922.

Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook, of Seminary, Miss., informs us that he will begin a revival meeting at Seminary on the evening of December 26, in which the preaching will be done by Rev. Henry A. Wood, of Waynesboro, Miss. The meeting will close on the following Sunday.

Rev. R. L. Ellis writes that he is at his new post of labor, Ethel, Miss., and that he has been given a very cordial welcome. After being met at the train and escorted to the parsonage, he was liberally "pounded" by the good people of Ethel. The work of the new year starts off well.

Rev. W. L. Graves, presiding elder of the Hattiesburg District, Mississippi Conference, reports that the work of the district seems to be moving along nicely. Preachers and people are becoming settled for the work of a new year, and they are planning for the greatest year in the history of the district.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, authorizes us to announce that Bishop McMurtry has appointed Rev. C. P. Jones to Magnolia, in the Brookhaven District, and Rev. C. F. Emery to Fayette, in the Vicksburg District, thus exchanging these two brethren.

Rev. and Mrs. R. C. Nanny, of Hickory Flat, Miss., desire to express through the Advocate their gratitude to the good people of Hickory Flat for the many good things to eat recently given to them, and to thank them for all their kindnesses. Brother Nanny writes that the outlook for the year is good.

Rev. R. H. Clegg, Raleigh, Miss., writes that the work of the new year starts off well. Brother Clegg is desirous of purchasing a second-hand set of McLaren's Exposition of the Holy Scriptures. If any reader of the Advocate has a set to dispose of, let him communicate with Brother Clegg at the above address.

Brother P. W. Shell, of Houston, Miss., in directing us to send the Advocate to three addresses as a Christmas present, states that his wife, now seventy-one years of age, has been reading the paper since she was ten years old, and that she "sends love" to the Advocate. Blessings upon her and all her loved ones!

The weekly calendar issued by Chaplain J. A. Randolph, of Fort McPherson, Ga., gives not only the announcements of the weekly activities under his charge, but it also contains many suggestive comments and fine extracts from standard literature, all of which make interesting reading. Chaplain Randolph is a member of the North Mississippi Conference.

A note from Rev. H. M. Ellis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, informs us that all the preachers of the district are getting settled in their pastorates, that both preachers and people are well pleased with the outlook, and that all intend to work and pray that this may be the greatest year in the history of the district.

Professor M. C. White, of the chair of English at Millsaps College, delivered an interesting lecture in the college chapel one evening recently on the subject, "Hamlet, His Task and His Problems." This was understood to be the first of a series of lectures that will be delivered at the college, to which the public generally is invited.

As a matter of convenience to the many who desire to have all the appointments of our three patronizing Conferences accessible, we printed them, as officially announced, in our last week's issue. The few changes that have been announced since the Conferences met can easily be made by those interested, and that copy of the Advocate will be worth preserving for future reference.

The bulletin of the J. S. Noel, Jr., Methodist Church, of Shreveport, La., announces that Dr. G. Campbell Morgan will deliver a series of Bible lectures in Shreveport, January 1-12, at the First Methodist Church, under the auspices of the Ministers' Association. A movement is under way to get the people of the city to open their homes for the entertainment of visiting preachers from nearby towns.

We clip the following from the Lincoln County Times (Brookhaven, Miss.), of December 15: "Rev. T. W. Adams occupied the Methodist pulpit Sunday night and preached a sermon full of his old-time fire. Though he was granted the superannuate relation two years ago, Mr. Adams is frequently called on to preach, and the old soldier of the Cross finds his chiefest joy in delivering a gospel message."

The American Bible Society is making a new departure in issuing an edition of the Scriptures with a concordance. The Society exists to circulate the Bible "without note or comment," but since a concordance is purely a key to the location of words and passages, it does not violate this fundamental principle of the Society. It has taken over two years to prepare the concordance, and it has involved a large expense.

If the brethren who pledged themselves to use their utmost endeavor to secure a definite number of subscriptions to the Advocate at the recent sessions of our Annual Conferences will take up the work of securing those subscriptions at once, we venture to say they will find it easier than if they delay several weeks or months. Several of the brethren have already begun their campaigns, and the results show that the subscriptions can be secured.

Rev. J. Early Gray, recently pastor at Magnolia, Miss., but appointed to Moss Point at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, had the misfortune to suffer a painful injury just before leaving Magnolia. In stepping from the street to the curbing of the sidewalk, his foot slipped and he fell, severely straining a ligament in his left shoulder. He came to the Touro Infirmary, this city, where he received skillful treatment, so that he was able to go to his new charge in the early part of this week.

The Christmas edition of the Herald, published in Algiers, a part of New Orleans but just across the river from the main part of the city, is a most creditable production. It is especially interesting to us because of the amount of space given to the history of Methodism in New Orleans generally and in Algiers particularly. The articles are well illustrated with cuts of the new church building now nearing completion in Algiers, of the parsonage, and of Rev. C. C. Wier, the popular and efficient pastor. There is a wealth of information in the write-up that could well be put to use by some historian of Methodism in this section.

Dr. A. H. Strong, a distinguished Baptist minister and for many years president of Rochester Theological Seminary, died at his home in Pasadena, Calif., recently.

We have seen an announcement to the effect that Dr. David G. Downey, of New York, has been appointed fraternal delegate from the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. Titus Lowe, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Omaha, Neb., has been elected secretary of the Board of Foreign Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Dr. S. Earl Taylor.

Bishop Thomas Nicholson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been elected president of the American Anti-Saloon League to succeed Bishop Luther B. Wilson. Bishop Wilson has efficiently served the organization as president for twenty years. Bishop W. N. Almsworth and Hon. Josephus Daniels, of our own church, are two of the new vice presidents.

From the Baptist Record, Jackson, Miss., we take the following: "Mr. W. L. Spinks, who has been for several years a popular and successful Methodist evangelist, on the first Sunday in December united with the Baptist church at Brookhaven, and it is now his purpose to preach the gospel according to Paul." We hope it is not ungenerous to say that we thought the Baptists set great store by the gospel according to Jesus Christ.

The following, taken from a recent number of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, will be of interest to the many Louisiana friends of Dr. Werlein: "Pacific Coast Methodism has received a distinguished accession in the coming of Dr. S. H. Werlein to be presiding elder of the Los Angeles District. He is a man of great personal dignity, but withal brotherly and sympathetic, a great preacher and an enthusiastic leader. He has been royally received and the district stewards have fixed his salary at $3500, an increase of $500."

We have heard excellent reports of the work of the brethren who were transferred to the Louisiana Conference and appointed to important pastorates—Dr. Chas. W. Crisler, First Church, Baton Rouge, Dr. H. F. Brooks, First Church, Shreveport, Rev. O. W. Bradley, First Church, Alexandria, and Rev. W. A. Waddill, First Church, Monroe. These brethren will receive a hearty welcome to Louisiana, and we are sure they will be delighted with the fine people among whom they labor.

The following have responded to our suggestion in last week's issue of the Advocate that a cash contribution for Henry Leon, a faithful colored employe of the Advocate office who recently lost practically all his household effects by fire, would be gratefully received: Rev. L. Carley, Ellisville, Miss., $1; Rev. H. N. Brown, New Orleans, $1; Chaplain A. F. Vaughan, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, $2.50; Rev. R. A. Meek, Black Hawk, Miss., $2.50. These amounts have been turned over to Henry, and he will apply them to the purpose intended.

From a personal letter from Rev. F. R. Power, formerly of the Louisiana Conference but now of the Little Rock Conference, we learn that he was appointed to the Portland and Parkdale charge at the recent session of that Conference. This is a delightful charge, paying a good salary, and having a good parsonage at Portland. Brother Power and his family were given a most cordial reception upon their arrival at their new home, and the work of the new year begins most auspiciously. The many friends of Brother and Sister Power will be glad to know that Mrs. Power's health is greatly improved.

We have received the following sad news from Rev. R. P. Neblett, of Durant, Miss.: "After a long illness, Miss Bell Howell, daughter of Brother F. A. Howell, one of our stewards, passed to her eternal reward at noon, December 15, at her sister's home in Durant. She was buried in the family lot in the cemetery at Lexington, Miss., Friday, December 16, the funeral services being conducted by the writer and Rev. J. W. Ward." The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to Brother Howell, one of its best friends, and to the other loved ones and friends who are in sorrow. May sustaining grace be abundantly supplied to them!

We clip the following from the Oxford (Miss.) Eagle of December 1: "Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, who has served the Methodist pastorate here the past two years, has been returned to this work, and a most pleasant and unique thing happened last Wednesday evening, when about fifty Methodists, with a truck load of groceries and good things to eat of every conceivable kind, stormed the parsonage and, with full arms and happy greetings of welcome and good wishes, almost swept this good pastor and his excellent wife off their feet with surprise. The guests repaid to the parlor and with Mrs. A. W. Milden at the piano, sang from sincere hearts, 'Blest Be the Tie That Binds.' After a few words of prayer, appreciative words were spoken in behalf of the pastor and his family by Drs. Milden, Kennon, Murphy, Hunt, and others. Brother Lipscomb, who enjoys the distinction of being one of the strongest and most popular preachers in the North Mississippi Conference, assured his people of his hearty appreciation and pleasure in the opportunity of serving them again, and thus pastor and people rejoiced and pledged their loyalty—a most beautiful thing to do."

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. C. A. Northington, Lambert, Miss., 2; Rev. J. M. Lewis, Collins, Miss., 3; Rev. W. A. Hays, Meridian, Miss., 6; Rev. D. B. Boddie, Glenmore, La., 9; Rev. A. M. Shaw, Oakdale, La., 18; Rev. S. J. Davies, Coushatta, La., 2; Rev. J. D. Simpson, Shaw, Miss., 11; Rev. W. W. Drake, Shreveport, La., 22; P. W. Shell, Houston, Miss., 3; Rev. R. M. Brown, Merryville, La., 8; Rev. W. W. Mitchell, Cleveland, Miss., 7.

TO THE PRESIDING ELDERS, PASTORS AND CENTENARY TREASURERS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Centenary record from the Finance Department showing the standing of the Conferences for the month of November just received, and our Conference is in the seventh place—for which we are glad. But, during the Christmas month, let's remember in a practical way, and helpful way the "thousands" who will not have any Christmas because they have never heard of Jesus.

If all our Centenary Pledges were paid for the three years, it would mean that many would know Him, who will not unless we pay our pledges. I believe the church that is active and systematic in pushing the collection of the pledges is going to get the money—then, why not be active all the time?

The time has been extended for the third-year payments, in order to allow us to come up to 60 per cent; let's call on every subscriber in each church during December and January, with our aim to bring each subscriber and each church up to 60 per cent. Our report at Conference had 23 churches that had paid 60 per cent or more on their pledges. Who will be the next to get on the "Honor Roll?"

Wishing you a Merry Christmas, and Happy New Year, I am, Yours for service,
W. D. HAWKINS,
Conference Centenary Treasurer,
Conference Missionary Secretary.

Nothing is supremely great that has not in it the note of joy.—Patrick Carnegie Simpson.

A LAY SERMON.

By Richard H. Edmonds,
Editor Manufacturers Record.

We constantly hear that the world is looking to America for spiritual leadership. This is not wholly true, but if it were, the world would look in vain until America ceased to be pharasaical as to its own righteousness and realize that sin and crime and irreligion are rampant throughout the land.

Until America has a new baptism of righteousness, until the professing Christians of the land realize their own shortcomings, and consecrate their lives, their time, their talents of brain and money to the service of God and man, until politicians and business men, employers and employees, producers and consumers alike, give full heed to the Divine Command to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself, and do unto others as they would that they should do unto them, there will be no righteousness of a nation fit to lead the spiritual forces of the world to higher ground.

There is spreading over our land the accursed atheistic teachings of German philosophy, more powerful for evil than were all Germany's armies and navies, and if America does not give heed to this menace its downfall will be as certain as was Germany's. The life of the nation, its every business interest, in the bank, in the factory or on the farm, is staked upon a new and all-powerful call to righteous living and Christian service. When moral rottenness exists unblushing in places of great financial power, as recently shown in New York, without loss of caste, when men lie and cheat in business, when men seek to wreck others for their own personal gain or aggrandizement, or power, when men murder others because they are willing to work without the domination of alien radical labor leaders, and go unpunished for their crimes and are commended by their fellow members; when a great government institution year after year seeks by blackmailing or bulldozing to force others into its power or else to destroy them, and no national protest is made, and thousands of business men stand by, either from cowardice or indifference, and refuse to fight against this immorality; when the voluptuous dances that would have disgraced even corrupt Rome and Ephesus at their worst sweep over the land; when men of position and influence proclaim that some laws cannot be enforced because the criminal power is greater than the Government's, and that the criminal element must therefore be given full sway by repealing the laws the criminals do not like, what right has our country to claim the spiritual power to lead the world?

On a monument erected in one of the highest passes of the Andes to commemorate a peaceful settlement of a threatened war between Chili and Argentine, are carved the words:

"Sooner shall these mountains crumble into dust than Chili and Argentine break the peace which at the feet of Christ the Redeemer they have sworn to maintain."

Until America in the spirit of that pledge puts aside all self-righteousness, sees its own shortcomings as Almighty God sees them, and humbly seek Divine forgiveness and Divine wisdom, it cannot become a real spiritual leader of the world, for it cannot hold aloft the uplifted Christ as the only salvation of the world from sin and wars. The welfare of business, the safety of our country and of the world from wars and endless crimes, are staked on this, and woe betide our future if we fail to read the signs of the times, and call the nation to a revival of religion, pure and undefiled. In vain will we talk disarmament, in vain will we decree war and expect peace while the world is ruled by sin and while America fails to fit itself to become a moral and spiritual leader of mankind.—From Manufacturers Record, Baltimore, Md.

MRS. M. E. KING, beloved wife of Rev. Dr. W. B. King, fell asleep Oct. 21, 1921, she being a patient Christian sufferer for the greater part of her life, but an invalid for the past two years. She rejoiced in her Lord and lived by faith. "His grace" was all-sufficient for her daily needs. She read her Bible daily until she was too weak to hold the book; then she read from the knowledge of His Word that she had stored away in her pure heart and mind. She looked forward to Thursday of each week, when her appreciated friend, the Christian Advocate, came. She loved her church paper as a dear friend. She loved all her friends and counted them by scores. She was a devoted mother to her six children, a loving, faithful wife, and a beautiful Christian, always interested in the work of her church for the good of humanity. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, since she was 17 years of age. Had she lived until the 30th of January, 1922, she would have been 74 years of age. Sleep, but not forever, dear mother, but rise to join your beloved ones who have gone before, and enter into the joys of your Lord. Your pure, sweet, gentle, unselfish life will always be an inspiration to your loving daughter,

RACHEL.

The subject of this sketch, MRS. LEILA CRISLER CAMPBELL, was born on May 1, 1870, and died on Dec. 5, 1921, aged 51 years, 7 months and 4 days. She was married to Mr. C. C. Campbell in 1888. Eight children were born to this union, two of whom preceded her to the world above. She leaves six children—five boys and one girl—mother, and four brothers, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Sister Campbell joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when very young, about 10 years of age, and lived a consistent member till the day of her death. Sister Campbell loved her church and was always in attendance upon its services—preaching, Sunday school, prayer meetings, Woman's Missionary Society. When she was absent we knew she was sick. She had been in declining health for some time, but up most of the time. She and her mother lived happily together, and both were loyal members of the Methodist Church. May the God who doeth all things well abundantly bless all the loved ones left behind. They mourn, but not as those who have no hope, but feel assured that she is at rest with the Lord on high. She will not come back to them, but they may go to her.

THE CHILD IS FATHER OF THE MAN.

Forty-two years ago when William E. Gladstone was inaugurated Lord Rector of Glasgow University, there was a Canadian Presbyterian minister's son in the crowd of students who heard his eloquent inaugural. This young man said to himself: "I will one day be where he is." That purpose has now been fulfilled. Andrew Bonar, the new Lord Rector, speaking to another generation of young Scots at Glasgow the other day, discussed "Success in Life," and began by narrating this personal incident. He said: "As I left that great gathering—I remember it as vividly as if it had been yesterday—I left it with the hope and indeed with the determination of one day occupying the position which was then filled by Mr. Gladstone." This incident starts reflection on the power of the spoken word to touch the springs of action, and upon the power of the human will to carry a youth along the ascending path of his ambition.

In Bangalore, India, a copy of The British Weekly containing the Law-Gladstone item fell under the eye of Bishop J. E. Robinson, who proceeded to write the following letter to the editor of that great London paper. As it is of especial interest to Methodists, The Christian Advocate passes it on: "To the Editor of the British Weekly: "Sir: In response to your request for a parallel incident to that which is related in The British Weekly of March 17 (p. 502), respecting Mr. Bonar Law, I think you will agree with me that this forms a case parallel.

"Bishop James M. Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia (including India), on an occasion many years ago, was delivering a missionary address before a body of ministers in a Chicago church, when a young minister, Canadian by nationality, dropped in. Whilst listening to the address a powerful conviction took possession of this young man that he should one day occupy the position in India held at the time by the speaker of the hour.

"Within a twelve month (1887-88) the young minister received his appointment to Calcutta from the Board of Foreign Missions. After a very successful pastorate of nearly thirteen years in the large Methodist Episcopal Church on D'haramtala street, in that city, the minister referred to, Frank W. Warne, was elected in 1900 Bishop for the Southern Asia field, becoming the actual successor of Bishop Thoburn, since retired because of ill-health. Bishop Warne, now residing at Lucknow, is finishing twenty-one years of episcopal service in what is generally regarded as probably the most prosperous mission field of the church to which he belongs.

"I am tempted to add an interesting fact. One winter, in the Canadian town in which Bishop Warne was born and brought up, the local church had evangelistic services which continued for several weeks. The only fruit of the revival, in actual accessions to the church, was a lad of thirteen, the age at which, I learn from The British Weekly, Hugh Price Hughes was converted. It seemed a very poor return for the praying and preaching of several weeks. But that solitary accession to the church was Frank W. Warne. To secure the conversion of the boy who afterward became a great soul-winner and a deeply consecrated leader in the army of the Lord, was, in this writer's judgment, well worth the labor of those apparently fruitless weeks."—California Christian Advocate.

JUST FOR FATHERS.

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson gave a very direct message to fathers in a recent number of Home Companion. Amongst other things he said:

"In the earlier years children can be controlled by their mother, but by and by there comes a time when they begin to note the conduct of the father. No eyes are keener than the eyes of a child. If his father does not pray, prayer must be unnecessary. Grown men surely know what is needed. If his father never reads the Bible, then the Big Book can be dispensed with. Fathers know what books are most worth reading. If he does not go to church, then church attendance is a pastime and not a duty, for men, so old and wise as father is, would not neglect church if church were of value to them. If he never talks of God, or Christ, or the Holy Spirit, if he knows no interest in the Bible or church or Christian work, the inference is clear and certain that religion is not a vital part of human life. It is not what the children are told from time to time, but what they see in the lives of their parents from day to day which makes the deepest impression on their characters."—Selected.

THE INN OF LIFE.

"No room!
No room!
The Inn is full,
Yes—overfull,
No room have we
For such as ye—
Poor folk of Galilee,
Pass on! Pass on!

"Nay then!
Your charity
Will ne'er deny
Some corner mean,
Where she may lie unseen;
For see:
Her time is nigh.

"Alack! And she,
So young and fair!
Place have we none;
And yet—how bid ye gone?
Stay then! but there
Among the beasts
Ye may find room,
And eke a truss
To lie upon.

"No room!
No room!
No room for Thee
Thou Man of Galilee!
The house is full,
Yea, overfull.
There is no room for Thee—
Pass on! Pass on!

"Nay—see!
The place is packed,
We scarce have room
For our own selves,
So how shall we Find room for Thee,
Thou Man of Galilee?
Pass on! Pass on!

"But, if thou shouldst
This way again,
And we can find
So much as one small corner
Free from guest,
Not then in vain
Thy quest
But now—
The house is full.
Pass on!

"Christ passes
On this ceaseless quest.
Nor will He rest
With any,
Save as chiefest Guest."

Others Relieved— Why Not You?

Catarrh Does Harm—Get Rid Of It.

Catarrh of the nose or throat when it becomes chronic weakens the delicate lung tissues, deranges the digestive organs, and may lead to consumption. It impairs the taste, smell and hearing, and affects the voice. It is a constitutional disease and requires a constitutional remedy. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by purifying the blood removes the cause of the disease and gives permanent relief. This alternative and tonic medicine has proved entirely satisfactory to thousands of families in three generations. If there is biliousness or constipation, take Hood's Pills—they are purely vegetable, gentle, thorough.

SCORES TURNED AWAY BECAUSE THERE WAS NO ROOM.

Young Women's Co-Operative Home,
Houston, Texas.

By Deaconess Annie Alford.

When John Howard Paine died in far-off Tripoli, the United States sent a warship to convey his body home. Paine was not a diplomat, nor a soldier nor a statesman. He was an humble American citizen without title or degree, but he was the author of "Home, Sweet Home."

Some one has written of the miserable "hall room and twenty-one banquets at seven cents each." It was this condition and the thought of giving employed girls the nearest thing to "Home, Sweet Home" that prompted the people of our Methodism to establish Young Women's Co-operative Homes. God speed the day when the church shall provide in every city safe homes for business young women.

The Co-operative Home in Houston, Texas, was built eleven years ago. Eternity alone can tell what it has meant to the girls away from home and in a strange city. The Y. W. C. A. having been destroyed by fire in the early spring, ours is the only Protestant home for girls in this bustling, growing city of one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants. Scores have been turned away because there was no more room.

In view of this condition the Board of City Missions made some marked changes in the regulations of residence in the Home. All girls over twenty-one years of age who had lived in the Home two years or more were asked to find other boarding places, it being assumed they had been here long enough to become established in business and knew the city well enough to find safe homes.

Often the girls express their appreciation of a home where they can live on their salaries, and feel safe. Yesterday a new girl came and after the evening devotion in our large homelike dining-room she timidly said, "Do you read the Bible and have prayer here every day?" Being told that was a part of the home life, she said, "How beautiful to have that in a home like this."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

A Growing Society at Bossier City.

The Bossier City Woman's Missionary Society was organized a few months ago, and now has a membership of twenty-three. Every department of the work is organized, and large activities are planned for 1922. There are many problems for an auxiliary to cope with in a growing town, but, with every member willing to do her part, a wide-awake president, and a pastor with a wife to stand by the missionary workers, we shall be able to accomplish much of the work that lies before us.

The following are the newly-elected officers for the year 1922: President, Mrs. Dell Sutherland; Vice President, Mrs. Hal Alston; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. E. L. Hill Tihman; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Moses Brown;

Treasurer, Mrs. G. A. Allen; Assistant Treasurer, Mrs. Robert Glenn; Superintendent Young People's Work, Mrs. D. M. McClanahan; Superintendent Children's Work, Mrs. A. H. Parker; Superintendent Mission Study and Publicity, Mrs. A. L. Johnson; Superintendent Social Service, Mrs. Walter Owlsey; Superintendent Supplies, Mrs. Jack Jones; Superintendent Local Work, Mrs. J. A. Edgar.

MRS. J. O. TILMAN.

FROM NOEL MEMORIAL, SHREVEPORT, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: I am beginning my sixth year at Noel Memorial with good prospects for a prosperous year. In the month since Conference, much time has been spent in planning for the year's work. Among other things done, we have secured the services of two ministerial students at Centenary as assistants to take the place of Brother Roy Johns, whom the Bishop took from us; we have made our every-member canvass for the sixth consecutive year, with the best results yet obtained; a pleasant reception has been tendered by the church to the pastor and his wife, in which the presiding elder and the retiring assistant pastor were included; the habit of increasing the pastor's salary has been kept up by the Board of Stewards in such hearty and unanimous fashion as to make the pastor's heart grow warm; the Missionary Society has proposed a budget that is a distinct advance over previous years; the Sunday school has taken a fresh start and recorded an attendance last Sunday that passes all previous records for the fall season; the cause of Christian literature has been presented in a sermon, at the close of which 22 subscriptions were taken for the New Orleans Christian Advocate, 5 for the Nashville, and 1 for the Texas. We are planning to make the sixth year our best, with special emphasis on evangelistic results and increased religious intelligence.

Dr. H. F. Brooks has begun his work at First Church and made a fine impression generally on the congregation and community. Brother Walton is beginning to plan for the new and greater building that is demanded at Texas Avenue. Brother Mangum is continuing the notable work begun last year at Queensboro, which included the starting of a new brick church. Both his congregation and Brother Walton's are planning a merited increase in the pastor's salary.

Brother Parker has made a good beginning at Bossier City, and Brother Johns has begun at Cedar Grove at a pace that promises a great year.

Centenary College is growing in attendance and enthusiasm, and the plans made indicate great enlargement.

The presiding elder has been on the go constantly since Conference and has his hand on each problem that has arisen.

On the whole, Shreveport Methodism never had a more hopeful outlook.

Yours fraternally,
W. WINANS DRAKE.

FROM SHAW, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: After having closed my first year at Shaw, which was very pleasant, we were returned for the second year, and while wife and I were at Conference the good women of the Missionary Society renewed the parsonage by adding new paper, paint, rugs, etc. We had been ordered not to rush back too quickly, so we arrived Thursday night, and were met by friends with a car and brought to the parsonage, where bright fires were burning. There was plenty to eat on the table, the pantry was well filled, and last, but not least, such a hearty welcome! These are a choice people. We start the New Year well.

We send you a good list of subscribers, as we promised, and think more will follow.

Yours fraternally,

J. D. SIMPSON

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

From Tuesday to Friday was spent on the Lucedale charge and Lucedale circuit. We had the pictures at Lucedale, Shipman, and Merrill. We also had a meeting at Central school, making three points on the circuit.

The Sunday school at Shipman is resolved to continue. I feel that there is an opportunity with these folks if some one will lead out.

At Merrill they have no school, but I feel they will organize and go to work. The Lucedale school has agreed to give them literature so they can begin at once.

Brother Jackson is getting started on this new work. It is purely missionary territory and these places have no preaching at all—that is, all except Shipman. The church building at Merrill has not been used in some time. There are people in this territory and they need the Gospel.

The Lucedale school is in shape to do some advanced work. They will, with some new departures, be enabled to meet the Standard. I trust they will do so in the near future. They have a very fine woman who is leading the Teacher Training work and this will mean much to the whole school and to the church work.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS and HAPPY NEW YEAR TO ALL.

Let us pray for greater success. Let us pray for more love and consecration.

The Sunday School Board wishes you the greatest year of your life. May it be a year of power and success. We beg of you that you pray for us that our work this year will be the best in its history.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

Are You Ailing?

A Suggestion Worth While

Jackson, Miss.—"My trouble was feminine weakness. I suffered misery at times and was weak most all of the time. I was reading in a newspaper about Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription and I saw that I could order one of Dr. Pierce's books, the 'Common Sense Medical Adviser,' from him, so I did, and I found my complaint was woman's trouble. I started on the Favorite Prescription and am glad to say it did me all the good in the world. I had three doctors; they all said that I had to be operated upon, but after using the Prescription I began to feel better. I have now taken three bottles and feel fine. Am glad to recommend Dr. Pierce's medicine to all my friends."

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots. Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gidney, Sardis, Miss.

Two teachers at Mt. Olivet, on the Shuford circuit, Miss Cora Lewellen and Mrs. Vashti Wilson, took the examination on the last half of "Life in the Making" recently. The class at Richland, under the supervision of Mrs. M. W. Doty, had to suspend on account of sickness until after the holidays.

A half-dozen men have asked for help in organizing the Four-Times-a-Year institute. The Shuford circuit has announced their first meeting the latter part of January. If you want literature sent to your superintendents, just say the word.

The one crying need everywhere is trained teachers. It is not easy to get people to study; it is hard to get yourself to do serious work only when you are forced to it. One good training class does, you weed out those who lack depth of character and seriousness of purpose. The list of those who are willing to pay the price is growing constantly. If you have never tried to have a training class in your school, turn over a new leaf at the beginning of the year and let us help you.

You want to increase your enrollment, build up your congregations, discover and train leaders? Organize every class above the juniors in your school and put them to work. Look around at the schools that are outgrowing their old quarters and you will see a few organized classes have something to do with this state of affairs.

A Centenary Special in the Sunday school is a means of grace. The special with missionary instruction back of it will give inspiration to the entire school. Another thing we must not forget: we have promised God several millions we have not paid. We must do this or else be in danger of having God forsake us. I know you will have opposition and it will be hard to get any to lead in this work. Get on your knees and win the victory in the presence of God—go by faith.

The man who looks at conditions continually cannot but despair; but a good, long look into the Face of Him who has all power in heaven and earth will give strength to lift the poor, fallen world upon its feet. During the Christmas holidays is a good time to read and pray much. If your church does not observe Watch Night, it is possible for many of us to pray the old year out and the new year into a closer walk with God. Blessings upon all who are trying to teach the things of Christ to the rising generation.

NOEL MEMORIAL SUNDAY SCHOOL, SHREVEPORT, LA.

Noel Memorial, in recording an attendance of 495 to-day (Sunday, Dec. 18) smashed all past fall attendance records of this growing Sunday school, the attendance of the Sunday before being 485.

Sunday was a day of remarkable activity in the school. The intermediate department broke all records of that department; the Russ Class, in the intermediate, recorded an attendance of 82, all records being broken; the Saturday Young People's Class had an attendance of 118, breaking all class records.

For the ninth consecutive Sunday, Noel Memorial recorded a larger attendance than the combined records of Texas Avenue and Queensboro Methodist Sunday schools in their campaign of Sunday school development.

Christmas Sunday will be observed as "Doll Day" by all departments of the Sunday school.

BREEZE CAME DANCING IN.

Last night o'er the torrid city
A little cool air blew;
It brought a breath of country lanes
Drenched in the evening dew,
It spilled the scent of roses,
And the smell of fragrant grass Brought dreams of moon-touched meadow
As its feet went dancing past.

Out of a great cloud breathing
Along the southern sky,
It came with healing on its wings
The stately city by.
With freshness and with coolness
And flowery fragrance shod—
It seemed to come a spirit
From the paradise of God.

OPENINGS IN CHAPLAINS' RESERVE CORPS.

Colonel John T. Axton, Chief of Chaplains, has conveyed to the Federal Council's Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains the information that recent action of the War Department has opened the way for many clergymen to receive commissions as chaplains in the Officers' Reserve Corps of the United States Army.

The purpose of the Corps is to provide a reserve of officers in all branches of the military service who will be available and trained for their respective duties in the event of a national emergency.

The requirements for appointments as chaplains in the Reserve Corps are simple. The general conditions are citizenship in the United States or the Philippine Islands, applicants to be between 21 and 60 years of age, and duly accredited by and of good standing in some recognized religious denomination or organization, with two years of practical experience in ministerial work. Those without prior military service must undergo an examination which embraces a general knowledge of the principles of education, economics, sociology, and the writing of a brief thesis dealing with some phase of the work of the ministry.

Each appointment will be for a period of five years. The authorized grades in which appointments may be made in the Chaplains' Section of the Officers' Reserve Corps are, first lieutenant to lieutenant colonel, and promotions to the next higher grades, within the limits or rank stated, will be considered, in time of peace, upon application through military channels, after a commission has been held for at least one year in the lower grade.

So far as is practicable, chaplains will be assigned to units of the Reserve Corps in the locality of their places of residence. The President, to the extent provided by the law, may from time to time, order Reserve Officers to active duty and for any period, but except in time of National emergency expressly declared by Congress, no Reserve Chaplain shall be employed on active duty for more than fifteen days in any calendar year without his consent.

A chaplain, as is the case with all officers in the Reserve Corps, shall not be entitled to pay and allowances except when on active duty, but when on such duty status he shall receive the same pay and allowances as an officer of the Regular Army of the same grade and length of service, and will also receive mileage from his home to his first station and from his last station to his home; but shall not be entitled to retirement or retired pay.

The prescribed duties of chaplains are closely analogous to those performed by clergymen in civil communities, modified only by the peculiar conditions attaching to military life, and especially the necessity that each chaplain shall, so far as practicable, serve the moral and religious needs of the entire command to which he is assigned, either through his own personal services or through the co-operative effort of others.

There are vacancies at this time for chaplains in the Officers' Reserve Corps in many sections of the United States, and clergymen who may be interested should apply to the Adjutant General of the Army or to the Chief of Chaplains for blank forms of application and such further information as they may desire.

GOODWILL INDUSTRIES.

In connection with the Centenary Methodist Institute in Nashville, we have opened up what is known as Goodwill Industries. For this department of the Institute work we have secured the services of Rev. G. E. Holley. Mr. Holley took special training for this work in the Morgan Memorial Church, in Boston. After graduating in the course, he was used by the Methodist Episcopal Church to organize Goodwill Industries in the large cities in the North and East. All this time, however, he was a member of the Oklahoma Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He now comes to us well equipped for this line of work. As this work is not very well known in our church, a word of explanation might be in order.

Every family in Nashville will be invited to participate in this work. They can send in clothing, shoes, hats, bedding, carpets, rugs, musical instruments, toys, in fact anything they desire to donate. Such articles as are in need of repair will be repaired at our storehouses, thereby giving employment to shoe repairers, cleaners and dyers, and women who can mend clothes, furniture repairers, et cetera. These articles are then sold at a reasonable price to people of very moderate income. What little clear profit there is, goes back into the maintenance of the business. It is the design of the Home Department and the Methodism of Nashville to make this something of a connectional institution, especially for churches east of the Mississippi River. Hence, any church which is not carrying on something of this kind in its own city, may send any of these articles to Nashville with the assurance that they will be appreciated and rightly used. A box of clothes, a box of hats, of shoes, might be collected and shipped in by one of a thousand churches. Those desiring to enter into this good work will please mail or ship theirs to Nashville, to Rev. G. E. Holley, care of Centenary Methodist Institute. In the course of time it is probable that we can have a large number of these Goodwill Industry Plants in our other City Missions. Indeed, one has already been started in Chattanooga and perhaps some others. But all the churches in towns and cities and country places which have not a Goodwill Industry of their own will have a chance to participate in this work. Why not a few hundred churches send a Christmas box of second-hand goods to the Centenary Methodist Institute at Nashville? O. E. GODDARD.

December 8, 1921.

Our next General Conference should arrange for some sort of co-ordination of general boards, so that any movements for the advancement of the kingdom may have unity and cohesion. The crossing of collections, of rights-of-way, of appeals to the people, is a source of confusion. We are, seemingly, tied up for a time as to drives. A plan should be worked out by which the whole church could put on a quadrennial campaign for budget necessities and push it as the Centenary was pushed. The elimination of rivalry would be a great point gained. So many pulling causes confuse and dissipate. Who will be the ecclesiastical statesman to work out a plan of deliverance and consolidation? — The Midland Methodist.

WOMAN AVOIDS AN OPERATION

Hope Nearly Gone, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her

Star, N. C.—"My monthly spells gave me so much trouble, sometimes they would last two weeks. I was treated by two doctors without relief and they both said I would have to have an operation. I had my trouble four years and was unfit to do anything, and had given up all hope of ever getting any better. I read about your medicine in the 'Primitive Baptist' paper and decided to try it. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for about seven months and now I am able to do my work. I shall never forget your medicine and you may publish this if you want to as it is true."—Mrs. J. F. HURSEY, Star, N. C.

Here is another woman who adds her testimony to the many whose letters we have already published, proving that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound often restores health to suffering women even after they have gone so far that an operation is deemed advisable. Therefore it will surely pay any woman who suffers from ailments peculiar to her sex to give this good old fashioned remedy a fair trial.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

AN INNUMERABLE HOST.

We see enough of the sordid side of life as we glance over the newspapers day after day—it almost seems that dishonesty, treachery, faithlessness, lust, hate are the outstanding characteristics of the human race as we read the record of crimes as carried in the news columns. But we know it is not so. It is the thing out of the ordinary that constitutes "news," and it is this unusual happening that the newspapers are after. Not many of the little kindly deeds that are performed every day find a place in the record of the world's happenings—but they are being performed just the same. The cry that good is perishing from the face of the earth is the wail of the pessimist pure and simple. With all its evils, this is a good world, and most people are clean of mind and heart.

"Full many a gem, of purest ray serene,
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

After making full allowance for the number of knaves and villains abroad, we still have left an innumerable host of those whose knees have not bowed unto Baal and whose mouths have not kissed him.

GIVE THE NAMES.

It is evident that many of the propagandists for a relaxation of laws for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment will go to any length to accomplish their purpose. If they would work in the open, and if the secular newspapers of the country would not lend themselves, whether knowingly or ignorantly, to the dissemination of their craftily conceived schemes, people generally would know just how much value to attach to their insidious suggestions. But when supposedly reputable newspapers publish as general news items stuff that bears every mark of having been inspired by the liquor dealers themselves, it is time for them to "come clean" with their sources of information, or acknowledge that they are attempting to mislead the public. A case in point: The Times-Picayune of this city, in its issue of Friday, December 23, under the heading, "Churchmen Back Sale of Beer and Wine for Bonus; Unexpected Action of Many Ministers Like Bomb in Dry Ranks," with the notation, "(Special to The New York Herald and The Times-Picayune)" and under a Washington date line of December 22, on the front page, gives the following: "From wholly unexpected sources, Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has received strong endorsements of his proposal that the sale of light wines and beer be legalized in order to raise the necessary revenue to pay the soldier bonus. When the secretary of the treasury reached his office this morning he found scores of letters from ministers, bishops and other members of the clergy of various denominations commending him for his suggestion and offering their aid to have the plans put into operation. Such action on the part of these ministers of the Gospel came as a distinct shock to the leaders of the dries in Washington, both in and out of Congress. * * * Naturally, Secretary Mellon was much gratified to receive support from such sources and there is every probability that after the Christmas recess the ways and means committee of the House will give serious attention to the proposal made by the head of the Treasury Department." It may be that some "ministers, bishops and other members of the clergy of various denominations" have "commended" such a suggestion—but the public is entitled to know who they are by name. The Methodist Episcopal church, South, and the Methodist Episcopal Church are two of the greatest religious denominations in this country, and their bishops and ministers have been foremost in the fight against legalizing the sale of intoxicating liquor of any kind, including light wines and beer; yet every one of them is brought under reproach by this indefinite and, apparently, intentionally misleading statement. If the Times-Picayune can back up the truth of the prominently displayed news item by giving names, it ought to do so in simple fairness to the "ministers, bishops and other members of the clergy" who would lose their right hands before they would write an endorsement of any such suggestion; if it cannot give the names, it ought to acknowledge that it has been the tool of the liquor propagandists.

ONE WAY.

The following, taken from a very interesting trade journal, has a lesson in it for those who are able to make the application: "One way of going broke is through false pride in opinion. A man will come to the conclusion that a certain line of action is desirable, and he will pursue that line until he is flat on his back and taking the count. This is very foolish. Conditions change, and, therefore, opinions should change. Conditions are often changing while an opinion is being formed. I do not see that there is anything discreditable in changing one's opinion. If my wife and I are touring and we have an argument about which is the better road to a certain town, and we drive the car over the route I suggest, and we run into some bad bumps, I am very quick to admit that I was wrong. I frankly say I wish we had taken her road. (As a matter of fact, I do no such thing. Being a victim of false pride, I continue to argue that my road may be bad, but that hers is probably worse. The result is that neither of us enjoys the ride.)"

WHAT THE YEAR HAS BROUGHT.

As the old year comes to a close, we naturally let our thoughts turn to the things that are in store for us during the next twelvemonth; but we should naturally dwell also upon the blessings that have been bestowed upon us during 1921. In spite of all the misfortunes, afflictions, disappointments, and sorrows that may have been our portion, we have been marvelously blessed by the good Providence that has been over us. Goodness and mercy have followed us every day of our lives, and the favor of the Lord has been manifested to us in more ways than we can enumerate. The psalmist said, "Thou crownest the year with thy goodness"—and we join with him in ascribing praise to God for all his benefits as the old year fades into the new. It has been a good year. May the New Year be better!

A CHRISTMAS GIFT TO RUSSIA.

Press dispatches last week announced that President Harding had signed the bill carrying $20,000,000 appropriation for relief of famine conditions in Russia, the money to be expended under the direction of the American Relief Administration. This will be a godsend to the starving children of that unfortunate land. The latest reports state that 5,000,000 children are starving to death, provision having been made to save only 1,225,000. The peak of the need will be reached in the months of January, February, and March, and will continue until the September harvests become available. The Russian Government is co-operating in every way possible with the work of the American Relief Administration, and the almost incredible statement is made that $1.50 will feed a child for a month. In addition to this grant from the Government, private contributions are also needed to care for the situation adequately, and many individuals and churches are making donations to this worthy cause through direct remittances to Governor Carl E. Milliken, of Maine, who has been made treasurer of the fund, with headquarters at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City.

THE LAND OF BEGINNING AGAIN.

I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches
And all of our poor, selfish grief
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door
And never be put on again.

I wish we could come on it all unaware,
Like the hunter who finds a lost trail;
And I wish that the one whom our blindness had done
The greatest injustice of all
Could be at the gates, like an old friend that waits
For the comrade he's gladdest to hail.

We would find all the things we intended to do
But forgot and remembered—too late,
Little praises unspoken, little promises broken;
And all of the thousand and one Little duties neglected that might have been perfected
The day for one less fortunate.

It wouldn't be possible not to be kind
In the Land of Beginning Again:
And the ones we misjudged and the ones whom we grudged
Their moments of victory here
Would find in the grasp of our loving handclasp
More than penitent lips could explain.

For what had been hardest we'd know had been best,
And what had seemed loss would be gain;
For there isn't a thing that will not take wing
When we've faced it and laughed it away:
And I think that the laughter is most what we're after
In the Land of Beginning Again.

So I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches
And all of our poor, selfish grief
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door
And never put on again.

TRAVEL LETTERS FROM DR. AND MRS. I. W. COOPER.

S. S. Empress of India,
September 27, 1921.

Dear Dr. Carley: Our impressions of Egypt will be the subject of this letter. First, however, we would like to tell you a little of what we saw in passing from Palestine into Egypt.

Before the great war, there was no direct communication by rail between Jerusalem and Egypt, but during that conflict the English troops performed the remarkable military and engineering feat of laying a fine railroad track through the Desert of Arabia. It was a work of great difficulty and constantly attended by danger to life, but Allenby's men completed it in thorough English style. By the way, though we had read something of General Allenby's work, we did not realize until we went to Palestine what a truly great general he was. We now believe that he will go down to history as one of the bravest and most humane of England's leaders.

The distance from Jerusalem to where we crossed the Suez Canal is about three hundred miles. Most of the way lies through hot desert sands, but we managed to pass the day in comparative comfort, for we had some breeze from the Mediterranean, a comfortable compartment, and two good meals on the diner.

The first part of our way lay through the mountainous section which surrounds Jerusalem. Among other places of interest which were pointed out to us in this region was Gaza, the City of Sampson.

Leaving the mountains, we found ourselves in the fertile Valley of Sharon, so often mentioned in the Bible. For this section of the world, Sharon is indeed a garden spot. It reminds us of the Plain of Esraclon, of which we wrote in a previous letter. Just beyond it is Mt. Sinai, on which Moses was given the ten commandments. Sinai is on the border of the Arabian desert—in fact, in this neighborhood, this barren region is often called the Desert of Sinai. We passed over the Suez Canal about six o'clock in the afternoon. We were delayed for some while in the Customhouse, so that it was dark when we again took the train. The last hundred miles of our trip, from Suez to Cairo, were rather tedious, for we were weary and the darkness prevented us from diverting our minds with the scenery. It was midnight when we reached Cairo, but we had such fine accommodations at the Shepherd's Hotel that we were soon more comfortable than we had been since we reached the Orient.

Cairo is the largest city in Africa and is the residence of the Khedive and of all the chief authorities. The population is said to be about 630,000, of which number only 50,000 are European, chiefly Greeks and Italians, though you would expect the majority of the foreigners to be English, since Egypt has been under English control since 1882. English rule, by the way, has done much for Egypt by developing its commercial and agricultural interests, but it seemed very strange to us that nothing—or little—has been done for the sanitation of these Eastern cities. We found from talking with some of the native guides that English rule is not popular and the natives are hoping for a day when they can achieve independence. This day, however, is perhaps very far distant, for the native population is not at all homogeneous. For instance, in Cairo alone the natives are Arabians, Copts, Nubians, Turks, Armenians, Jews, Arabs, Bedouins, Syrians, Persians and East Indians. Of these, the Copts are said to be of pure ancient Egyptian descent. They hold themselves rather above the other natives and are said to be the most cultured, virile and original of the Egyptians. They are, we are glad to say, Christians, rather than Mohammedans, but they are not strong numerically.

Cairo is a city of great contrasts. Some sections of the city are very handsome and up to date but they are surprisingly near to quarters which are squalid and filthy after the most accepted Oriental style. One can not walk many blocks through some of their "bazaar streets" without feeling really contaminated by the sight of so much dirt. The vast majority of the people evidently live in great poverty and yet there are a number of magnificent residences, as well as of public buildings.

The greatest interest that the traveler feels in Cairo is not in the city itself, but in the great Pyramids which lie several miles outside of Cairo, but, because of the wonderful clarity of the atmosphere, appear to be much nearer. The size, the history, the wonder of the great pyramid of Cheops, and the three smaller pyramids in its neighborhood, together with the Sphinx and the Granite Temple—all these are too well known to the reader for me to describe them in detail. We would advise any one who is suffering from the disease which we know in Mississippi as the "big-head" to make a visit to the pyramids to realize fully their own insignificance and impotence, when standing in the presence of these marvelous works of man. In spite of the fact that they make us feel so little, they fascinate us—we would like to return to them often and stay with them long—if only they were not so near the desert which is intensely hot. By the way, some people think that they were not always as they are now—on the edge of the Desert of Sahara, but that the desert has gradually encroached upon them.

Our first sight of the pyramids was at night—a gloriously beautiful, moonlight night. Even then, they stood out boldly and distinctly, showing every detail of outline against the shining white of the desert, and overpowering one so with their majesty and immensity that little was thought of their beauty or the romance of standing in their presence in the "mystic light of the moon." Romance, however, was not far away, for out of the shadows of the pyramids rose several dark figures. One of these was an Arabian guide who asked to show us to the entrance of the great pyramid; another was the "priest," or "guardian" of the tombs, who asked for "backswish," while the third was a young boy who insisted on telling our fortunes—"in the shadow of the pyramids, by the sand." His rather unique method was to draw a cross in the sand, have the "subject" choose a point in this cross and then he would read the fortune from the relation by this point to the stars—or, more truly, according to what he judged to be the degree of his "subject's" gullibility and generosity.

Not satisfied with this first visit, we went again, next day, to see the pyramids by daylight. And this time we had experiences with native guides, camels, sand-carts and—heat! O, the heat of those burning sands can not be described! We felt as if we were baking and drying up! The fact that there is no moisture in the atmosphere makes one think that it is hotter than it really is. On this visit, we were more interested in the Sphinx and the Granite Temple than in the pyramids. Some of us wished to find certain masculine signs which are said to be on the "creature," but time and the sand storms have worn into the rock to such an extent that only a minute inspection could decipher its messages, and Old Sol was too fierce to allow us to stand long enough to make such an examination. The Granite Temple was more comfortable, for it was underground—the remains of a temple hewn out of solid rock and used for the burying place of the priests who had charge of the pyramids.

During the time that we paid our daylight visit to the pyramids, about thirty members of our party went on an excursion to old Memphis and Sakhara. Part of the journey they made on the train but most of it on the backs of camels. They were gone about nine hours and came back pretty well used up and "burnt up" from the heat and glare of the sands. They had survived it, however, so we almost wished that we had attempted it instead of making "Prudence is the better part of valor" our motto. They came back full of interest not only in the pyramids that they had seen, but in the sight of the tombs of the sacred bulls. Of course we all knew that the Egyptians had, in their primitive religion, a great deal of animal worship—but this form of it was quite remarkable. They held these bulls so sacred that when they died, their bodies were embalmed and they were placed in magnificent vaults or tombs. One of these tombs, which is hewn out of rock, is said to weigh seventy tons.

It is interesting to see that even primitive people are unwilling to believe that life ends with the grave. The ancient Egyptian showed this not only by embalming the bodies of the dead, but by placing many household necessities within the tombs, such as bread, wine, water bottles, scarabs and pieces of money. Scarabs, by the way, are very interesting and very fascinating. They are bits of stone carved in the shape of a beetle, which insect was, to them, the emblem of immortality. The underneath side of this beetle is carved with various signs, or insignia, which correspond somewhat to a coat-of-arms, or official stamp of some kind. Each king and great nobleman had his own device for his scarabs, and he used his scarab as his official seal for letters and civil documents. Usually these scarabs are small—about the size of the “face” of a seal ring, but sometimes they are ten times that large, in which case they were probably not worn. Within the tombs of the kings which are in the pyramids, numbers of these scarabs are found. Most of them, if not all of them, belong to his dynasty. The Egyptians are still skillful in reading the insignia of these scarabs and can tell you at once to what dynasty they belong. Many of these scarabs are to be found in museums all over the world, and many are now in the hands of interested collectors. The sale of scarabs became such an industry in Egyptian cities that the government found it necessary to supervise it in order that foreigners might be protected from dishonest venders, for it is quite possible for the skilled worker to make imitations of the royal scarabs and sell them for genuine, when in reality they have never seen the inside of a pyramid and are only days instead of thousands of years old. So now, officials are appointed by the government to inspect all scarabs which are sold by jewelers who hold licenses to sell scarabs. Of course, one must pay a good round price for “registered” scarabs, but then one has the satisfaction of knowing that he is probably getting the genuine article. The scarabs sold on the streets are ridiculously cheap.

In Egypt we found the Eastern custom of “barter” in full force. A few of the large foreign stores have one price, but nearly all the native shops begin by asking the customer four or five times the price expected for the article.

Though we had seen many places of interest, including the place in the river where Moses was said to have been found in the bulrushes, we had to leave Cairo with the feeling that one has when he has only peeped into an interesting book and had it taken away from him.

The hundred and forty miles which lie between Cairo and Alexandria are in a most interesting section of Egypt. Most of it is in the delta of the Nile, so the soil is wonderfully rich and produces the finest cotton and wheat fields in the world. These crops lay all along the railroad, and we were interested to see how perfectly they were cultivated. In spite of the heat of the sun, they manage to “keep ahead of the grass.” We were told that the English had done much for them in teaching them how to cultivate and to irrigate the soil. Their methods are, however, still very antiquated. To irrigate, they have dug many canals from the river and the waters of these canals, in turn, are dispersed through the fields by ditches which are filled from buckets attached to a water-wheel which is kept in motion by the “man power” or by the “windmill” service of the buffalo cow. (This animal, by the way, is far from being beautiful, but is one of the most useful animals of Egypt.) The plows are still the old, pointed wooden stick, and we saw no modern machinery for harvesting the wheat. We were warned, however, that we must not be too critical of these old-fashioned implements, for experience had probably taught these farmers that modern machinery would probably be too heavy for this light, marshy soil.

Most of the people working these fields were evidently native Egyptians. It was amusing to see the variety in their dress—and undress. Some of them seemed to think that clothing and heavy head-dresses would be a protection against the sun's rays; others held the opposite view.

The canals are not only used for irrigation, but are the public baths, drinking fountains and laundry tubs. The people have little or no sense of modesty and it is not an uncommon sight to see the men and children in the water without bathing suits and stooping down by the side of the canals washing out the only garments they seem to possess. In one place, we saw a water-buffalo standing in the canal, drinking and cooling himself; a little further on, some children were swimming; and near by, a man was drinking this same water. How the people can live—and flourish—and drink the water of these canals is more than we can see!

Besides the crops of which we have spoken, we saw many date palms and fig trees along the road.

We did not arrive at Alexandria without adventure, for, just as we were pulling in we experienced such a shock that many of the passengers in the forward coaches were seriously injured. More than a dozen had to be taken to the hospital and two died from the effects of cuts and bruises. Fortunately for our party, our special coach was at the rear of the train, so we came out with no more serious injury than bruises, headaches—and in one or two cases—torn clothing. We found that the trouble was a drunken engineer who failed to “slow up” in time, as he ran into the station.

In Alexandria, we did very little sight-seeing, for our stay was not long. We did, however, visit Pompey's Pillar, a fine red granite column which is probably not Pompey's Pillar at all but a monument erected by Emperor Theodosius I to signalize a victory. From here, we went to the Catacombs of Kom esh-Shukafa, an Egyptian burial place of the second century. It was one of the most interesting places we saw in Egypt. It is very different from the Catacombs of Rome.

Alexandria, like Cairo, is a magnificent city in some sections, but the fact that it is a seaport gives it the excuse for being, in its poor quarters, even more filthy than anything we saw in Cairo. We had to drive through these obnoxious quarters to reach our ship, so, by the time we got aboard we were very thankful to be leaving Egypt and the Orient and turning our faces toward Europe once more.

Sincerely your friends,

Mr. and Mrs. I. W. COOPER.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON MEMOIRS OF THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT ITS ANNUAL MEETING, NOV. 23-30, 1921, ON THE DEATH OF WALTER RUSSELL LAMBUTH, BISHOP OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

The essential oneness of Methodism is realized when, through all its branches, the sentiment and experience prevail that there is a tie that binds our hearts in Christian love, a tie more tender, more vital, more persistent than any mere ecclesiastical forms or relations. That tie is strengthened, as the years go on, by our common trials and triumphs, our common joys and sorrows.

While we tarry, in the on-rush of the King's business, to record the passing of our own heroes of the faith, to honor their names with the tribute of our tears, and to seek consolation in the prayers of our common faith and the sweet hymns of our common hope, our hearts to-day, with all their hallowed memories of Harris and Lewis, beat in unison of love and sympathy with those great hearts of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, that mourn the loss and rejoice in the beautiful life-record of their noble and now sainted Lambuth.

The message which announced the death of Bishop Walter Russell Lambuth in Yokohama, Japan, September 25, 1921, sent a pang of sorrow through American Methodism, nay—through the Methodism of the world, from the Mississippi to the Amazon and from the Amazon to the Yangtze. Bishop Lambuth belonged to the South and to the North, to the United States and to Brazil, to China, to Africa and to Japan, for in all these lands he has been a valiant soldier of Jesus Christ and a leader among leaders in promoting the Kingdom of heaven in the earth, and making straight in the desert a highway of our God.

Bishop Lambuth was the son of a missionary and was born in China in 1851. He inherited the missionary genius and the missionary call. By classical education in Emory and Henry College, and post-graduate work in medicine and surgery in Vanderbilt University and Edinburgh, he fitted himself for the career of a medical missionary, and as such began his work in China, where to-day his memory is as ointment poured forth. His varied attainments, however, and his many gifts and graces so commended him to the high esteem of his church that he was called to the superintendency of the Japan Mission, elected Secretary of the Board of Missions, became editor of the Review of Missions, was appointed one of the Commissioners on the unification of the Methodist churches of Japan, and elected a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In all of these positions he was distinguished for his broad mindedness and liberality, his gentle spirit and keen intelligence, his genius for initiative and his tireless devotion to the cause of his divine Master. As physician, preacher, author, editor, war-work commissioner, founder and superintendent of hospital and schools, organizer of missions, and as a Bishop he justified the encomium implied in the appreciation expressed by the entire press of his beloved church: “In the passing of Bishop Lambuth the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has lost one of its best and greatest leaders.”

In our fraternal sympathy with our sister church in this hour of her bereavement, the Board of Foreign Missions, here assembled, wish to record the conviction that in the passing of this fine spirit, this vision-gifted missionary, this eminent Bishop, this stalwart son of God, we, and the entire Christian world, experience a loss unmeasured by words, while the annals of the church of Christ will evermore be enriched by the memory of a life to which we would pay the tribute of our emulation.

Bishop F. M. BRISTOL, Chairman.

Bishop W. P. THIRKIELD,

REPORT Nos. 1 AND 2, BOARD OF LAY ACTIVITIES, ADOPTED AT THE RECENT SESSION OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Report No. 1.

In view of the rapidly growing service the laymen are rendering the church, and desiring to co-operate with the ministers in rendering whatever service may be in our power, therefore, we, your Board of Lay Activities of this session of the Annual Conference, recommend as follows:

1. We nominate Mr. T. W. Holloman for Conference Lay Leader and Mr. S. S. Thomas as Assistant.

2. We recommend that the Conference Lay Leader appoint a committee of three to obtain sufficient funds to meet expenses incident to the laymen's work of the Conference.

3. That a minimum salary of $1200 be paid to every pastor.

4. That the evangelistic rural work as conducted in the Alexandria District this year be heartily commended to the entire Conference and that the laymen will gladly extend such assistance as possible, financially and otherwise.

5. We heartily approve the plan already in operation in many sections of our church whereby laymen, co-operating with their presiding elders and pastors, conduct services in rural churches, to the end that we may realize our slogan, “A service of worship in every Southern Methodist Church every Sunday.”

6. One of the greatest needs of most of our people being a religious conscience in giving, therefore we recommend the tithe as the beginning, because wherever it has been used by the individual or church it has been found very satisfactory.

Report No. 2.

We urgently recommend that the district stewards fix a definite and adequate salary in each district for the presiding elder.

1. Because your Conference minutes show that the salaries of certain pastors are below the actual moneys paid them for their services as preachers in charge, it is evident that the per cent basis is not only holding salaries down, so far as reports show, but it is actually encouraging low salaries.

2. Because a presiding elder with a definite salary can effectively urge an increase of the pastor's salary without a selfish impression prevailing.

A SUPERANNUATE ENJOYED IT.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

The "it" referred to was a two-days' trip with my presiding elder, Rev. H. M. Ellis, attending quarterly conferences. Good weather, fine roads, delightful fellowship and favorable environments made the trip most delightful. It was indeed a great treat to me.

Brother Ellis invited me to go with him. I asked him if he could drive the car and talk to me at the same time. He said, "Yes, but I can't look at you while I drive for I have to keep my eyes on the road ahead." I answered, "I asked you if you could talk to me and drive the car safely. My personal beauty is not of that peculiarly fascinating type as to make me desirous to have you examine it." After having settled that question satisfactorily I gratefully accepted the kind invitation.

The trip was made in Brother Ellis's fine new Buick car, which "is a thing of beauty and a joy," not "forever" but as long as it lasts. Without let or hindrance we landed at Pleasant Valley church, after a drive of 25 miles in about one hour. It was as restful a ride as I would have had in an I. C. Pullman car. Brother Ellis has lately added to his other accomplishments that of an expert chauffeur. He certainly knows how to handle his "Buick." I am going to take another trip with Ellis when he sees fit to invite me.

Sventeen years ago I made my first trip over the road from Wesson to Pleasant Valley. It was made in an open buggy, behind a rather small bay horse, and the road was in bad condition for travel. On this occasion the trip was made over one of the best graveled roads in the country, and in a splendid Buick car. My, how "the world do move!" But it takes a lot of money to make it move. The improvements are mighty nice, and I would enjoy them all if I were not scared over impending bankruptcy. I vote against every bond issue, and I have more than one reason for doing so.

On my first trip Jim Williams, pastor of the Bayou Pierre circuit, did the driving. I was going out to hold his first quarterly conference. Just before we got to the parsonage I said to Williams, "Jim, you have shown me the least respect of any young preacher I was ever with." In a very surprised manner he asked, "In what way?" I answered, "We have driven fourteen miles and you haven't given me a chance to get in a word edgewise." He operated the liveliest talking machine I had ever run upon. How Jim did talk! My! my! I thought, maybe this is exceptional. I knew he had been out in the woods about two months without any touch with preachers; and I thought I was just getting the accumulated talk of several weeks. It seemed reasonable to me that he would not maintain a "corner" on talk indefinitely. But during the four years I was his presiding elder he did not lose a "jot or tittle" of his talkativeness. Sometimes I had to beg him to give me a little chance to talk. He was considerate enough to hear me when I made a special appeal to him.

On the talk line Jim Williams has no equal except in Jim Ferguson. They are of a "whatness." In one particular Williams beats him—when he finds that he is reaching a period, and is not clear as to what to talk about next, he keeps his voice running in a mumble to fill up the gap, to shut others out, until he can think up something else to talk about. I have protested against this. I have told him it was unfair. But the saving thing about Jim's much talking is that he always talks about things that are good. I love to hear him talk about the Bible and preaching. Henry, if you should ever be at Williams's home, and get tired of hearing talk, ask him to get his fiddle and play "Cotton-eye Joe," "Turkey in the Straw," and other old songs. You will never tire of hearing them—he is a fine fiddler.

When through with the work of the day, we went to the parsonage, and Brother Ellis baptized Brother and Sister Allums' fine baby. They have seven children—all of them bright and promising. It was a great pleasure to me to see such a normal home. While at the parsonage I recalled very vividly a marriage that took place there more than sixteen years ago. A couple of young Negroes ran away and came to the parsonage to be married. They were scared almost to death. They were sure that the girl's father was following them with a shotgun, loaded with blue whistlers, ready to shoot to kill. They were in a stampede. And Jim Williams poked around very leisurely, looking for his Discipline. Sister Williams and I were about as nervous as the young Negroes were. We urged him to hurry up—I told him to marry them with any impromptu ceremony. But Jim took his time. I proposed to him to get out of the way and let me fix up the job. Jim just can't work without the Discipline. He believes in the book. With him the Discipline comes next to the Bible.

On the way to Pleasant Valley Ellis said, "Adams, I want you to preach for me to-day." I politely declined. "No, thanks; it is the presiding elder's job." I didn't entertain the invitation seriously. I thought that Ellis meant to be nice to the "old man." That ended the matter, as I thought. Later, however, Ellis said, "Adams, I mean it. I want you to preach." I told him that I didn't want to preach. I gave him my good reasons for not wanting to preach. I was not physically able to do so. Another reason was that it was a very important occasion—the fourth quarterly conference. The officials and members from the entire pastoral charge would come, expecting the presiding elder to preach a stirring and moving sermon. Unless they got something from the pulpit that was inspiring and uplifting, the cause would probably suffer. I didn't feel that I could "deliver the goods." I didn't want to preach for still another reason—I had gone out there to hear Hicks Ellis preach. I needed to hear a good sermon. I was sure that I would profit by hearing him.

I thought then the whole thing was settled in my favor. But when we got to the church, Ellis said to me, "The matter is settled; you are going to preach; get ready." How can a poor, old, worn-out superannuate stand up under such commanding methods? I preached. It was a good sermon. I know it was, for Hicks Ellis said so. He is a capable judge. Besides, he always tells the truth. I got a lot of good out of the service. After the work was ended at Pleasant Valley, we drove back to Wesson for night preaching. As Sister Ellis was sick and the weather was very threatening, Brother Ellis commandeered me again, and he drove back to Brookhaven.

I filled Ellis's place at Wesson at the night service. I love to preach there. I was their pastor in 1898. Jim Ferguson said I preached a good sermon. I was too weak to enjoy the service. I had to draw heavily on my reserve force to finish it. I met in the parsonage Sister Clark, the mother of the pastor's wife. I have been the presiding elder of three of her daughters, esteeming them very highly for their good works and fine characters. It was a great pleasure to know her. She is a wonderfully loyal and generous Methodist. She has given four daughters to Methodist preachers, and they are fine preachers' wives. Hurrah for Sister Clark! May God's blessings rest upon her!

I do hope Bishop McMurry will reappoint Ellis to the district. He is a fine presiding elder. He is one of the most industrious and capable men. He is a fine preacher, and his presidency of the quarterly conference is thoroughly good. He is industrious and intelligent in handling the business of the church. I want him to come back to us so that I can have a chance to run around with him and enjoy myself.

Brookhaven, Miss.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES. LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Educational Pay-up Week for Louisiana is Jan. 8 to 15. This is the collection period in the greatest Movement of its kind the church in Louisiana ever knew. Our loyal Methodists should pay immediately the first installment of their subscriptions. And many of them should have the generosity, if possible, to liquidate the whole five-year promise in this one payment.

Reflect upon the fact that Christian education depends upon these colleges which stand so severely in need of funds. They have given the greatest return to the country of any philanthropic investment of Christian money known to the church. It is certainly not too much to say that down to 1850, at any rate, nine-tenths of all the institutions for secondary and higher education formed in the United States owed their origin to the keen interest of the church in educational matters. Since that day things have changed, and we have seen agnosticism and pantheism, the greatest foes of Christian truth, become more and more popular. But it has been the Christian college that has held to the belief that the formative element in history is Christianity, and that any curriculum is defective which fails to present it as the greatest outstanding fact of history. Their educational work has been done for less money than that of any other agency, and it is the greatest tax-saving institution. The grateful Psalmist asked, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?" The reply was: "I will pay my vows."

Therefore, let all our people pay their vows to Christian Education, which is the foremost cause now before our church. Try to pay in full out of gratitude for the benefits we have received from such noble institutions as Centenary and Mansfield Colleges.

ALBERT S. LUTZ,

Conference Secretary of Education.

A JOURNEY TO THE ORIENT—A SAD MISSION TO CHINA.

By Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker.

VI.

I could have prolonged my stay in Korea to advantage as opportunities continued to open. Visits to the stations and under the direction and care of the Rev. M. B. Stokes, the presiding elder of the Choon Chun District, to remote country regions where one can see the old pagan life of Korea, were introductions that I should like to have followed up; but with limited time one must content himself as best he may with a little knowledge and trust that the humbling sense of its exceeding littleness may divest it of the proverbial danger. But again my plans were somewhat changed. On reaching the railroad after an absence in the country, I was met by Brother J. O. J. Taylor, just transferred from Korea to the Manchuria-Siberia Mission, with the information that Bishop Lambuth had died in the hospital at Yokohama. One can hardly think of anything that would have had a graver effect upon our mission work in the Far East. Long before a letter can reach American readers they will have become accustomed to this great bereavement and may have begun to assess the loss that the church has suffered; but it is impossible for them to understand the grief and sense of loss that have afflicted the missionaries and churches in the Orient.

It seemed expedient that I should change my plan of going by rail from Seoul to Harbin in order to visit the Manchuria-Siberia Mission, Bishop Lambuth's last aggression upon the forces of paganism and unbelief, and as the only member of the Board of Missions now in the East await instructions from America as to the funeral and anything else that this calamity may demand. While awaiting exact information as to the place and time of burial, I did not miss the opportunity of giving a series of lectures at the Union Methodist Seminary and rendering some other small services and of entering as fully as I could into the life of our missionaries and Korean brethren. After learning Mrs. Lambuth's wish, the funeral of the Bishop was arranged for October 11 and the place of burial determined beside his mother's body in Shanghai. Dr. Cram, of Songdo, representing the Korea Mission, Mr. J. S. Ryang, the Korean church, and I, by instructions of Dr. Pinson, representing the Board of Missions, set out upon a sad journey, expecting to meet the ship upon which a party from Japan accompanying the ashes had sailed from Kobe.

The journey was back over the South Manchuria Railroad, the route I had so greatly enjoyed on first contact with Korea, with its luxurious second-class coaches and inconsiderate Japanese travelers that usually occupy them whether they fill them or not. On the ship across the Strait I had better luck than before, and secured first-class cabin accommodations with Cram and Ryang, but the sea played up to its reputation this time, and I remained on the spray-washed deck until a late hour in order to escape the sickness of the sea, and found the remedy a good one. Breakfast in a pleasant hotel and a good train the next morning made travel easy. From Shimonoseki, where the ships land, one ferries across the narrow strait that divides Hondo, the largest island, from Kyushu, the southernmost, and reaches Moji, where the great iron mills and blast furnaces of this part of Japan are located. For a distance of twenty miles along the railroad one is scarcely out of sight of some important iron manufacturing plant. The great steel mill employing thousands of men, blast furnaces and foundries, may be seen. Like the road from Kanazawa to Tsuruga along the Japan Sea, the road from Moji to Nagasaki is along a beautiful shore, and in and out of numerous tunnels that pierce the headlands that jut out into the sea. The evidences of density of population are not so marked, nor is the poverty so great, if one may judge by appearances. Kyushu is the source of the coal and iron supply of Japan, in so far as that supply is native. But with the tremendous development of factories and merchant and war marine, as well as the hitherto indifferent supply of fuel, it is not strange that Japan wants Shantung, probably the source of the richest coal and iron supply in the world.

At the end of our Saturday's journey we gladly rested in a pleasant Japanese hotel that is operated in the French style under the name Hotel du Nippon. Nagasaki is a port of call for many ships plying between Kobe and Shanghai and many of the trans-Pacific liners stop here. It is the chief ship building center of Japan, and on the following morning from the strand we could see the great ship yards in which naval and commercial vessels were in all stages of construction. There also is a great educational center of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Which will bulk largest in the history of civilization, the plants that are turning out both the instruments of commerce and of the destruction of commerce, or the Christian college in which are inculcated the ideals of the Prince of Peace?

It was the Sabbath day when we awoke in Nagasaki; it was also a "temple day," and for the latter reason business was in part suspended and the streets were unusually crowded. Ordinarily the Sabbath is utterly disregarded, and by the majority of people in Japan unrecognized; but it is a legal holiday and the large banks and other financial concerns close, but other commercial operations are not much affected. Through their superstitions non-Christian religions have a strong hold upon people and keep their votaries in dread of the unknown spiritual powers to which they ascribe malevolent purposes from which they can be turned only by flatteries or deceptions or offerings; but our own faith lays its hand upon those who are reared amidst its blessings with the touch of love and fills the universe with the spirit of fatherhood. The Sabbath is among the strongest institutions for keeping alive the sense of God's goodness and the promise of eternal life. In America we are certainly relaxing our grasp upon this holy institution with its three-fold association of creation, resurrection and Pentecost. I do not think that we are under the ancient law of Israel, but we are under the law of Christ, who had declared that the Sabbath was made for man. Its neglect and desecration are steps in the direction of heathenism or infidelity. There was no English service that we could attend, except one in the Seamen's Home, and that might have made us late for the ship's sailing. She lay in the harbor unloading great timbers of Oregon pine and we knew that our friends, Mr. Towson, Dr. Newton and Dr. Yoshioka, were on board with the ashes of Bishop Lambuth. We should have preferred to sail on another day; but steamships and railroads and electric light plants and blast furnaces and many others of the necessities of modern life, of the benefits of which we partake, do not know our Sabbath, and we are compelled to recognize the great social law that "we are members one of another." It is impossible for persons to live in the full enjoyment of the blessing of Christ while the larger superpersonal being, the social body, is not conformed with his will.

When we met our friends from Japan we had little to say; we looked into each other's faces with a common sense and expression of loss that rose from each heart. It better accorded with our mood to go into Mr. Towson's cabin and with the urn in our midst engage in prayer for the church, for the Bishop's family and for those upon whom falls the responsibility of carrying on the work that he had untimely laid down.

Across the Yellow Sea, on the Suwa Maru, a first-class passenger liner of the Japanese Company, the journey was pleasant. On board were several missionaries of the Church of the Nazarene, with whom we held service each evening. On Tuesday morning, October 11, our ship docked at Shanghai. From the deck we could see some of our missionaries and friends awaiting us while the steam winches slowly hauled the great ship sidewise up to the dock. Dr. A. P. Parker, Dr. J. B. Fearn, Mr. Hearn, Mr. Hawk, and Mr. Lewis had come down in the early morning to meet the ship and were prepared to take us all to breakfast and our lodgings. My first glimpse of China this was. Nothing of the physical features was strange. I could have believed myself to be at the docks in New Orleans instead of at Shanghai, and instead of one of the mouths of the Yang-Tse-Kiang the broad Mississippi might have been the river that flowed through the low-lying alluvial plain. The moist, caressing atmosphere, the coloring of sky and water and shore and the topography carried strong suggestions of the Crescent City and the mighty river that flows by it. But throngs of Chinese coolies on the dock and in every direction compelled recognition of reality and broke into dreamy reminiscences. The Chinese are the noisiest people I have ever seen. As the gangway was being hoisted into place a pile of scantlings had to be moved. About twenty coolies laid hold of each piece and with much gesticulating and monosyllabic ejaculating carried it out of the way. And as soon as access to the ship was possible the coolies swarmed on board eager to carry out the baggage. The system is such that each passenger attends for himself to the landing of his hand baggage and his trunks also, if they have been kept in his cabin. As it proved unfortunately, I passed by the enterprising money changer who was gliding through passage ways offering to exchange any sort of currency for "Mex." the current coin of the realm. After a little delay my bags had been examined on the dock by the customs officer and I employed a coolie to carry them out into the street expecting there to find my friends; but each of them supposing that I was with another had gone on. So I rose to the emergency and indicated to my coolie that he was to proceed. At the next corner there was a money changer's stand and I secured "Mex." for five yen and offered my coolie, who had by this time in some strange way become three coolies, the equivalent of a quarter, whereupon there arose a great hubbub and these drawers of loads and porters of packs demanded a dollar apiece—about what I had got in Mex. for my five yen. I became indignant; but that was a bad move, for no American, even when unrestrained by the conventionalities of a churchman, can equal the Chinese at this; so I smiled in American and persisted with the quarter and a few coppers gratis and got me to a rickshaw and demanded to be conveyed to Quinsan Road. Dr. Parker met me when I was near the end of my ride and conveyed me the rest of the way to his hospitable home and my adventure was ended. I find that the ricksha coolies all know where "Quinsan Lo" is, therefore I can always get back home from anywhere.

In the afternoon Moore Memorial Church was crowded by those who gathered to pay the last tribute of respect to the man whose life had meant so much to them; among those who indeed mourned was an aged Chinese who had been the elder Dr. Lambuth's boatman and a personal servant of the Bishop. The casket containing the ashes was submerged in handsome floral offerings; the girls of McTyeire School sang sweetly and tenderly; Mr. Ryang, Dr. Cram and Dr. Yoshioka took part in the service. Mr. Towson delivered a beautiful and comprehensive memorial address, I spoke on behalf of the Board of Missions, Dr. A. P. Parker delivered an address in Chinese, and the funeral was concluded at the grave in the foreign cemetery; the venerable Dr. J. C. C. Newton, friend and co-worker with the Bishop, conducted the service at the grave. I lingered some time after the commitment of "ashes to ashes," examining the headstones of some of our heroic men and women of the elder day, who through faith wrought valiantly and opened the way for those who have now entered into the inheritance of a great, strong church, with schools and colleges, hospitals and social centers, in a land which would once have been impenetrable to all but the most persevering, and among a people whose prejudices and self-conceit would have resisted anything but the sword of the Spirit in the hands of the most courageous soldiers of the cross. I do not mean to intimate that the missionaries' task is now an easy one; the points of pressure have shifted and the pioneer work has been accomplished, but new problems have arisen that demand the utmost sincerity and courage and other works are to be done that require unremitting toil and consecration to the great ideals of the kingdom of God. The change is in the form, not the substance; our very successes constitute new difficulties and the ground of a new obligation upon the churches at home.

With Quinsan Road as a center, one may go in several directions and still be on Southern Methodist property for some distance. On the compound itself are three large residences, one so large that it has been divided into three apartments, in which three missionary families live. To the west are substantial apartment buildings which yield revenue for Sochow University, and on the east are some rented houses, a beautiful vine-covered building now occupied by the Y. W. C. A. at a profitable rent, and the Methodist Publishing House, which is operated jointly by our Board of Missions and the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and still further around the corner is a residence that has been used by the Manager of the Publishing House. Across Quinsan Road is a somewhat neglected looking building with an imposing Greek portico, which is used for the Sochow University Law School, the Middle School Number 2, and the congregation of the Allen Memorial Church. Its appearance of neglect is due to the expectation that it will shortly be superseded by a handsome new church building on the same site, a modern school building upon a new site, and an adequate house for the Law School, the exact location and character of which have not been determined. All this is in the Centenary askings and will soon be materialized in handsome and commodious land and masonry. Back of the Allen Memorial are also houses that are rented. It is largely by means of these rentals that Sochow University is able to carry on its great work without expense to the Board of Missions, except perhaps some salaries. Again we have proof that our missionaries have been wise in their generation. Their investments in land have enormously increased in value and constitute great assets for the church in these lands.

KEEPING UP WITH THE CHRIST OF TO-DAY.

A Sermon on Christian Literature.

By Rev. A. M. Shaw.

Text: "The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and to teach." Acts 1:1.

This opening clause of the Acts of the Apostles may seem, at a glance, to be a very commonplace statement of an unimportant fact: a mere prelude to the "treatise" which follows. As a matter of fact, it is a most significant statement, big with meaning, and very pertinent to our present theme, "Christian Literature." For one thing, it proves Luke to have been the author of the "Acts"; the reference to a former writing evidently meaning the Gospel of Luke, which was addressed to the same person. But it means much more than this.

I. It declares that Luke had written a "Treatise"—had committed to writing, to be scattered abroad and to be preserved in permanent form, the Gospel Story. And, in proclaiming this fact, he is in the act of writing another work, realizing the value of the Written Word!

II. He had written concerning what Jesus DID and TAUGHT.

(1.) Christianity is a Life. It is not a mere theory, nor a mere sentiment, but a living force—an activity—a service. Its deeds are worthy to be published to all the world, and to all ages.

(2.) It is also a Doctrine, a message from God to men. It is not enough to know what Jesus did. We need also to know what he taught. It is a Gospel—a good news; glad tidings—which the church is commissioned to teach to all men. This, too, Luke found it worth while to write: to publish to men, in distant lands and far-off ages. How ignorant we should be to-day, of the doings and teachings of Christ, had not men written and published them!

III. Luke's treatise dealt with "all that Jesus BEGAN both to do and to teach, until the day in which he was taken up"—or, until his ascension.

(1.) All Christ's wonderful works were only a beginning. Luke had formerly written of this beginning.

(2.) All his marvelous words were only a beginning of his teaching. Luke had also written of this beginning.

IV. On the Day of Pentecost, Jesus came, in the person of the Holy Spirit. He was still "Immanuel"—still with the apostles, as he had promised to be—the Father and the Son, in the Person of the blessed Paraclete, walking at their sides, dwelling in their hearts!

As such, he continued to DO—even more wonderfully than before! As such, he continued to TEACH, with greater force, unction, and convicting power, than before. They who believed on him were, according to his promise, doing "greater works" than he had done "in the days of his flesh!"

Again the pen of Luke is busy. A second "treatise" is forthcoming, telling of the doings and teachings of Christ's appointed laborers.

Others also made treatises: Matthew, Mark, John, Paul, Peter, James and Jude. They all make treatises: of what Jesus began to do; of what he began to teach; of what he continued to do; of what he continued to teach! All this must be told, in all places, to all peoples, in all ages! And we should know nothing of Jesus to-day but for these writings.

V. But Christ's work and teaching did not cease with the apostles. The Fathers took it up; the Mediaeval church and ministry carried it on; Luther and the Reformers gave it a fresh impulse, under the leadership of the Holy Spirit; it assumed the form of a mighty revival in Wesley's day; and still it goes on, increasing in volume and gathering momentum as the years sweep on. It swells, just now, in a tide of unprecedented missionary activity and zeal. It will go on till it conquers the world!

What is it? It is just the things "that Jesus began"—and continues "to do and to teach!"

VI. In every age the Movement has had its literature. Every phase of development has had its men to make "treatises." Luke and others wrote Gospels; Luke wrote the Acts; Paul wrote a "Systematic Theology," as nearly as one can be found in the Bible. The New Testament is simply the pamphlet literature of a spiritual movement.

The early Christian fathers wrote tomes of Christian literature. Even the monks in the cloisters, in the Middle Ages, wrote thousands of pages. Luther, Calvin and Malanethon, put the reformation into printed pages. John Wesley was a voluminous writer of books. And to-day, Bibles printed in hundreds of languages; books, large and small, without number; magazines by hundreds, and Christian newspapers by thousands, go on telling what Jesus began—and continues—to do and to teach.

VII. The importance of this cannot be estimated. The world recognizes it. Every industry has its literature; so has every business or profession. Every department of learning relies on its publications. Political parties have their papers; labor unions and fraternal orders all have their official organs. The devil himself appreciates the power of the press; and the world is flooded with the literature of evil. The man with the printed page is coming more and more to dominate the world. The church of Christ cannot afford to fail at this point. For this reason we have our church papers.

VIII. We are not going to rise much above what we read. Tell me what you read, and I can tell you what you are. Here is a man who is a merchant. If he is succeeding you may depend upon it that he reads the mercantile journals and the market reports—whatever else he reads. He keeps up with the business world. It may chance that this same man is a "baseball fan." If so, he reads the sporting page! Wake him up at midnight, and he can tell you how the score stands in the season's "big league" games! The same man is a Democrat. He reads the party papers, and, particularly during campaign years, knows all that transpires in political circles. Perhaps he is also a "Woodman of the World." If he amounts to anything in the lodge, he reads the "Sovereign Visitor."

Now, it happens that this same man, so alert in business, in athletic matters, in politics, and in woodcraft, is also a Methodist; and as a member of the mightiest evangelical body in Christendom, he reads—NOTHING! Not a church paper comes to his home! Can we wonder if he knows more about everything else than about the church? Can we wonder if he amounts to more in everything else than in religion?

IX. If you would be a Christian worth while, you must read what Jesus is doing and teaching; you must keep up with the Christ of to-day. If you would be an intelligent Methodist, you must read what he is doing and teaching—through your own church!

When we visit, or read about, our great Publishing Houses in Nashville, Richmond and Dallas, and think of the great work they are doing for the Kingdom; and when we remember that they are ours—our very own—our hearts should thrill with pride, and we should resolve to buy our books from our own publishers, and read the papers of our own church.

I wish to call particular attention to three of these publications:

(1.) The Christian Advocate, published at Nashville, Tenn., general organ of our church. It brings us the weekly news from the utmost limits of Methodism, along with the ripest thoughts of our ablest Christian leaders. As a religious family paper, I believe it is the equal of any in America.

(2.) The Missionary Voice. Through the columns of this monthly magazine, I learn more about the world—and vastly more about religious movements in lands other than our own—than through any other publication that comes to my table.

(3.) The New Orleans Christian Advocate, the Conference organ of our church in Mississippi and Louisiana. Dr. Carley is giving us a great paper—easily the equal, I think, of any Conference organ in the whole church. But how are we supporting it? How many of us are reading it? The answer is not flattering. I read the other day that ten thousand subscribers to the Arkansas Methodists are in arrears with their subscriptions. Now, assuming that not more than two-thirds of its readers are likely to be in arrears, I think it safe to say that that paper has at least fifteen thousand subscribers; possibly more. Yet it is the organ of just the two Conferences in Arkansas! The New Orleans Advocate is the organ of the three great Conferences in Louisiana and Mississippi; yet it has no such circulation as that.

But this is not the most unsatisfactory part of the situation. Louisiana has forty thousand Methodists. This number must represent about ten thousand homes; certainly not less than eight or nine thousand. Yet, among all this host of Methodists, only some fifteen hundred New Orleans Christian Advocates are in circulation! Does this represent our interest in the Methodism of Louisiana?

Now, the Nashville Advocate costs $2.50 a year; the New Orleans Advocate, $2.00, and the Voice, $1.00. Total, for these three great publications, $5.50, which is considerably less than the yearly subscription price of the cheapest secular daily! Surely every Methodist home can spare this much for these indispensable periodicals! At the very least, let us put the New Orleans Advocate in every home in our charge!

CENTENARY COLLEGE NOTES.

We are closing the fall term of Centenary most auspiciously. Friends of the institution will be glad to learn of the success achieved on all lines. The attendance has been far in excess of that of last year, and equal to any in the long history of the school.

The Academy is about full and the College proper registers more than 100 per cent gain over last year. In fact, we have every room taken at the College Dormitory. Already, applications are coming in for next year. Dr. Sexton is eagerly looking and hoping for a new building to take care of the many fine boys who are asking admittance into Centenary.

Dr. Sexton is measuring up fully to the expectations of his friends and all the demands of the College. The faculty has been increased, but will have to be enlarged yet again for next session. It is difficult to realize how rapidly the interest in Centenary is growing and spreading. From every direction the letters are pouring in! The office force had to be doubled. How busy the secretaries are! What encouraging scenes abound at Centenary now!

Of course, everybody has heard that "Bo" McMillin is coming to be our coach for the next three years. This is just one of the many things that are coming our way. Let no one think for a minute that we are going to spend too much on athletics. You understand that "Bo," great as he is, costs us nothing. He is the gift of about seventy-five of the best men in Shreveport. Centenary could never have hired such a man; but these friends of clean athletics, desiring to encourage us along this line, made it possible to secure this strong Christian man to head our athletic activities.

We are planning a great revival early in the spring. No other interest can appeal to us so strongly as the spiritual. Our boys must have an unusual opportunity to find Jesus Christ as their personal Savior. We shall not be satisfied until every student becomes a growing Christian, trying to pattern his life after the matchless Christ. To this end, all our thought and activities lead. For this, Centenary stands and labors day and night. Brethren, pray for us.

CAN YOU ANSWER?

Where can a man buy a cap for his knee,
Or a key for a lock of his hair?
Or can his eye be an academy, because the pupils are there?

In the crown of his head, what gems are found?
Who travels the bridge of his nose?
Does the calf of his leg grow hungry at times
And devour the corns off his toes?

Can a crook of his elbow be sent to jail?
Where's the shade from the palm of his hand?
How does he sharpen his shoulder blades?
I'm sure I do not understand.

THE BOY WHO TALKED WITH THE TREES.

By B. A. Bessire.

Once upon a time there was a boy named Dick. Of course, that was not his real name, but that was what all the boys called him. Dick lived in a big red house at the edge of the woods. He liked to play in the woods and fish in the river. He especially liked to run in the dry leaves when they were thick on the ground in the fall of the year. One day he was playing and running in the leaves and went a long way from home. He had never before been so far alone. After a time he became tired, so lay down in a big pile of leaves. In a moment he heard a noise and sitting up, he saw the funniest little hunched back man he had ever seen.

"Hello," said the funny man in a squeaky voice. "Would you like to talk with the trees and the leaves and the moss?"

"Of course," said Dick, for he had often wanted to ask the trees some questions.

The little man handed Dick a smooth red stick about two feet long. "Anything you touch with this stick will talk with you," said he, and then trotted away.

Dick looked at the stick and slid his hand up and down its smooth sides. "I wonder if it will work," he said aloud. He walked over to a giant oak and touched it with the red stick. He felt queer all over, but he managed to say, "Mister Oak, how old are you?"

"Seventy-three," a voice replied.

Dick was startled, for he had not really expected an answer. However he plucked up his courage and spoke again, "Don't you get tired standing in one place so long?"

"No, indeed," said the oak. "You see God made me to grow this way, and I'm doing just what he wants me to do, so I never get tired. Bye and bye some men will cut me down and saw me up into boards and then maybe I'll be made into nice furniture or possibly a piano; and just think how useful I will be, for God wants me to be useful."

That was a pretty big shot for Dick, so he decided to try something else. He touched a big red maple leaf that had just fallen.

"Mr. Leaf, what made you fall?"

"Oh, hello," said the leaf, "the wind blew me off."

"Don't you wish you could stay on the tree all the time?"

"Oh, no," it replied. "I finished my work up there and now the snow will cover me up and I will decay and make the earth richer so the trees and flowers will grow better. God made me that way and I am doing what he wants me to do."

Dick saw some green moss on the bank of the river and wondered what it had to say, so he ran over and touched it with the stick. Before he had time to say anything it said, "Hello, who are you?"

"I'm Dick, and I want to know why you always grow in dark, damp places; don't you want to go out in the sunshine?"

"I might die in the sunshine," the moss replied. "I grow on banks and old logs so I can cover up the ugly spots and help God make the world more beautiful."

Dick looked at the water running swiftly along, bubbling merrily as it went. He touched it with the end of his stick. "Where are you going so fast?"

"Going to the ocean," the water laughed back. "It is such fun watering the trees and fields, quenching the thirst of the cows, and turning the mill wheels. Maybe some day I'll take a ride up in the clouds and come down as rain to make the corn grow. It's jolly fun working with God to make people happy." And the water went rippling happily on its way.

Just then some brush came sailing along, and hitting the red stick jerked it out of Dick's hand. "Oh," he cried and tried to reach it, but it went into the middle of the river and was soon out of sight. Dick climbed slowly up the bank and started home. "It seemed like everything is doing what God wants it to do," he said to himself. "I wonder what he wants me to do. I'll go and ask mother."—Central Christian Advocate.

BABY FOX.

Every night old Mother Fox came to the farm and carried away one of Uncle Fred's hens. One day she became so bold that she trotted across the fields late in the afternoon and stole the largest of the white hens. Grandma, Uncle Fred, Don, and Dolly saw her, but too late to save poor bid-dy.

"She must have young ones, she is so bold," said Grandma.

"I'm going to get her to-morrow," replied Uncle Fred.

So the next day, Grandpa, Uncle Fred, Daddy, and Echo, the black-and-white dog, went away up in the rocky pasture, where they were sure that Mrs. Fox lived, and Echo found her track and led the men straight to her den. Then Uncle Fred caught him and tied him to a tree.

Grandpa and Daddy began to dig the fox family out, and Uncle Fred used the smoker. Before long the old fox and her children came running out, and what do you think happened? One little fox was so frightened that he ran straight between Daddy's long legs and Daddy snatched him up quickly. Weren't Uncle Fred and Grandpa surprised!—so surprised that Mother Fox and the other bables had time to scamper away and hide in the dark woods. Grandpa put his coat over the little fox's head, and Daddy carried him. Uncle Fred led Echo, who bristled with anger.

Dolly and Don were playing store under the big maple tree when they saw the fox-hunters coming home. The children ran to meet them and were very curious about the wriggling, squirming thing that Daddy had done up in his coat. How surprised they were when they found that it was a baby fox!

Daddy carried the little wild creature into the kitchen and told Don to bring Echo's old out-grown collar. Grandpa snapped it around the little fox's neck, and had to be careful while he was doing it, because Little Fox's pointed teeth were very sharp. Daddy tied a rope in his collar and hitched him outside the kitchen door.

"Can't we feed him, Daddy?" asked Dolly.

"Oh, let's," cried Don.

"What do you think he would like?" inquired mother.

"We'll try some milk," said Daddy.

Mother went into the house, and, bringing out a saucer of milk, she placed it in front of Baby Fox.

"Poor little chap," she whispered.

At first the little fellow would not touch the milk. Then he began to lap it up with his small red tongue. "Just like Kitty Gray," thought Dolly.

Grandpa, Uncle Fred, and Daddy went to the barn to milk the big black-and-white cows. Grandma began to get supper and mother went out to get the feeding-dish.

"You miss your mother, don't you, baby?" Mother asked softly. "It is almost night. Bables always want their mothers at night."

For some time Don and Dolly watched the strange, furry baby, then went out under the maple to finish their game. When they came back the little fox was gone. There was the rope, but Baby Fox and his collar were nowhere to be seen.

"Come, come, the fox is gone!" cried Don, running into the barn.

"Baby Fox isn't here," called Dolly at the kitchen door.

The family came running from house and barn.

"Do you think he will find his mother again?" asked Dolly.

"Yes, I am sure he will," answered mother.

The family wondered how he got away, but nobody seemed to know.

"He must have gnawed the rope," said grandpa.

They talked about it for days, that is, all but Mother. She said nothing.—Ella Shannon Bowles, in The Christian Register.

THE DEATH OF BISHOP H. C. MORRISON.

Press dispatches last week announced the death of Bishop Henry Clay Morrison at the home of his son, Dr. Hugh K. Morrison, in Leesburg, Florida, on Wednesday, December 21. He is survived by his widow and two sons.

It was well known that Bishop Morrison had been in failing health for many months, and his death was not unexpected. The passing of a great and good man always comes as a shock, though, and the whole church will mourn the passing of one of its chief pastors.

On account of his failing health, Bishop Morrison was superannuated at the General Conference of 1918, held in Atlanta. He was elected a bishop at the General Conference of 1898, held in Baltimore, after having proved to the church his qualities of leadership as Missionary Secretary for a number of years. Since his retirement from active service, he had made his home in Florida, where he continued his ministry by the use of the pen, being a regular contributor to the Florida Christian Advocate and issuing at least two volumes of inspiring sermons.

Bishop Morrison was best known as a preacher, and it was as a pulpit ministrant that he made his greatest contribution to the life of the church. He possessed oratorical gifts of an unusual order, and his own personal religious experience, his keen perception of spiritual values, and his passionate presentation of the simple gospel themes made him wonderfully effective in reaching the minds and hearts of his hearers. The revival fire burned in his soul and he counted it his chiefest mission to lead men to Christ. He lived and wrought well—and now he has entered into the rest of the saints of God.

According to press dispatches, he was buried in Atlanta, Ga., on Friday of last week, interment being in the Westview Cemetery, near the old family home.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. L. Nabors, of Sherman, Miss., writes that all goes well on the Sherman charge.

The annual meeting of the General Sunday School Council will be held at Nashville, Tenn., January 5-11.

Rev. John D. Ellis, our pastor at Qultman, Miss., has been appointed by Governor Russell as a member of the Mississippi Pardoning Board.

Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Bennett, Moorhead, Miss., announce the birth of a son, Virgil Audrey, on December 21. Blessings upon the little one!

"I am pleased with my new work. I have a good people to serve, and my congregations are growing at both points—White Castle and Donaldsonville." So writes Rev. H. B. Hines, from Donaldsonville, La.

A part of the service of First Church, this city, last Sunday morning was the rendition of the Christmas cantata, "Bethlehem." The choir of First Church is one of the best in the city, and its music is always inspiring.

Rev. S. W. Johnson writes that he has been royally received on his new work, Leakesville, Miss., and that the people are "pounding" him vigorously. The first services of the new Conference year were well attended, and the outlook is most encouraging.

At the recent organization of a Ministerial Association by the Protestant ministers of Greenwood, Miss., Rev. V. C. Curtis, pastor of the Methodist Church, was elected president. Rev. W. O. Hornbaker, of the Christian Church, was elected secretary.

According to authoritative but unofficial information, an arrangement was effected after the adjournment of the Louisiana Conference by which Rev. T. J. Warlick remains at Lake Providence, La., and Rev. H. W. Bowman goes to Dubach, La.

Rev. W. J. Ferguson has been cordially received by the good people of Yazoo City, Miss., among whom he was appointed to labor at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference. Brother Ferguson claims that he has the best appointment in the Conference.

The choir of the First Methodist Church, Laurel, Miss., rendered the Christmas cantata, "The King Cometh," at the church on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 18, at 4:30 o'clock. The gifted pastor, Rev. O. S. Lewis, appeared on the program as the tenor soloist.

From the editorial notes of the Smith County Reformer, Raleigh, Miss., we take the following: "To the delight of his churches and the public generally, Rev. R. H. Clegg was returned to the Raleigh charge by the Annual Conference recently held in Jackson."

All the church organizations of Greenville, Miss., united in a service on Sunday evening, December 18, at which Congressman Humphreys spoke of the work of the Conference for the Limitation of Armament. Rev. E. S. Lewis presided over the meeting.

Rev. D. E. Kelley, Mississippi Conference evangelist, recently held a meeting at Winnsboro, La., during which, according to press reports, there were 118 accessions to the church. Brother Kelley will go to California in the near future to hold a series of revival meetings.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, has issued a neat pamphlet in which he sets forth the objectives for the work of the district during the year. It is a fine presentation of a constructive program by a wide-awake presiding elder.

We appreciated a call one day last week by Rev. A. L. McQueen, a local elder, formerly of Cass, Ark., but serving the Franklinton circuit, Louisiana Conference, as a supply. Brother McQueen is not a stranger in these parts, having previously served as a supply in the Mississippi Conference.

Twenty of the twenty-three stewards of the First Methodist Church, Greenville, Miss., were in attendance upon the services on Sunday, December 11. That is a fine record. At a church conference on Wednesday evening of the same week, about seventy people were present—another good record.

Mrs. J. M. Henry, widow of the late Dr. J. M. Henry, of Ruston, La., was in New Orleans a few days last week, having brought her young son for a surgical operation at Touro Infirmary. We are glad to be able to report that the operation was successfully performed and recuperation is satisfactorily progressing.

The Great Commission Prayer League, of Chicago, is fostering the holding of watch night services on the last night of the old year—not a social gathering, but a service where prayer will be engaged in according to the conditions of prevailing prayer. Such a service cannot fail to mean much to those who engage in it.

The editor of the Advocate takes this occasion to thank the many friends throughout Louisiana and Mississippi who have sent him Christmas greetings. He reciprocates every good wish expressed, and prays that the blessings of the Heavenly Father may be vouchsafed to every one of them throughout the coming year.

A card from Rev. B. E. Crowson, Ashland, Miss., informs us that Mrs. L. L. Winborn, a most estimable Christian woman, superintendent of the Sunday school at Oakland, Miss., is in the Baptist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., where she recently underwent an operation. We are glad to know that she is reported as doing well.

At the recent meeting of the Southern Methodist Educational Association, held in Memphis, Tenn., Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of Millsaps College, was elected president for the ensuing year. Dr. G. F. Winfield, of Wesley College, Texas, and Dr. W. P. Few, of Trinity College, North Carolina, were elected vice presidents, and Professor W. E. Hogan, Nashville, Tenn., was elected secretary-treasurer.

Rev. and Mrs. C. C. Wier recently celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding. Brother Wier has been pastor of our church at Algiers for six years, and during that time he and his wife have won the esteem and love of the entire community. Under his leadership, a splendid new church is nearing completion. The Advocate joins their many friends in congratulations and best wishes in connection with the happy occasion.

The official board of Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., began the year with a banquet, at which plans were made for the work of the church during the ensuing months. A substantial increase was made in the pastor's salary, and the outlook is that there will be encouraging development in every phase of the church's activities. Under the leadership of Rev. T. E. Gregory, a fine new church is being erected, the corner stone having been laid recently. The outlook for this church is very bright.

We take the following from one of our exchanges: "The Southern Methodist Hospital at Memphis, Tenn., was sold last week to the Government for disabled soldiers. The hospital was just finished and was sold for cash—$859,000—for patriotic reasons. The need of the soldiers was so urgent that the church yielded to the need." It is thought that the church can continue this work without serious disadvantage other than the delay incident to the sale. We have no official information concerning the transaction.

We are printing on another page of the Advocate this week a summary of the sermon on "Christian Literature," by Rev. A. M. Shaw, Oakdale, La., which he delivered on Sunday evening, December 11. It is interesting to read, and it was effective in presentation, for at its close Brother Shaw secured 18 subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, 1 for the Nashville Christian Advocate, and 1 for the Missionary Voice. We earnestly pray that the Advocate may be a real help to Brother Shaw in the vigorous program he has planned for the new Conference year—and we believe it will be.

At the recent meeting of the Southern Methodist Press Association in Lakeland, Florida, the following officers were elected: Carlton D. Harris, Baltimore Southern Methodist, president; Henry T. Carley, New Orleans Christian Advocate, vice president; J. A. Burrow, Midland Methodist, secretary-treasurer.

In response to inquiries, we desire to emphasize the fact that it is the original, world-famous Gypsy—or Gipsy, as he spells it—Smith who is to begin a meeting in New Orleans on January 5. The son, Gipsy Smith, Jr., has also won fame as an evangelist, but it is the father, Gipsy Smith, Sr., who will be in New Orleans.

The Sunday school of Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church, this city, held a "white gifts" service at the church on Christmas evening, which was interesting and inspiring. A large congregation enjoyed the program. The offering was given to the destitute orphans of the Near East. Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt is the faithful pastor at Louisiana Avenue.

The Christmas service of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Sunday school was held on Sunday evening in the church. The program was interesting, and a large congregation enjoyed it. The offering was devoted to the Armenian orphans. The pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, Rev. Ellis Smith, continues to improve gradually, and it is believed that he will soon be sufficiently recovered from his automobile accident to take up his work again.

We hope our readers are following closely the travel letters by Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Cooper, and the account of his visit to the Orient being furnished by Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker. They are as interesting and informing as many books that sell for two dollars at the bookstores, and we count ourselves very fortunate in being able to give the subscribers to the Advocate such valuable contributions from such competent and experienced writers.

Bishop W. F. McMurtry authorizes the Advocate to announce that Rev. J. W. Pearson has been transferred from the Tennessee Conference to the Louisiana Conference and stationed at Mansfield, La. Brother Pearson is held in the highest esteem in the Tennessee Conference, and he was surrendered by Bishop Atkins and his brethren with great reluctance and only at the earnest request of Bishop McMurtry. We are sure he will soon feel at home among the brethren in Louisiana.

A note from Rev. M. M. Black, Jackson, Miss., Commissioner of Millsaps College, brings the sad news that his eldest sister, Mrs. Clara B. Turner, passed to her eternal reward on Saturday afternoon, December 17. For several months preceding her death she had been a semi-invalid, residing in Birmingham, Ala., with her sister, Ada. Interment was in Elmwood Cemetery, Birmingham, on Sunday, December 18. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to Brother Black and other members of the family who are in sorrow because of the passing of this saintly woman. A suitable memoir will appear in due time.

Mrs. Mary L. Lipcomb, Bible teacher in the Texas Woman's College, has prepared "An Outline Study of the Book of Acts," which has been issued under the imprint of the Board of Missions. It is sold at ten cents a copy, or one dollar a dozen—and there is no margin of profit for anybody. We have not been able to give the book a thorough examination, but it is very highly commended, and a brief examination leads us to believe that it would be exceedingly helpful to those who wish to get a comprehensive knowledge of the wonderful record contained in the Book of Acts. It is convenient in size, well printed, and attractively arranged.

The Commissioners of the Southern Assembly, with about forty or fifty members of the Lake Junaluska Presentation Committee, will meet at Chattanooga on January 12, for the purpose of perfecting further plans for the presentation of all the property of the Assembly to the church at the next General Conference. Prominent laymen from all sections of the church east of the Mississippi River are interested in this movement. The plan is to have all the owners of outstanding stock turn it over to a holding committee for the church. A large amount of the unissued stock will be purchased by various laymen and likewise turned over. All indebtedness will be paid and the necessary improvements will be made. When this has been done, the Presentation Committee will present the property outright to the church. It will be worth more than a million dollars, clear of all indebtedness. The laymen are seeking to make arrangements whereby the Presentation Exercises may take the form of an impressive ceremony. A Presentation Volume will be issued for use in these exercises.

GIPSY SMITH MEETING.

Encouraging reports come from the Gipsy Smith headquarters relative to the plans for the great Evangelistic Campaign.

The auditorium is complete and it is ideally built and located.

A corps of workers are busily engaged in furnishing all necessary information to the public.

Cottage prayer meeting are planned in several sections of the city, uniting the spiritual efforts of the praying people.

The first choir rehearsal will be had Tuesday, January 3, and we are hoping to make this a great feature of the meeting.

Again we ask that all Christians pray mightily for success.

The first meeting of the great campaign will be held Thursday, January 5, at 7:30 p.m., and all co-operating churches are earnestly urged to make an earnest effort to have all their people attend on the opening night.

W. D. KLEINSCHMIDT, Secretary,
Gipsy Smith Meeting.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D. D.

Just arrived from a delightful trip to Virginia and Kentucky, about which more, a little later. This is to say that orders for my book, "The Modern Theory of the Bible," are coming in nicely, but I forgot to say that the price is $1.25, plus 10 cents postage, making the book cost by mail $1.35. I would like to be kept busy filling orders during the holidays. I am told my book is specially adapted to put into the hands of High School students, especially those who are studying science. Our young people are being taught Evolution, and we had better see to it that they get a right understanding of the subject. I think this book will help them to do it. So send on your orders. If you don't get your money's worth, and have the nerve to tell me so, I'll see that you get your money back.

NOTICE.

We are glad to be able to announce that the two charges left to be supplied in the Columbus District have been supplied. Rev. W. A. Langley is serving Mayhew and Sessums, and Rev. R. L. Myers, Mashulaville. We were very fortunate indeed in securing the services of these bright young men for these charges. Both the District and charges are to be congratulated.

THE WATCH-DOG OF ALEPPO.

It isn't only in the frozen regions of the Arctic Circle and the dangerous passes of the Alps that dogs are heroes. From Aleppo, Syria, comes the story of a watch-dog who, by his cleverness and devotion, saved the lives of a whole family of Armenian children when the city was besieged by the Turkish Nationalists last winter.

The story comes from Mr. George C. Doolittle, Director of Aleppo for the Near East Relief, which is operating among the destitute Armenians and Syrians of Asia Minor. His letter, just received at the New York headquarters of the organization, reads as follows:

"Old Bill, one of the two large watch dogs of the Aleppo garage, and faithful as large, has become a distributor of general relief. Some time ago Sa'id, our night watchman, father of a large and increasing family, had come to the end of his provisions and knew not where he should procure the next meal. That evening Bill stalked into the yard and laid at the feet of the watchman a somewhat battered but very welcome tin of meat. Where he found it nobody knows, probably at a nearby camp. But his contribution was the saving of the day for Sa'id's family, and since then Bill has been elected to the staff of the Near East Relief, honorary but very active member."

THEY SANG A HYMN.

"They sung a hymn?" but rather say
They let the poor hymn die away.

They did not lift the hymn along
On voices eager, glad and strong;

They caught it up, a weary load,
And dragged it on the dusty road.

They let it drop awhile, and then,
Wheezing, they took it up again.

Thus toiled they on till, out of breath,
The poor hymn died a natural death.

"The hymn was sung?" Ah, phrase nift!
They killed the hymn and buried it!

THE SACREDNESS OF LIFE.

Eternal God, who committest to us the swift and solemn trust of life, since we know not what a day may bring forth, but only that the hour for serving thee is always present, may we wake to the instant claims of thy holy will; not waiting for to-morrow, but yielding to-day. Lay to rest, by the persuasion of thy Spirit, the resistance of our passion, indolence or fear. Consecrate with thy presence the way our feet may go; and the humblest work will shine and the roughest places be made plain. Lift us above unrighteous anger and mistrust into faith and hope and charity by a simple and steadfast reliance on thy sure will. In all things draw us to the mind of Christ, that thy lost image may be traced again and thou mayest own us as at one with him and thee. Amen.—James Martineau.

THE FOOTPATH TO PEACE.

To be glad of life, because it gives you the chance to love and to work and to play and to look up at the stars; to be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness, and to fear nothing except cowardice; to be governed by your admirations rather than by your disgusts; to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners; to think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends, and every day of Christ; and to spend as much time as you can, with body and spirit, in God's out-of-doors—these are little guide-posts on the footpath to peace.—Dr. Henry Van Dyke.

Carefulness is generated by interest in one's job, by determination to make good, by ambition to master the work in hand and to earn promotion.—Selected.

Mrs. LAVENIA COKER SMITH was born October 17, 1874, and departed this life October 25, 1921. She joined the Missionary Baptist Church in early life and lived a consistent member of same until the end. On account of ill health of a widowed mother, Lavenia turned down several worthy opportunities of companionship, until about eighteen months before her death. She was married April 18, 1920. She was an ideal motherly companion, and was one of the noblest and most sympathetic Christian characters I ever knew—always considering the welfare of others. Without any thought of self, she was never known to speak harshly of any one; if she could not speak in highest terms of any one, she would always hold her peace. I have seen her in company that would be talking about some one, and she just could not sit still until the conversation was changed. We wonder why she had to suffer so hard for more than three months; but the God that she loved and trusted knew best, and was too wise to make a mistake and too good to make an error. We must bow in humble submission to His will. ONE WHO LOVED HER.

The death of Mrs. W. A. McCORD, occurred at her home in Endville, October 4, 1921. She was born August 28, 1862, and married December 12, 1880. She professed faith in Christ thirty-nine years ago, and joined the Methodist Church at Bethel. She was indeed a true mother in Israel, being a faithful Christian all these years, a loving companion, a devoted mother, and a charitable friend and neighbor. She was dearly loved by her family and greatly respected and revered by

J. L. NABORS.

Sherman, Miss.

Dear is estimated the name of a friend. Lovely is the relation which cements congenial souls. But dearer still the amity, more intimate the connection, which unites our hands and hearts. How painful, then, the hour in which is dissolved an alliance so close and so affectionate. Alas! how forcibly do we feel this now! Death, regardless of those sweet engagements, those pleasing intercourses, and those joys which friends know, has suddenly summoned away, in the midst of her days and usefulness, Sister CLARISE YOUNG McCORD, daughter of Brother and Sister M. F. Young. She was born January 30, 1898, joined the Methodist Church at Elzie when 13 years old. She was married to Carl McCord, June 15, 1920, and departed this life December 9, 1921. We beheld her sun in its meridian and rejoiced in its brightness. It is now set: and the evening shades of existence have closed around her. Blessed be her rest, and soft and safe to her the mortal bed! Sweet be the opening flowers we plant around her grave, while we her memory cherish, her virtues initiate, her death deplore!

With bleeding hearts we sympathize with the disconsolate husband, the bereaved parents, brother, and afflicted friends. Their griefs are ours, for ours the loss they feel. But let us look forward, enlightened by the religion she enjoyed, to the brighter scene, when Clarice, who is now leveled by the stroke of death, shall be raised from the grave by the Master's Word, and be admitted to the privileges of the skies. Let us all remember that, "The generation of men are like the waves of the sea." In quick succession they follow each other to the coasts of death. Another, and another still succeeds, and presses on the shore; then ebbs and dries, to give place to the following wave. Thus are we wafted forward, now buoyed, perhaps, by hope; now sinking in despair; rising on the tide of prosperity, or overwhelmed with the billows of misfortune. Sometimes, when least expected, the storms gather, the winds arise, and "life's frail bubble bursts." Be cautioned then, nor trust to cloudless skies, to placid seas, or sleeping winds. Forget not there are hidden rocks. Guard, too, against the sudden blast. Be Faith your pilot: you will then be safely guided to the haven of eternal bliss.

"There may you bathe your weary soul
In seas of heavenly rest;
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across your peaceful breast!"

Her pastor;

J. R. MURFF.

RESOLUTIONS.

We, the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Coushatta, La., having lost by death a much loved and esteemed member of our church and official of the same, Brother S. T. ARMISTEAD, do hereby express our grief at his untimely passing.

Resolved, first, That we extend to his family our sincerest sympathy and share with them, in no small measure, the sorrow and loss incident to his departure to another life and earnestly pray the grace of the God whom he served may sustain them in their hour of trial and bereavement.

Second, That we mourn the loss of a friend and brother in the church of God, and shall treasure in the shrine of memory the deeds he wrought and the life he lived, as a source of inspiration and an incentive of a nobler character to those who come after him.

Third, That we bow in submission to the ways of God, knowing and trusting that "He doeth all things well," and feel now that earth is poorer and heaven is richer since our friend and brother has gone to his eternal home.

Signed by: R. P. Stayton, J. B. Howard, E. M. Campbell, J. W. Kent, C. E. Edgerton, Jr., A. M. Howard.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Galloway Memorial Gives Pageant.

During the Week of Prayer in November, the Girls' Auxillary to the Woman's Missionary Society of Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, under the able direction of the gifted and devoted leader, Mrs. Harley R. Shands, presented the pageant, "Christ in America," in the Sunday school room of the church. The cast of characters was as follows: Chinese, Bethany Swearingen; Japanese, Amanda Lowther; Hungarian, Elisabeth Crisler; Polish girl, J. D. Smith; Italian, Juanita Ferguson; Syrian, Mamie Lee Harris; Jewess, Natoma Campbell; Armenian, Cynthia Thompson; Korean, Aimee Shands; Indian, Emmy Lou Patton; Negro, Caroy Johnson; Mountain girl, Sydney Brame; Christian Standard Bearer, Laille Philip; American Flag Bearers, Sarah Buie and Harley Shands.

The young lady who was to impersonate Columbia was ill at the last moment and her place was filled by Mrs. Shands, who, draped in classic robes of white, a golden crown on her dark hair, holding aloft the flaming torch of liberty, received one by one the representatives of foreign lands and alien races, each clad in the picturesque costume of her country, and heard their touching pleas for more of the message of salvation through the religion of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In the finale, two tiny tots in white (Sarah Buie and Harley Shands) stood at attention in front of the brilliant group, with American flags crossed, while all impressively repeated in unison the pledge to the flag, after which the performance concluded with the chorus, "Publish Glad Tidings." The pageant was repeated before the Epworth League, Miss Willie Span taking the part of Columbia. The presentation teaches a lesson in a vivid and dramatic way, in regard to the obligation of Christians to carry the blessed story of Jesus and His love to the strangers within our gates, and to those of our own neglected native people, many of whom are hungering for that story. The lovely young girls who made up the cast, on this occasion, must have received inspiration as they gave it, and in admirably teaching a lesson surely their own hearts were stirred to a new sense of duty to others in a never-to-be-forgotten way.

"HARVEST DAY" AT MAGNOLIA, MISS.

Dear Mrs. Snelling: I am sending a little article for the Advocate that our readers may be in touch a little with the work we are doing here:

The women of the Missionary Society, instead of having their usual bazaar observed "Harvest Day" in the home of Mrs. E. W. Reid.

At the beginning of the year each member pledged to contribute some amount of money toward a fund which was to be made by her own personal work during the year.

A very interesting and impressive program was carried out, which was closed by calling the roll. Each member responded with her offering, telling how she had made it; and as she did so, she lighted a candle. After each member had responded, the offerings amounted to one hundred dollars which was added to the Society's treasury for local work.

Yours sincerely,

Mrs. G. T. HUBBARD.

MISSIONARY LITERATURE.

The Year Book For 1922.

You will be delighted with the new Year Books for Adults, Young People, and Juniors. Each member of each auxillary should have her own copy of the Year Book. The Young People's Program Material is put up in the form of Deputation Reports. This makes it almost necessary that each member of the society should have an individual copy of the Year Book in which to keep notes of the monthly meetings. The Juniors' Book of Little Journeys is a sheet of numbered pictures. On the monthly program page is a space for pasting the special picture which illustrates the study of that month. The use of the pictures and the Book of Little Journeys will add greatly to the Juniors' interest and enthusiasm, and this requires that each child have a book of his own.

All Year Books, price 6 cents. Order from Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb.

MISSIONARY PRAYER AND MEDITATION.

Missionary Prayer and Meditation takes the place of the Prayer Calendar in giving help for definite daily prayers for our missionaries and institutions. In addition to the Scripture readings and the listed subjects for prayer, the book contains beautiful thought and a prayer from some master-mind for each week of the year. It may be used for any current year. If you do not already own a copy of Missionary Prayer and Meditation, order at once, price 30c, from Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb.

You Would Fly Out Of Your Skin

Eczema Makes You Wish You Could

Your disease, which is sometimes called salt rheum, not only itches, but also burns, oozes, dries and scales over and over again. Sometimes it covers the whole body and causes intense suffering.

You have found that local applications have no lasting effect, and you want permanent relief.

You must thoroughly purify your blood or the eruption will continue to annoy, perhaps agonize you. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla. This blood-purifying medicine has been successfully used in thousands of cases.

To make and keep the bowels normally active, take Hood's Pills. They are gentle and thorough.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Annual Report of the Fidelia (Wesley) Bible Class for the Year Ending November, 1921, Tunica, Miss.

Dear Brother Carley: The inclosed annual report of the Fidelia Bible Class, of Tunica, Miss., has just been handed me, as Superintendent of Adult Bible Classes for the Conference. I am asking you to grant it space, not only because the excellence of the report deserves it, but as a model and example for other organized classes within the bounds of North Mississippi. What this one class has accomplished in a small Delta town, any Bible class of women may equal. Large classes in our larger towns should far surpass the record of the Fidelias. Yet up to the present writing, so far as reports have been sent into the Conference Superintendent, the Fidelias hold the banner record for 1921. I shall be glad to give place and publicity to the reports of any Bible classes which have wrought as worthily and as well as the Fidelias so soon as I receive them. Surely, many of our Adult and Y. P. classes are in line for a great year's work, and a fine report to the Federation of Wesley Bible Classes, next June.

The Fidelias held their annual election of officers at their monthly business-and-social meeting, on Tuesday night, Dec. 13. The following staff was unanimously elected for 1922: Mrs. Kathleen Wyatt Bankston, President; Mrs. W. A. Dacus, Vice President; Mrs. Gus Jaquess, Recording Secretary; Mrs. W. W. Martin, Treasurer; Mrs. John Hardy, Teacher.

Urging other Wesley Classes to send me their reports at the earliest date possible, I am, with every good wish and fervent prayers for the success of every class under my supervision,

Very Cordially,

MRS. J. M. WYATT,
Supt. Adult and Y. P. Bible Classes.

The Report.

This class was organized four years ago under the name of "Wesley Bible Class," with only nine members. It now has a membership of 40, and is a federated Bible class under the name of Fidelia Bible Class.

On the Centenary Fund, a $120 special was taken. This amount was to support a native teacher in Korea.

Thirteen dollars was donated to the Leper Fund.

The class supports an orphan girl in the Jackson Orphanage, sending two large boxes of clothing a year to her. Value of these boxes, $125.

There is a Home Department of the class with a membership of 20.

In August young "Bishop" Parks was presented with a "Kiddie-Coop." This young "Bishop" is better known as C. A. Parks, Jr., the infant son of Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Parks.

Help was given an Italian woman in distress by buying her a ticket from Tunica to Friar's Point.

Fifty calls were made during the year to sick persons and strangers; 4 trays were sent to a young man in jail, and 10 trays sent to sick persons; $23.25 worth of flowers were sent to the sick and bereaved.

Miscellaneous box sent to a new baby of one member.

One member of the class was sent to the Training School at Grenada, Miss. The member sent was the President of the class, and she also went to Junaluska, N. C., where she took a special course in Beginners and Primary work. The President is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, of Lula, Miss.; and the class also has the honor of having Mrs. Wyatt as an honorary member.

The class paid for folding doors between Sunday school rooms, the amount being $60.

Total receipts $345.69
Total expenditures 318.44

Balance $27.25

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots. Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is said that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion. Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

WEST END, LAUREL.

On the morning of December 13, taking my family in my car we drove across country to my new appointment, West End, Laurel, to which I was assigned at our Conference in Jackson. Without any delay on the road excepting a stop of about an hour at noon to eat our lunch, we arrived at West End parsonage in the afternoon and were given a cordial reception. Supper was provided for us, and when night came we discovered that the church, which stands upon the same lot with the parsonage, was lighted up and, upon investigation, we found that the people were gathering in the basement for some purpose. Later footsteps were heard upon the back porch and upon opening the door and looking out, we saw numbers of people approaching the parsonage, each having something in his hands or on his shoulders. When they were given admission to the parsonage, they filled our pantry with good things to eat, many things in sufficient quantity to last for several months.

For the past two Sundays, as I have entered my pulpit, I have been greeted with a representative congregation, both morning and night, which has listened attentively to the message of the gospel which I have tried to bring. The best of it all is, the various departments of church work are taking on new life and the people are manifesting with eagerness a desire to take a fresh start with the beginning of the new Conference year. The Leagues, both Junior and Senior, and the Sunday school are all showing a greater interest by the increasing attendance. In view of the disorganized conditions existing at the close of the last Conference year, the reaction of the people toward a spirit of co-operation with the pastor is something marvelous. This does not mean that all the problems have been solved, but it does mean that with the co-operation of the people they will be solved, and that we trust speedily. The prospects for the new year are encouraging. JOHN W. RAMSEY. West End, Laurel, Miss.

AN APPRECIATIVE PASTOR.

Dear Brother Carley: We had an unusually large crowd at our prayer service last night, a fine song service, a Scripture lesson and a talk on prayer by the pastor; and everybody seemed to enjoy the service very much. After the service one of the stewards rose and addressed the pastor, and said they wanted to see him privately in the Sunday school room. When we got there, MY, MY! A long table, prepared for the occasion, was piled up with good things for the preacher and his family—flour, sugar, rice, coffee, grits, canned goods in abundance, and all kinds of fruit. Such occasions as this make the preacher and his family happy. We feel that we are among an appreciative people. We pray God's richest blessings on every one who took part in this matter, and we pledge them our faithful and untiring service for 1922.

Yours in love.

GYPSY SMITH.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

The last time I met Gypsy Smith was in London. We were staying at the same hotel in Ludgate Hill. I expect to see him altered physically, but know that he will have the same message told in the same quiet, earnest manner with a heart full of love for sinners.

Gypsy Smith, or, to give his real name, Rodney Smith, son of Cornelius Smith and Mary Welch (her maiden name), was born near Epping Forest (not far from London), on March 31, 1860, the fourth child, two sisters and one brother born previously, and two sisters being born afterwards.

Eighty out of a hundred Gypsies have Bible names; yet the Gypsies have no Bible. His uncle was called Bartholomew, and he gave Scriptural names to his twelve children—Naomi, Samson, Delilah, Elijah, and the like. The Gypsies care little for religion and know nothing really of God and the Bible, yet they always care to get their babies christened by the nearest clergyman, an event which is one of interest to the "gorgios" (people who are not Gypsies), who come to see the Gypsy baby christened and bring presents.

Sunday to the Gypsies is a real rest day. Rodney's father hated to be compelled to strike his tent on a Sunday. He would go a mile on Saturday to get a bucket of water so that he should not have to travel for it on Sunday. Wood for Sunday was collected on Saturday. Whistling a song tune was forbidden on Sunday. And at the same time it was the only day on which they got a properly cooked midday meal.

The sweetheating of a Gypsy couple is a "long engagement." Divorce is unknown, nor is there ever a breach of promise, for Gypsy sweethearts cannot write letters. The marriage ceremony is the same as that which was observed at the nuptials of Rebekah and Isaac. Isaac brought Rebekah into his tent. When a Gypsy gets converted, one of the first things about which he is anxious is this defective marriage ceremonial, and he wants it made legal. The husbands make the baskets, clothes pegs, tinware, and the wives do the selling. Gypsies buy only what they cannot find.

Gypsy Smith's first religious impressions came through the death of his mother. Some of the children caught smallpox; the wagon was isolated, but the mother's love and anxiety caused her to go too near to the wagon, and she, too, was stricken. The Gypsies believe in God and that He is good and merciful. Mother knew she was dying, and her husband asked her, "Do you try to pray, dear?" "Yes," she said, "I am trying... but something seems to whisper 'There is no mercy for you.'" Her husband had been in prison some time before for three months on a false charge, and he had heard something about God. He told his wife Christ died for sinners; He would forgive her. He was her Saviour. Whilst the husband was outside, weeping, she suddenly burst into singing.

"I have a Father in the promised land; My God calls me, I must go To meet him in the promised land."

Gypsy's father rushed into the room and said, "Polly, where did you learn that song, my dear?" She said: "Cornelius, I heard it when I was a little girl. One Sunday my father's tents were pitched on a village green, and seeing the young people and others going into a school or chapel, I followed them in and they sang those words." It must have been twenty years ago; she had forgotten them all these years, but they came back to her in the moments of intense seeking after God.

YOU NEEDN'T keep on feeling distressed after eating, nor belching, nor experiencing nausea between meals. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures dyspepsia—it strengthens the stomach and other digestive organs for the proper performance of their functions. Take Hood's—Adv.

BACK FROM CONFERENCE.

Dear Brother Carley: We were returned to Mayersville charge, and we are glad. And why not be glad when the good people here expressed their appreciation of our services in so many ways?

Just before we left for Conference, the ladies presented wife with a nice suit and coat, and the brethren not to be beaten by the ladies, presented me with the money to buy myself a nice suit, hat, and overcoat, and my good Jewish friend presented me a nice pair of shoes. And now, amid the hearty handshaking since our return, our big-hearted sheriff presents wife and me with a nice pair of shoes each. So we are glad, not because of the money value alone, but for the friendship and good fellowship expressed.

Our earnest prayer is that we may be more useful, as well as happier in the Lord's work here.

Brother Carley, you are giving us a really good paper, and we want to keep it more than ever. The Lord bless you and your helpers.

M. J. MILLER.

Makes a Family Supply of Cough Remedy.

Really better than ready-made cough syrups, and saves about $2. Easily and quickly prepared.

If you combine the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you probably could not get as much real curative power as there is in this simple home made cough syrup, which is easily prepared in a few minutes.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with syrup, using either plain granulated sugar syrup, clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, as desired. The result is a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and Syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes so gently and easily that it is really astonishing.

A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations to break severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

FROM DENHAM SPRINGS, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: In coming to Denham Springs charge, I find the people ready to take hold with their new pastor for improvement in every line possible. We have begun a movement to establish the Duplex envelope system on the entire charge, and hope to meet all obligations by this systematic form of church financing. Graded and graveled roads are being builded on the charge and this will help to develop the work.

Your brother,
CLAUDE H. MAYO.

THINKING OF THE SUPERANNUATES.

(One of the most gracious things we have heard of recently is the action of the Centenary Church, McComb, Miss., in sending Christmas greetings to the superannuate members of the Mississippi Conference. The sentiment expressed in the letter is as beautiful as it is touching.—Editor.)

"Dear Brother: You are sometimes spoken of as the 'forgotten man,' but we hope that you do not feel that way. We could not forget you for your work's sake. We remember that your presence and prayers blessed the happy marriage vows of our parents; that you consecrated us to God through baptism; that your devoted life and faithful gospel messages have brought us to know your Savior. How could we forget you?

"It may be that you could be called the 'neglected man.' In the rush of modern life so many things insist on claiming our attention that we overlook the things that are less clamorous, although they are the more highly prized by us. We regret that we do not meet you as often as in other days, but we realize that our lives are richer through our associations with you during the days that can not return.

"Our church is sending in this letter a check for one dollar as a Christmas Gift, and regrets that it could not multiply this amount by one hundred. Its members wish for you three hundred and sixty-five bright, happy, and useful days during 1922.

"Let us ask that you give Centenary Church the benefit of your earnest and faithful prayers to the end that a gracious revival may come to its membership.

"Wishing for you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, and all the blessings your life of faithfulness deserves, we are,

Fraternally,
"CENTENARY CHURCH,
"MCComb, MISS."

CORNER STONE LAYING OF CENTRAL CHURCH, COLUMBUS, MISS.

(We take the following account of the corner stone laying of the Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., from the Columbus Dispatch of December 21.—Editor.)

With solemn and impressive services, and in the presence of a large congregation, the corner stone of Central Methodist Episcopal Church, South, corner College and Twelfth Streets, was laid last Sunday afternoon by Bishop William B. Murrah, of Memphis. Bishop Murrah is a wonderful orator, and his address on this occasion was a masterpiece. He spoke for approximately thirty minutes and was heard with profound interest and respectful attention.

The corner stone ceremony, which began at 2:30 o'clock, was opened with congregational singing. With Mrs. G. W. Carson as accompanist, all joined in singing, "How Firm a Foundation," which was followed by the prayer of consecration by Bishop Murrah.

Then the Rev. B. P. Jacob, of Winona, read a lesson from the Bible, after which the pastor of Central Church, the Rev. Thomas E. Gregory, deposited the several articles that were to repose beneath the edifice for an indefinite period, longer, perhaps, than any of us shall live. The articles were: A copy of the Holy Bible that was used by Mrs. J. S. Boucher, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. A. P. Leech, together with photographs of Brother and Sister Leech; a copy of the Southern Methodist Discipline, a copy of the Southern Methodist Hymnal, and a copy of the minutes of the North Mississippi Conference held at Charleston, November, 1920; a list of the charter members of the Second Methodist Church, together with a list of the pastors and presiding elders of the church; a copy, each of the Nashville Advocate, the New Orleans Christian Advocate (organs of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South), a copy of the Columbus Dispatch, and a copy of the Columbus Commercial, both dated December 18, 1921; a Centennial program and a Centennial medallion; the names of the superintendent, building foreman and brick masons in charge of the erection of the edifice.

When all of these articles had been deposited in the strong copper box, the congregation joined in singing, "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord," at the conclusion of which Bishop Murrah delivered his address. Following this, the Doxology was sung and Bishop Murrah pronounced the Apostolic benediction.

The ceremony was very enjoyable as well as interesting, and all who were present felt that their time was profitably spent.

The workmen are busy every day on the construction of the church and it is easy to see that, when completed, the house of worship of the Central Methodist congregation will be one of the handsomest church buildings in the South. It will be red pressed brick, two stories and basement, with four immense pillars in front supporting the roof of a large portico. It is fashioned after the Grecian style of architecture, and will be a distinct ornament to the city.

Of course, the credit for the erection of this splendid building is due to the entire membership of Central Church, but the Rev. Thomas E. Gregory must be given a liberal share of the praise, inasmuch as it was first dreamed and imagined and planned by him.

The Corner Stone.

The corner stone, which is of gray marble, came from the establishment of Mr. T. A. McGahey, of Columbus. On the face of the slab toward the college appear the words, "Central M. E. Church, South, December 18, 1921." On the face of the slab toward Twelfth Street are the names of the building committee, as follows:

"Building Committee: G. T. Blackburn, Chairman; T. A. McGahey, Treasurer; J. T. Clardy, Secretary; J. T. Quinnelly, J. S. Boucher, C. W. Golding, T. P. Hammond, J. S. Cook, E. D. Ervin, A. T. McIlwain, Presiding Elder; T. E. Gregory, Pastor in Charge."

It is earnestly hoped that the church will soon be completed and paid for, that it may be dedicated by some great preacher who will draw many souls to the foot of the Cross, and that through the years that lie out in the future like some great rolling sea, it may ever be a beacon to guide men and women and children into a haven of perfect peace and security from the storms that are continually breaking the shores of time.
